PROCEEDINGS AND DEBATES OF THE 95th CONGRESS, SECOND SESSION

SENATE—Wednesday, July 21, 1978

(Legislative day of Wednesday, May 17, 1978)

The Senate met at 10 a.m., on the expiration of the recess, and was called to order by Hon. KANEASTER HODGES, JR., a Senator from the State of Arkansas.

PRAYER

Let us pray.

Almighty God, our heavenly Father, who dost guide and govern the minds and hearts of men, make us deeply conscious of Thy presence as once more we take up the task committed to us. To the guidance of Thy higher wisdom we commend our Nation. Rule in the hearts of Thy servants the President, the Vice President, the Members of this body and all others in authority, that they, knowing whose ministers they are, may above all things seek Thy honor and glory. Help us to move forward Thy kingdom neither too fast nor too slow, but according to the timetable of Thy providence. May the sense of duty and the spirit of service enable us to do what we ought to do. And may we walk in the steps of Him, who with fewest hours finished the divinest work.

We pray in His holy name. Amen.

APPOINTMENT OF ACTING PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will please read a communication to the Senate from the President pro tempore (Mr. EASTLAND).

The legislative clerk read the following letter:

U.S. SENATE,
PRESIDENT PRO TEMPORE,
Washington, D.C., July 21, 1978.

To the Senate:

Under the provisions of rule I, section 3, of the Standing Rules of the Senate, I hereby appoint the Honorable KANEASTER HODGES, JR., a Senator from the State of Arkansas, to perform the duties of the Chair.

JAMES O. EASTLAND,

Mr. HODGES thereupon assumed the chair as Acting President pro tempore.

RECOGNITION OF LEADERSHIP

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator from West Virginia is recognized.

THE JOURNAL

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Journal of the proceedings be approved to date.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the leaders or their designees have 5 minutes this morning.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PROPOSED LIFTING OF ARMS EMBARGO ON TURKEY

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, during an appearance on "Face the Nation" on Sunday, in discussing the proposed lifting of the arms embargo on Turkey, I commended the Turks for their recent flexibility on Cyprus, I also stated that they could and should do more. Specifically, I called upon Turkey to turn over the important seaside city of Varosha to United Nations administration so that 35,000 Greek refugees could begin returning to their homes and businesses in coming weeks.

I was informed yesterday that the Turkish Cypriots have agreed to the creation of an interim administration for the city of Varosha, under the United Nations, as soon as the negotiations between the Greek and Turkish communities are resumed. United Nations administration of Varosha, which has been under Turkish control since August 1974, would mean that one of the key issues holding up a Cyprus solution is closer to resolution.

Yesterday's announcement, along with other steps taken by Turkey in recent months—including new constitutional and territorial proposals; withdrawals of troops; and summit meetings with the Greek Prime Minister—are steps in the right direction toward solving a problem of great concern to all of us in the Senate. This latest action demonstrates a positive attitude and I hope sets the tone for future actions by the Turks and the Greeks.

TEN WEEKS UNTIL OCTOBER 7

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, following the completion of business today, there remain only 51 scheduled working days until October 7. I mention October 7 simply because that is 1 month before November 7, the date of the election.

I am not setting that as a target date, but in looking toward adjournment of the Senate, at least we could consider October 7 as being a reasonable date, hopefully, because that would allow 1 month then for the Senators and the Members of the House to campaign prior to the election date.

Now, that does not include Saturdays, nor does it include the scheduled Labor Day nonlegislative day period.

In the 10 weeks remaining, we must complete action on more than a score of major authorization bills, 11 appropriation bills, the energy conferences, the energy tax conference, the second concurrent budget resolution, tax cut legislation, and other major legislation.

Obviously, meeting this schedule may require late sessions and may require some Saturday sessions if we are to achieve a record of which we all may be proud as Members of the 95th Congress and avoid the necessity of returning after the elections to complete work on matters of vital national concern.

I do not want to anticipate such an event, but it must be recognized as a possibility. I am definitely against coming back after the election. But, first of all, we have to do our work and our work encompasses, certainly, all or most all of the legislation I have made reference to.

So unless we can complete that work, I think it would necessitate returning after the elections. I believe we all recognize our responsibilities as legislators to have the important work facing the Senate completed when we adjourn for the year.

Now, achieving the adjournment date of October 7, if we can do it, will require the cooperation of all Members in conserving the time of the Senate in our deliberations, a willingness to enter into time agreements on legislation wherever possible, and the preparedness of the committees and the managers of the bills to take the floor on short notice when their priority legislation is called up.

Mr. President, on behalf of the leadership, I want to express appreciation for the cooperation that has been given to the leadership by the Members during this session. I want to express the hope that with mutual effort we will be able to complete our work and not have to return after the election and have a record of which we can all be proud.

Mr. TOWER addressed the Chair.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The acting minority leader, the Senator from Texas.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I believe, of course, that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the distinguished minority leader, has shown every disposition to be cooperative with the Democratic leadership in moving things along. I think that he reflects the feeling of the minority Members of the Senate that we should do our business expeditiously. It is my view that with proper ordering of priorities, that is to say, turning our attention to those things that are most important and most urgent, I believe that this side of the aisle will certainly be prepared to cooperate in every way, to act expeditiously to get behind us our vital business by the 7th of October.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. TOWER. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I have asked the distinguished Senator to yield because I do want to express my appreciation to the distinguished minority leader (Mr. BAKER), and the minority leadership and the members of the minority, for the fine cooperation that has been accorded the majority leader during this session. I certainly have no complaints along that line. The cooperation has been splendid. It has been excellent on my side of the aisle, as well.

I want to take the occasion to thank not only my own Members on this side of the aisle, but also the leadership and the Members on the other side of the aisle.

But I took the floor today to indicate in a general broad-brush fashion the kind of workload that is still ahead of us, the fact that the time frame is becoming more restrictive as we go along, and to express the hope that we can all work together and cooperate and work hard in the effort to complete our work, not have to come back after the election, and be able to present to the people of this country a record on the part of the Congress—when I say the Congress, that includes both parties, the joint leadership—a record of which we can all be proud.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I meant what I was saying earlier about the work schedule, and I ask that the remarks I am about to make be included with those earlier remarks.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues on both sides of the aisle to plan on votes on Fridays from here on out and to plan their schedules on the basis that we will have plenty of work to do on Fridays. With the kind of workload that we have ahead of us, I hope Senators will not, any more than they absolutely have to, schedule themselves away from the city on Fridays from here on out until we adjourn.

A good many Senators are absent today, but we are going to have some rollcalls, and I issue this friendly word of caution so that Senators will not be caught unaware: From here on Fridays are going to be heavy workdays, as will Mondays, Tuesdays, Wednesdays, and Thursdays, and as I have already indicated, we may have to come in on some Saturdays, and I especially say that after this Saturday, after tomorrow, Senators should be at least aware of the possibility of Saturday sessions beginning next Saturday, a week from tomorrow. I am not saying there will be a session next Saturday, a week from tomorrow, but I am saying that beginning next Saturday, a week from tomorrow, we may have to start coming in because our first responsibility is to do our job, do our work, and to do it well.

Mr. President, I yield the floor.

ORDER OF BUSINESS

Mr. GOLDWATER. Will the Senator yield to me?

Mr. TOWER. I yield to the Senator.

WILDCAT STRIKE ON METRO SYSTEM

Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, like most other Washingtonians, I experienced considerable difficulty getting to work today largely because of the wildcat strike of workers on the Metro system. And thanks only to an 11th-hour agreement reached last night, am I now reasonably assured that my mail will be delivered and that postal workers will not strike. But in Philadelphia, the garbage still piles up and other cities around the country are without adequate fire and police protection because public employees have decided to take the safety of the public into their own hands and limit according to their own selfish wishes.

Mr. President, Calvin Coolidge once commented that the people had no right to strike against themselves. What he meant was that men and women who serve the public have a special responsibility and that responsibility is to make sure that their services are not interrupted. As inflation continues to mount under the ridiculous policies of this administration, I can foresee that we are headed for more and more trouble along these lines. Here in the District of Columbia, not only has this ridiculous walkout of the Metro workers caused monumental inconvenience and discomfort to thousands of people in the capital of the free world, but it has contributed to air pollution and become a health hazard as well as a nuisance.

Mr. President, I believe it is time for Government officials and union leaders to understand the public will not forever go on putting up with inconveniences and hardships engineered by the very people their taxes pay to work. I believe it is time for a crackdown on Government workers who refuse to acknowledge their responsibility to the public and to the people who pay them and I believe this requires some show of leadership on the part of Government officials and the Congress.

SPECIAL ORDER

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. Under the previous order, the Senator from North Carolina is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

THE SENATE'S ROLE IN U.S. POLICY TOWARD TAIWAN

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I have asked for this time this morning to deal with a subject about which I feel very strongly. I want to voice my views before actions may be taken and it will be too late for me to express my views, except through my vote on the floor of the Senate.

Mr. President, many Members of the U.S. Senate, including myself, have great affection for the people of the Republic of China and are determined that this island republic, for so long strongly allied with the United States, shall survive as a free and democratic nation. Consequently, we would view with great concern any move on the part of this administration, or any other, to impair our continuing relationship with the Republic of China and our mutual defense treaty without prior consultation with the Senate. I emphasize "without prior consultation with the Senate."

I, frankly, have been disturbed lately by the manner in which we have made overtures to the People's Republic of China. I hasten to point out that I do not oppose improving our relationship with the Communist mainland government. It is in the interest of world peace and security in Asia that we do so and do so as quickly as possible. I recognize this fact, and I think that, when all is said and done, our friends in the government of the Republic of China do, also.

But we should be realistic in approaching the whole question of "normalization" and understand why it is that at this point the People's Republic of China desires to strengthen its ties with us. As former Under Secretary of State George Ball said in an August 24, 1977, column for the New York Times:

> Throughout history our views about China have been distorted by fantasy. The Peking Government does not love us for the color of our eyes, nor would it respect us for cravenly yielding to its wishes; it is interested in conducting limited diplomatic business with us for one reason only—that we are an enemy of its enemy, the Soviet Union.

I do not purport to be a seer, and I have no way of knowing what the intentions of the leadership of the People's Republic of China are concerning the future of Taiwan. But I have observed, I think, that the strident militancy of past years has diminished as the mainland government has become more concerned about its relationship with the Soviet Union and exhibited increasing fear of armed confrontation with the Soviets. I do not discount the continuing threat of the People's Republic of China to the small island nation of Taiwan and would not argue for a moment that the guard of the Taiwanese should be lowered. It should not be. But, at the same time, we may well have come to a time in the history of this Asian area when it is of greater advantage to the People's Republic of China to have open and apparent American presence in the area in order to maintain a balance of power—in Japan, in the Philippines, and in Taiwan—than to continue sabre rattling across the Straits of Formosa.

I, for one, have always believed that the United States eventually could establish increased ties with the mainland without forfeiting its long-standing and close relationship with the Republic of China. On the other hand, the People's Republic for a while, I think, thought that we would rush headlong into an accommodation with them, to the detriment of the Government of Taiwan. And it has appeared from time to time that we have been headed in that direction.

I pause here to caution the members of the administration, and officials of the State Department in particular, against this course of action, for, in my opinion, the Senate will not consent to it and the American public will not tolerate it. This courtship of the mainland may be the ultimate romance for some members of the American diplomatic community, but the affection of the American public rests with the people of Taiwan; and, in the end, votes taken in the U.S. Senate will reflect that affection.

I have been a steady friend of the people of Taiwan for a long time. I did military service there for a period of time in 1972. I observed then the friendship of that nation for our people. I observed the relationship of that nation during the Vietnamese war, when they offered every assistance they possibly could to the Americans. While some of our so-called friends in the Asian area were refusing to permit our bombers to use their bases, and while Japan would not permit us even to land B–52 bombers at Okinawa for the purpose of getting them off Guam and away from a typhoon, the Taiwanese were welcoming the Americans and even were operating a repair base for us.

I do not believe that I compromise my friendship with the Taiwanese, however, by suggesting at this time that the United States can maintain effective relationships with both the Republic of China and the People's Republic of China. I know that mainland leaders in the past have said that it must be all or nothing. I reject outright that notion and say that if this is the way it must be, we are wasting our time and money in paying court to the People's Republic.

The United States is great enough to have as friends two peoples of divergent political and economic philosophies and historic hostilities. One nation has no right to demand that friendship with it be to the excluson of friendship with another, especially where that friendship is close and warm and formalized in a mutual defense treaty which we signed. In my opinion, we as a nation would be diminished in the eyes of the People's Republic of China if we acceded to this demand, and they would feel that having once bullied and manipulated us, they could continue to do so at will.

What would the people of Taiwan think? They would rightly perceive that their friendship had been betrayed and that a sure and certain relationship with them had been sacrificed by this nation for an unsure and tenuous relationship with their hostile neighbor. They would see, as we could not, that the favor of the United States had been won with trifles and they had been betrayed in deepest consequence. Humiliated and crippled in the world community, these proud people would see that they had chosen in vain to cast their national lot on the side of democracy and free enterprise and their scorn would stand as a sign to the world that friendship with the United States is meaningless.

I suggest, as a firm friend of the Republic of China, that perhaps it is time that representatives of the People's Republic of China and Taiwan seek an opportunity to discuss informally, but face to face the differences which create tensions between them. There has been some indication that mainland leaders are willing to do so; and, if that is the case, I think it would be a mistake for Taiwan to refuse. There is much to gain.

I have been told that the leaders of the Republic of China fear the domestic political consequences of talking with representatives of the People's Republic. Supposedly, they feel that citizens of Taiwan will not stand for any talk of compromise between the two governments. Frankly, I feel that these fears, if in fact they exist, have been exaggerated and that the people of Taiwan might actually welcome some break in the standoff which has existed for these last many years. If it takes a period of "public education" to get the citizenry prepared for such talks, then I think the Government should proceed to prepare its people for eventual discussions with mainland leaders.

But in order for such talks to be effective, even at the most informal level, the leaders of Taiwan must have some assurances that the United States is firm in its resolve not to sacrifice their national interest in conversations between our Nation and the People's Republic. For, as long as there is expectation on the mainland that the Government of the United States eventually will accede to their demands in "normalizing" relationships, they will never deal in good faith with the people of Taiwan. I, again, make this suggestion as a friend, and hope that the Government of Taiwan will give serious attention to its merits.

I conclude by saying that I think it is clear that the Members of the U.S. Senate are deeply concerned about the future of the people and the Government of Taiwan and want to make sure that the course which is steered by this Nation in its dealings with leaders of the Republic of China and the People's Republic of China is thoughtful, sure, deliberate, and respects our duties and obligations under the mutual defense treaty. We are requesting that proposed policy changes affecting the continuation in force of the treaty be submitted to the Senate for prior consultation, and I do not believe that is too much to ask.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, does the distinguished Senator have any time remaining?

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The Senator has 5 minutes remaining.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield me 5 minutes?

Mr. MORGAN. I am delighted to yield 5 minutes to the majority leader.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the distinguished Senator.

RHODE ISLAND INDIAN CLAIMS SETTLEMENT ACT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar No. 902, which has been cleared on both sides and which is of interest to both Mr. PELL and Mr. CHAFEE.

The ACTING PRESIDENT pro tempore. The bill will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3153) to settle Indian land claims within the State of Rhode Island and Providence Plantations, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Rhode Island Indian Claims Settlement Act".

CONGRESSIONAL FINDINGS AND DECLARATION OF POLICY

SEC. 2. Congress finds and declares that—

(a) there are pending before the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island two consolidated actions that involve Indian claims to certain public and private lands within the town of Charlestown, Rhode Island;

(b) the pendency of these lawsuits has resulted in severe economic hardships for the residents of the town of Charlestown by clouding the titles to much of the land in the town, including lands not involved in the lawsuits;

(c) the Congress shares with the State of Rhode Island and the parties to the lawsuits a desire to remove all clouds on titles resulting from such Indian land claims within the State of Rhode Island; and

(d) the parties to the lawsuits and others interested in the settlement of Indian land claims within the State of Rhode Island have executed a Settlement Agreement which requires implementing legislation by the Congress of the United States and the legislature of the State of Rhode Island.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 3. For the purposes of this Act, the term—

(a) "Indian Corporation" means the Rhode Island nonbusiness corporation known as the "Narragansett Tribe of Indians";

(b) "land or natural resources" means any real property or natural resources, or any interest in or right involving any real property or natural resource, including but not limited to minerals and mineral rights, timber and timber rights, water and water rights, and rights to hunt and fish;

(c) "lawsuits" means the actions entitled "Narragansett Tribe of Indians v. Southern Rhode Island Land Development Co. et al., C.A. No. 75–0006 (D.R.I.) and Narragansett Tribe of Indians v. Rhode Island Director of Environmental Management, C.A. No. 75–0005 (D.R.I.)";

(d) "private settlement lands" means approximately 900 acres of privately held land outlined in red on the map marked "exhibit A" attached to the Settlement Agreement that are to be acquired by the Secretary from certain private landowners pursuant to sections 5 and 8 of this Act;

(e) "public settlement lands" means the lands described in paragraph 2 of the Settlement Agreement that are to be conveyed by the State of Rhode Island to the State Corporation pursuant to legislation as described in section 7 of this Act;

(f) "settlement lands" means those lands defined in subsections (d) and (e) of this section;

(g) "Secretary" means the Secretary of the Interior;

(h) "Settlement Agreement" means the document entitled "Joint Memorandum of Understanding Concerning Settlement of the Rhode Island Indian Land Claims", executed as of February 28, 1978, by representatives of the State of Rhode Island, of the town of Charlestown, and of the parties to the lawsuits, as filed with the Secretary of State of the State of Rhode Island;

(i) "State Corporation" means the corporation created or to be created by legislation enacted by the State of Rhode Island as described in section 7 of this Act; and

(j) "transfer" includes, but is not limited to, any sale, grant, lease, allotment, partition, or conveyance, any transaction the purpose of which was to effect a sale, grant, lease, allotment, partition, or conveyance, or any event or events that resulted in a change of possession or control of land or natural resources.

RHODE ISLAND INDIAN CLAIMS SETTLEMENT FUND

SEC. 4. There is hereby established in the United States Treasury a fund to be known as the Rhode Island Indian Claims Settlement Fund into which $3,500,000 shall be deposited following the appropriations authorized by section 11 of this Act.

OPTION AGREEMENTS TO PURCHASE PRIVATE SETTLEMENT LANDS

SEC. 5. (a) The Secretary shall accept assignment of reasonable two-year option agreements negotiated by the Governor of the State of Rhode Island or his designee for the purchase of the private settlement lands, provided that the terms and conditions specified in such options are reasonable and that the total price for the acquisition of such lands, including reasonable costs of acquisition, will not exceed the amount specified in section 4. If the Secretary does not determine that any such option agreement is unreasonable within sixty days of its submission, the Secretary will be deemed to have accepted assignment of the option.

(b) Payment for any option entered into pursuant to subsection (a) shall be in the amount of 5 per centum of the fair market value of the land or natural resources as of the date of the agreement and shall be paid from the fund established by section 4 of this Act.

(c) The total amount of the option fees paid pursuant to subsection (b) shall not exceed $175,000.

(d) The option fee for each option agreement shall be applied to the agreed purchase price in the agreement if the purchase of the defendant's land or natural resources is completed in accordance with the terms of the option agreement.

(e) The payment for each option may be retained by the party granting the option if the property transfer contemplated by the option agreement is not completed in accordance with the terms of the option agreement.

APPROVAL OF PRIOR TRANSFERS AND EXTINGUISHMENT OF CLAIMS AND ABORIGINAL TITLE INVOLVING THE NARRAGANSETT TRIBE AND THE TOWN OF CHARLESTOWN, RHODE ISLAND

SEC. 6. If the Secretary finds that the State of Rhode Island has satisfied the conditions set forth in section 7 of this Act, he shall publish such finding in the Federal Register and upon such publication—

(a) any transfer of land or natural resources located anywhere within the United States from, by, or on behalf of the Indian Corporation or any other entity presently or at any time in the past known as the Narragansett Tribe of Indians, or any predecessor or successor in interest, member or stockholder thereof, and any transfer of land or natural resources located anywhere within the town of Charlestown, Rhode Island, by, from, or on behalf of any Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians, including but not limited to a transfer pursuant to any statute of any State, shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with the Constitution and all laws of the United States that are specifically applicable to transfers of land or natural resources from, by, or on behalf of any Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians (including but not limited to the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1790, Act of August 4, 1790, Ch. 33, Sec. 4, 1 Stat. 138, and all amendments thereto and all subsequent versions thereof), and Congress does hereby approve any such transfer effective as of the date of said transfer;

(b) to the extent that any transfer of land or natural resources described in subsection (a) may involve land or natural resources to which the Indian Corporation or any other entity presently or at any time in the past known as the Narragansett Tribe of Indians, or any predecessor or successor in interest, member or stockholder thereof, or any other Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians, had aboriginal title, subsection (a) shall be regarded as an extinguishment of such aboriginal title as of the date of said transfer; and

(c) by virtue of the approval of a transfer of land or natural resources effected by this section, or an extinguishment of aboriginal title effected thereby, all claims against the United States, any State or subdivision thereof, or any other person or entity, by the Indian Corporation or any other entity presently or at any time in the past known as the Narragansett Tribe of Indians, or any predecessor successor in interest, member or stockholder thereof, or any other Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians, arising subsequent to the transfer and based upon any interest in or right involving such land or natural resources (including but not limited to claims for trespass damages or claims for use and occupancy) shall be regarded as extinguished as of the date of the transfer;

(d) any Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians (other than the Indian Corporation or any other entity presently or at any time in the past known as the Narragansett Tribe of Indians, or any predecessor or successor in interest, member or stockholder thereof) whose transfer of land or natural resources was approved or whose aboriginal title or claims were extinguished by subsection (a), (b), or (c) of this section may, within a period of one hundred and eighty days after publication of the Secretary's findings pursuant to section 6 of this Act, bring an action against the State Corporation in lieu of an action against any other person against whom a cause of action may have existed in the absence of this section. In any such action, the remedy shall be limited to a right of possession of the settlement lands.

FINDINGS BY THE SECRETARY

SEC. 7. Section 6 of this Act shall not take effect until the Secretary finds—

(a) that the State of Rhode Island has enacted legislation creating or authorizing the creation of a State-chartered corporation satisfying the following criteria:

(1) the corporation shall be authorized to acquire, perpetually manage and hold the settlement lands;

(2) the corporation shall be controlled by a board of directors, the majority of the members of which shall be, selected by the Indian Corporation or its successor, and the remaining members of which shall be selected by the State of Rhode Island; and

(3) the corporation shall be authorized, after consultation with appropriate State officials, to establish its own regulations concerning hunting and fishing on the settlement lands, which need not comply with regulations of the State of Rhode Island but which shall establish minimum standards for the safety of persons and protection of wildlife and fish stock; and

(b) that the State of Rhode Island has enacted legislation authorizing the conveyance to the State Corporation of land and natural resources that substantially conform to the public settlement lands as described in paragraph 2 of the Settlement Agreement.

PURCHASE AND TRANSFER OF PRIVATE SETTLEMENT LANDS

SEC. 8. (a) When the Secretary determines that the State Corporation described in section 7(a) has been created and will accept the settlement lands, the Secretary shall exercise within sixty days the options entered into pursuant to section 5 of this Act and assign the private settlement lands thereby purchased to the State Corporation.

(b) Any moneys remaining in the fund established by section 4 of this Act after the purchases described in subsection (a) shall be returned to the general Treasury of the United States.

(c) Upon the discharge of the Secretary's duties under sections 5, 6, 7 and 8 of this Act, the United States shall have no further duties or liabilities under the Act with respect to the Indian Corporation or its successor, the State Corporation, or the settlement lands: Provided, however, That if the Secretary subsequently acknowledges the existence of the Narragansett Tribe of Indians, then the settlement lands may not be sold, granted, or otherwise conveyed or leased to anyone other than the Indian Corporation, and no such disposition of the settlement lands shall be of any validity in law or equity, unless the same is approved by the Secretary pursuant to regulations adopted by him for that purpose: Provided, however, That nothing in this Act shall affect or otherwise impair the ability of the State Corporation to grant or otherwise convey (including any involuntary conveyance by means of eminent domain or condemnation proceedings) any easement for public or private purposes pursuant to the laws of the State of Rhode Island.

APPLICABILITY OF STATE LAW

SEC. 9. Except as otherwise provided in this Act, the settlement lands shall be subject to the civil and criminal laws and jurisdiction of the State of Rhode Island.

FEDERAL BENEFITS PRESERVED

SEC. 10. Nothing contained in this Act or in any legislation enacted by the State of Rhode Island as described in section 7 of this Act shall affect or otherwise impair in any adverse manner any benefits received by the State of Rhode Island under the Federal Aid in Wildlife Restoration Act of September 2, 1937 (16 U.S.C. 669–669(i)), or the Federal Aid in Fish Restoration Act of August 9, 1950 (16 U.S.C. 777–777(k)).

AUTHORIZATION OF FUNDS

SEC. 11. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated $3,500,000 to carry out the purposes of this Act.

LIMITATION OF ACTIONS

SEC. 12. Notwithstanding any other provisions of law, any action to contest the constitutionality of this Act shall be barred unless the complaint is filed within one hundred and eighty days of the date of enactment of this Act. Exclusive jurisdiction over any such action is hereby vested in the United States District Court for the District of Rhode Island.

APPROVAL OF PRIOR TRANSFERS AND EXTINGUISHMENT OF CLAIMS AND ABORIGINAL TITLE OUTSIDE THE TOWN OF CHARLESTOWN, RHODE ISLAND, AND INVOLVING OTHER INDIANS IN RHODE ISLAND

SEC. 13. (a) Except as provided in subsection (b)—

(1) any transfer of land or natural resources located anywhere within the State of Rhode Island outside the town of Charlestown from, by, or on behalf of any Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians (other than transfers included in and approved by section 6 of this Act), including but not limited to a transfer pursuant to any statute of any State, shall be deemed to have been made in accordance with the Constitution and all laws of the United States that are specifically applicable to transfers of land or natural resources from, by, or on behalf of any Indians, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians (including but not limited to the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1790, Act of August 4, 1790, Ch. 33, Sec. 4, 1 Stat. 138, and all amendments thereto and all subsequent versions thereof), and Congress does hereby approve any such transfer effective as of the date of said transfer;

(2) to the extent that any transfer of land or natural resources described in paragraph (1) may involve land or natural resources to which such Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians had aboriginal title, paragraph (1) shall be regarded as an extinguishment of such aboriginal title as of the date of said transfer; and

(3) by virtue of the approval of such transfers of land or natural resources effected by this subsection or an extinguishment of aboriginal title effected thereby, all claims against the United States, and State of subdivision thereof, or any other person or entity, by any such Indian, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians, arising subsequent to the transfer and based upon any interest in or rights involving such land or natural resources (including but not limited to claims for trespass damages or claims for use and occupancy), shall be regarded as extinguished as of the date of the transfer.

(b) This section shall not apply to any claim, right, or title of any Indians, Indian nation, or tribe of Indians that is asserted in an action commenced in a court of competent jurisdiction within one hundred eighty days of the date of enactment of this Act: Provided, That the plaintiff in any such action shall cause notice of the action to be served upon the Secretary and the Governor of the State of Rhode Island.

● Mr. PELL. Mr. President, I am very pleased that the Senate today has acted favorably upon my bill, S. 3153, to settle the Narragansett Indian land claim in Rhode Island. I am proud that Rhode Island is the first State to reach a consensus resolution of an Indian land claim arising under the so-called Trade and Non-Intercourse Act of 1790. In more than 14 States, these claims are preventing innocent landowners from selling or developing their land, jeopardizing municipal finances, and impairing relations between landowners and their native American neighbors.

The legislation enacted by the Senate today represents a fair out-of-court agreement negotiated freely by the parties to the Narragansett land claim in Rhode Island. For landowners in Charlestown, R.I., affected by the suit, this bill provides a mechanism to clear clouded titles and allow the resumption of normal living without waiting the 5 to 7 years necessary for the courts to finally lay the issue to rest. The bill also extinguishes all non-Narragansett Indian land claims in Rhode Island within 180 days of enactment, insuring that the State will not again face the burden of defending a divisive lawsuit of this sort. To avoid the problems raised by the Alaska Native Claims Act, the bill contains language specifically extinguishing all claims and defenses of every sort, such as claims for trespass damages.

This bill also satisfies the historic grievances of the Narragansetts, a great people with a tradition of cultural achievement and self-sufficiency. It is appropriate that we enact this legislation during the week following the Longest Walk, when native Americans from every part of our country have come to Washington to focus attention on Indian rights. This bill is a signal that where the parties are willing to compromise and negotiate in good faith, and the State is willing to make a significant contribution to an out-of-court settlement, the administration and the Congress are willing to support them by enacting legislation to implement settlements and eliminate claims. I urge my colleagues to look upon this legislation as a model for the kind of settlement that can be achieved when there is a willingness to resolve the problem through compromise.

Within Rhode Island, I welcome the creation of a State-chartered corporation to hold over 1,800 acres of land, in trust for the Narragansetts, one-half contributed by the State of Rhode Island, and one-half freely sold by landowners at fair market prices. The State-chartered corporation, the majority of whose directors will be chosen by the Narragansett Indians, will provide a vehicle for the Narragansetts to share their rich history and culture with all Rhode Islanders, thus creating a new bond of understanding between native Americans and their neighbors.

I applaud the Senate Select Committee on Indian Affairs for its expeditious handling of this bill and the great amount of time which Chairman ABOUREZK and his staff have devoted to it. I am pleased to have played a leading role in the passage of this precedent-setting legislation.●

The amendment was agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 95–972), explaining the purposes of the measure.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE

The purpose of S. 3153 is to implement a settlement agreement between the Narragansett Indian Tribe and the State of Rhode Island and private landowners in Charlestown, Rhode Island concerning the Tribe's claim to certain lands within the town of Charlestown and for damages for trespass on such lands.

Briefly, the Tribe claims aboriginal title to these lands and argues that the alienation of tribal lands by the Tribe under the auspices of the State of Rhode Island between 1790 and 1880 was null and void under the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1790, as amended and supplemented (25 U.S.C. 177). Under the terms of the settlement agreement, the Tribe would relinquish its claim in return for approximately 900 acres of land from the State and an additional 900 acres of land from private landowners, the latter to be purchased with $3.5 million from the Federal government. Both extinguishment of the Tribe's claims and purchase of the private settlement lands, as well as other provisions by Congress. Additional implementing legislation by the State is required as well.

S. 3153 provides for the extinguishment of all land claims of the Narragansett Tribe (and for the conditional extinguishment of all land claims, if any, within the State of Rhode Island, by other Indian tribes), provides for the purchase of private settlement lands by the Federal government on behalf of the Tribe as provided in the settlement agreement, and implements various other provisions of the settlement agreement, thereby eliminating any cloud on the title to claimed lands while assuring that the Tribe is adequately compensated for the extinguishment of its claims to the land.

SUMMARY OF MAJOR PROVISIONS

This bill represents the first legislation submitted to the Senate which would resolve the land claims of an Indian tribe arising under the Trade and Intercourse Act of 1790, as amended and supplemented, on the basis of an out-of-court settlement negotiated between the Tribe and the affected parties. The Committee is convinced that this legislation will serve as a landmark for the resolution of other land claims by eastern tribes under the Trade and Intercourse Act.

The legislation is predicated, first, upon the finding and conclusion of the Administration that the Narragansetts have presented a credible claim to the lands involved such that a legislative settlement is justified. Second, the extinguishment of the Narragansett's land claims under the bill is premised on the voluntary relinquishment of their claims by the Tribe and the provision of fair compensation for that relinquishment. Third, it should be noted that although there is no liability on the part of the Federal government involved in legal action brought by Indian tribes against third parties under the Trade and Intercourse Act, the Administration has recognized that the mere pendency of Indian claims may result in severe economic hardships from the clouding of land titles and that it is proper for the Federal government to aid the states in settling legitimate Indian claims. Fourth, the legislation is precedential in that even with respect to the hypothetical claims of Indians other than the Narragansetts, extinguishment is not effected without allowing any such Indians the opportunity to present their claims in court. And, finally, the bill is important in that it follows the precedent set in the Alaskan Native Claims Settlement Act. 43 U.S.C. 1601 et seq. by providing the Indians with an opportunity to acquire a viable land base in the process of resolving their claims to aboriginal lands.

Under the major provisions of the legislation:

(1) The aboriginal title to any land or natural resources claimed by the Narragansetts (and aboriginal title to land or natural resources within Charlestown, Rhode Island claimed by any other Indian tribe), as well as all derivative claims such as damages for trespass, are extinguished, effective as of the date such land was originally transferred from aboriginal ownership by the Tribe, upon the Secretary of the Interior's publication of his finding that the State of Rhode Island has enacted legislation establishing the state-created, Indian controlled corporation for holding and managing the settlement lands on behalf of the Tribe and authorizing the conveyance of the public settlement lands to the corporation as per the settlement agreement.

(2) Any Indian tribe, other than the Narragansetts, whose claim to lands within Charlestown is extinguished may assert their claim only against the state-created corporation. Such an action must be asserted within 180 days of the extinguishment and the exclusive remedy in such action is possession of the settlement lands.

(3) All other claims by Indian tribes, other than the Naragansetts, to land within the state, outside Charlestown, are extinguished unless asserted in an action by the Tribe within 180 days from the date of enactment of this legislation. (As noted below, there are no known or probable claims to lands within Rhode Island based on unextinguished Indian title, other than that of the Narragansetts).

(4) The Federal government, through the Secretary, will purchase approximately 900 acres of private settlement lands specified in the settlement agreement. $3.5 million is authorized to be appropriated for the purchase of the lands, including the payment of option fees. An option mechanism is employed under which the terms of the purchase, including the price of the land (fair market value), are to be agreed upon by the Governor of the State of Rhode Island and the private landowners. The options are to be assigned to the Secretary who will pay the option fees, execute the options, and convey the lands to the state-created corporation for the Tribe.

(5) The settlement lands will be subject to a special federal restraint on alienation only if the Secretary subsequently acknowledges the Tribe's existence under the Department of the Interior's regulations governing recognition of Indian tribes. The settlement lands will be subject to the civil and criminal jurisdiction of the State, except as otherwise provided in the bill. (Other provisions of the settlement agreement relating to the exemption of the settlement lands from federal, state, and local taxation (other than "in lieu" payments for governmental services) and providing for capital gains deferral with respect to income received by private landowners from the sale of the private settlement lands to the Federal government require implementing legislation by Congress but have been reserved for subsequent legislation in order not to delay the enactment of this bill.)

Mr. CHAFEE. Mr. President, I thank the majority leader for taking up that Indian lands claim matter involving Rhode Island, and that is the first of the eastern Indian land claims matters that have come before Congress.

It has been a very trying situation for us in Rhode Island. It does not involve substantial amounts of land as the Maine situation does. Nonetheless, it has been a very difficult matter, but all the sides have come together. To have Congress approve it is very helpful for all of us in Rhode Island.

So I am grateful that has been taken up and favorably disposed of.

I yield back my time.

SPECIAL ORDER

The PRESIDING OFICER (Mr. MORGAN). Under the previous order, the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. HODGES) is recognized for not to exceed 15 minutes.

MULTILATERAL TRADE NEGOTIATIONS

Mr. HODGES. Mr. President, last week, the United States and other major participants in the multilateral trade negotiations issued a statement on the current status of the so-called Tokyo round of negotiations. The statement, called a "framework of understanding," summarizes the result of almost 5 years of negotiation and lists what could become the major elements of a comprehensive trade agreement governing international trade into the 1980's. The "framework" alludes to a tariff package that would be more liberal than that accomplished in the Kennedy round of negotiations, but more importantly, it indicates potental for agreement on a list of nontariff items. These nontariff items would include the ways in which participants value customs and implement Government procurement and the subsidies and countervailing duties that are placed on certain goods. A lessening of nontariff restraints could have greater and more immediate impact than reduced tariff schedules. Progress to date holds the promise of a final agreement by late in this calendar year.

That these negotiations have gotten this close to completion is in large part due to the efforts of our special trade representative, Robert Strauss. Ambassador Strauss is to be commended for the energy and forcefulness with which he has pursued a satisfactory conclusion to these discussions. In particular, I applaud the attention of Mr. Strauss has paid to the agricultural portion of the negotiations. The Kennedy round entertained agricultural problems after industrial bargaining was virtually complete, resulting in far less liberalization of agricultural trade. Some of the most onerous restaints upon international trade today are the levies and quotas placed on agricultural imports. Early in his tenure, Ambassador Strauss emphasized that he felt agriculture had been left behind in the Kennedy round, but; that "it would not be so left behind in the Tokyo round." Since then, especially in discussions with representatives of the EEC and Japan, he has continued to express the United States determination to arrive at a truly comprehensive agreement, insisting that trade in industrial and agricultural products be dealt with simultaneously and in the same form. Last week, during which some had hoped that a final settlment on all major issues would be reached, Mr. Strauss again made clear that any agreement on industrial items would be contingent on arriving at satisfactory terms on agricultural matters.

Regretfully, however, there is a consensus that progress in the agricultural areas has been disappointing. Only last Tuesday, July 18th, Mr. Strauss indicated, in a report to the Trade Subcommittee of the House Ways and Means Committee, that our goals on agricultural items had not been reached and that the reluctance of other negotiation participants to increase access for our agricultural products remained as one of the major impediments to a successful agreement. He cited both Japan and the EEC for their unwillingness to provide more open markets.

The issue of increased access to foreign markets for our agricultural goods is crucial. During the farm strike of last winter, farmers were repeatedly told by Congressmen, by the Department of Agriculture, and by Secretary Bergland himself, that the key to any solution to agricultural problems was increased agricultural exports. There are real limits to how much our exports can be increased as long as some of our major foreign markets maintain highly protectionist import policies. Some of the same markets that remain closed to U.S. agricultural products have enormous trade surpluses due to the accessibility of our own markets. I speak in particular, of course, of the very advantageous position that Japan holds in trading with the United States. The Japanese surplus in trade with us in calendar year 1977 was over $8 billion. Mr. President, I repeat: over $8 billion in surplus. During the first 3 months of this year, that situation appears to have worsened, with a first quarter surplus to Japan of over $3 billion. A goodly share of this surplus is the result of large sales of Japanese automobiles in the United States—$4 billion last year alone. Japanese sales of machinery and transportation equipment to the United States amounted to almost $11 billion in 1977 or about 60 percent of the total sales of Japanese products to the United States. I might add it put numbers of American workers on the streets.

The U.S. duty on imported automobiles is a nominal 3 percent. Sales of U.S. agricultural products to Japan, while sizable at $2.2 billion, pale in comparison to our trade deficit with Japan. There is a tremendous potential for increasing our agricultural sales to Japan if the Japanese would reduce the restraints placed on imports. Although no duty is placed on wheat, Japan's internal price system reduces domestic demand and makes our price competitiveness irrelevant. I am particularly disturbed by their intransigence on beef imports. Beef is a popular food in Japan and demand remains high despite prices on some cuts as high as $20 per pound. They cannot supply demand domestically and yet beef imports face not only a duty of 25 percent, but also a very stiff quota. Some minor quota increases were made by the Japanese last January, but there remains much room here for increasing access and for reducing the trade surplus.

The reluctance of the Japanese to make concessions may be attributed to the vociferous reaction they expect from Japanese farmers who are highly protectionist and, I might add, highly protected. The negotiators of Japan, and the EEC, and of all participants in fact, should be reminded that there are such protectionist forces to be dealt with in every country, including the United States. The final product of the Tokyo round will come before the next Congress when legislation that would implement the agreement will be considered. In order to mollify domestic protectionist pressure, Ambassador Strauss and the White House will have to be able to point to actions that other participants have taken that indicate a sincere willingness to share markets. The EEC, and in particular the Japanese, should take note—the tide of protectionism is rising in the United States. Agriculture is one area where our products are economically competitive in the international marketplace—obstinate refusal to reduce barriers to U.S. agricultural products signals this Senator to encourage and assist that rising tide.

Take note Mr. D. and Mr. T.

I thank the Chair. I yield back the remainder of my time.

ABSENCE OF SENATOR LEAHY EXCUSED

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to be excused from any sessions of the Senate or votes after 2 o'clock this afternoon, because of a death in the family.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

DOMESTIC VOLUNTEER SERVICE ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1978

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 2617, which the clerk will state by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Calendar No. 754, S. 2617, a bill to authorize appropriations for programs under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, to amend such Act to facilitate the improvement of programs carried out thereunder, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Human Resources with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That this Act may be cited as the "Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978".

SEC. 2. Section 103 of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 4951 et seq.) (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") is amended by—

(1) amending subsection (b) by—

(A) striking out "Prior to" and inserting in lieu thereof "Within thirty days after" in the second sentence; and

(B) inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Director shall offer to provide each volunteer enrolled for a period of full-time service of one year or more under this title, and, upon the request of such volunteer, provide such volunteer with an individual and updated plan as described in the preceding two sentences."; and

(2) amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d)(1) Volunteers under this part shall not be assigned to duties or work in a project or program in any State unless the project or program has been submitted to the Governor or other chief executive officer of the State concerned, and has not been disapproved by him or her within forty-five days of the date of such submission. In the event of a timely disapproval in writing, supported by a statement of reasons, by the Governor or other chief executive officer, volunteers may be assigned to duties or work in such project or program if, following disapproval, the Director determines in writing, with a statement of reasons therefor, that such project or program is fully consistent with the provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of this part.

"(2) Except as provided in the second sentence of this paragraph, when so requested by the Governor or other chief executive officer of the State concerned in writing, supported by a statement of reasons, a volunteer project or program or the assignment of a volunteer to a project or program in such State shall be terminated by the Director not later than thirty days after the date such request is received by the Director, or at such later date as is agreed upon by the Director and such Governor or other chief executive officer. The Director may refuse to terminate such a project or program or the assignment of a volunteer to such a project or program if the Director so determines by notifying the Governor or other chief executive officer in writing, with a statement of reasons therefor, that such program or project or the assignment of such a volunteer to a project or program is fully consistent with the provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of this part.".

SEC. 3. Section 105(a)(2) of the Act is amended by amending the first sentence thereof to read as follows: "Stipends shall be payable only upon completion of a period of service, except that under such circumstances as the Director shall determine, in accordance with regulations which the Director shall prescribe, the accrued stipend, or any part thereof, may be paid to the volunteer, or, on behalf of the volunteer, to members of the volunteer's family or others during the period of the volunteer's service.".

SEC. 4. Section 114(a) of the Act is amended by—

(1) striking out in the first sentence "10" and inserting in lieu thereof "15"; and

(2) striking out in the second sentence "$6,700,000" both times it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$4,600,000".

SEC. 5. Section 122 of the Act is amended by—

(1) amending subsection (a) by—

(A) inserting "in urban and rural areas" after "programs" the first place it appears;

(B) striking out "and" the first place it appears and inserting a comma and 'a program of assistance to victims of domestic violence, and the programs specified in section 134 (1) and (2) of this Act" after "abusers"; and

(C) inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In carrying out programs authorized by this part, the Director is authorized to provide for the recruitment, selection, and training of volunteers."; and

(2) amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c)(1) The Director, in accordance with regulations which the Director shall prescribe, may provide to volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service of twenty hours or more per week for twenty-six or more consecutive weeks under this part such allowances, support, and services as are described in section 105(b) and as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of this part, and shall apply the provisions of sections 103(d), 104(c), and 105(b) to the service of volunteers enrolled for full-time service under this part.

"(2) The Director, in accordance with regulations which the Director shall prescribe with respect to volunteers enrolled for periods of full-time service of one year or more under this part—

"(A) may provide to such volunteers such stipends, in total amounts not in excess of stipends provided under section 105(a) to volunteers serving under part A of this title, as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of this part; and

"(B) to the extent that the terms and conditions of the service of such volunteers are of similar character to the terms and conditions of the service of volunteers enrolled under part A of this title, shall apply to the service of such volunteers enrolled under this part the provisions of sections 103(b) (with respect to low-income community volunteers), 104(d), and 105(a) to the extent such provisions are applied to the service of volunteers enrolled under such part A.".

SEC. 6. (a) Title I of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART D—URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 131. The purpose of this part is to strengthen and encourage the involvement of individuals, neighborhood groups, voluntary associations, labor organizations, local enterprises, local governments, and other local entities in community revitalization and person-to-person service activities in distressed urban neighborhoods by providing for Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Programs which build on the capacity of existing and emerging neighborhood groups, through the use of volunteers enrolled for a period of full-time service and volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service, to assist in efforts to reverse deterioration of and improve the quality of life in their neighborhoods, particularly in situations where the application of human talent and dedication may assist in the solution of poverty and poverty-related problems, and to provide appropriate authorities and responsibilities designed to assist in the development and coordination of such programs.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 132. (a) The Director is authorized to conduct or make grants to and contracts with public agencies and private nonprofit organizations, or both, for projects to carry out the purpose of this part in accordance with the authorities and subject to the restrictions in the provisions of this part.

"(b) The assignment of volunteers under this part shall be on such terms and conditions, and volunteers may be provided only such allowances, stipends, and benefits and be afforded such status and be subject to such restrictions as are provided for in this Act (except with respect to coverage under section 415(d)) for volunteers whose service and time commitment is of similar character. The Director shall take appropriate steps to encourage the assignment together of volunteers from various age groups, particularly young and old, and the use of volunteers enrolled for a period of full-time service of one year or more and volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service in assignments as catalysts to extend the effectiveness of paid employees of projects and in assignments to carry out recruitment and placement activities.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other law, not more than an amount equal to 15 per centum of the total amount available for grants and contracts and the conduct of programs under this part for each fiscal year shall be expended for administrative expenses from sums appropriated under section 504 of this Act in order to carry out this part.

"AUTHORITY TO OPERATE URBAN NEIGHBORS PROGRAMS

"SEC. 133. (a) The Director, with the concurrence of the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of an urban area with distressed neighborhoods, is authorized to designate and provide financial assistance to a lead agency to support the efforts of teams (each team consisting of one professional employee familiar with the distressed urban area in question, at least one volunteer enrolled for a period of full-time service of one year or more, and volunteers enrolled for periods of full-time and part-time service) and essential support staff to operate Urban Neighbors Programs to carry out community revitalization and person-to-person service activities in distressed urban neighborhoods through—

"(1) the recruitment, on a request-for-service basis, of volunteers who possess needed skills and the matching of such volunteers with neighborhood groups requiring the skills of such volunteers in carrying out community revitalization and person-to-person service projects, with appropriate emphasis on activities to carry out the national neighborhood priority programs established under section 134 of this Act;

"(2) the development of a resource bank listing locally-recruited persons willing to serve as volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service to assist such groups in such projects;

"(3) the encouragement of the development of neighborhood groups in distressed urban neighborhoods to carry out such projects;

"(4) the coordination and facilitation of volunteer assistance available through regional resource centers pursuant to subsection (b) of this section; and

"(5) such other activities consistent with the provisions of this part as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of this part.

"(b)(1) The Director is authorized to provide financial assistance for the establishment and operation of regional resource centers to support (A) the recruitment of scarce-skill volunteers to assist in projects carried out pursuant to this part, (B) the provision, where appropriate, of such payments (such as essential job-related expenses) to volunteers serving under this part as are authorized under section 132(b) of this Act, and (C) the provision of technical, management, and coordination assistance for lead agencies designated under subsection (a) of this section. Not more than $100,000 may be provided for salaries and related expenses under a grant or contract for any such center.

"(2) The Director, after consultation with the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of the urban area involved, is authorized to make neighborhood seed-money grants to nonprofit organizations in distressed urban neighborhoods (either directly or for distribution to such organizations by lead agencies designated under subsection (a) of this section) to promote volunteer activities in such neighborhoods, and provide volunteers working in neighborhood groups with such materials, tools, supplies, training, and administrative support as the Director deems necessary to enable such volunteers to work effectively, in community revitalization and person-to-person service projects. No nonprofit organization grantee shall be eligible to receive in any fiscal year funds under this subsection in excess of $15,000 or a total of $30,000 over any three fiscal years for use by an entity in a particular neighborhood.

"(3) Not more than 30 per centum of the sums appropriated to carry out this part for each fiscal year shall be used for the purpose of making grants under this subsection.

"AUTHORITY TO DEVELOP AND CARRY OUT NATIONAL URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD PRIORITIES PROGRAMS

"SEC. 134. The Director shall develop and carry out National Urban Neighborhood Priorities Programs, including—

"(1) a program designated 'Helping Hand', utilizing person-to-person services to reduce the necessity for institutionalization (in hospitals, mental institutions, nursing homes, other extended-care settings, and other facilities) and to ameliorate residential isolation (in senior centers, halfway-house facilities, and other residential settings) of older persons, handicapped persons, and other affected persons, stressing interactions between persons from various age groups, particularly young and old, and carried out in coordination with the appropriate State system for the protection and advocacy of the rights of persons with developmental disabilities established pursuant to amendments made by section 203 of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act;

"(2) a program designed to provide personal and group financial counseling to low- and fixed-income individuals utilizing volunteers with specialized or technical expertise; and

"(3) such other additional program as the Director may identify each year as a national program priority to stimulate and initiate improved methods of utilizing volunteers to carry out the purpose of this part, and the continuation of any such programs as the Director may determine.".

(b) The table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting below the heading for section 123 the following:

"PART D—URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

"Sec. 131. Statement of purpose.
"Sec. 132. General provisions.
"Sec. 133. Authority to operate Urban Neighborhood Programs.
"Sec. 134. Authority to develop and carry out National Urban Neighborhood Priorities Programs.".

SEEC. 7. Section 201 of the Act is amended by—

(1) striking out in subsection (c) "sixty" and inserting in lieu thereof "forty-five"; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, volunteer service under this part shall not be deemed employment for any purpose which the Director finds is not fully consistent with provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of this part.".

SEC. 8. Section 212(a) of the Act is amended by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The Director shall award a grant or contract under this part for a project to be carried out over an area in a State more comprehensive than one community, to the State agency established or designated pursuant to section 304(a)(1) of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended (42 U.S.C. 3024(a)(1)), unless (i) the State has not established or designated such an agency, or (ii) such agency has been afforded at least forty-five days to (I) review the project application made by a prospective grantee or contractor other than such agency for a project to be carried out in such State and (II) make recommendations thereon. In the event that such an established or designated State agency is not awarded the grant or contract, any application approved for a project in such State must contain or be supported by satisfactory assurances that the project has been developed, and will, to the extent feasible, be conducted, in consultation with, or with the participation of, such agency.

"(B) The Director shall award a grant or contract under this part for a project to be carried out entirely in a community served by a community action agency, to such agency unless such agency and the State agency established or designated pursuant to section 304(a)(1) of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended (42 U.S.C. 3024(a)(1)) have been afforded at least forty-five days to (i) review the project application made by a prospective grantee or contractor other than either such agency for a project to be carried out in such community and (ii) make recommendations thereon. In the event that such a community action agency or such an established or designated State agency is not awarded the grant or contract, any application approved for a project to be carried out entirely in such community must contain or be supported by satisfactory assurances that the project has been developed, and will, to the extent feasible, be conducted, in consultation with, or with the participation of, such community action agency.".

SEC. 9. Section 404(g) of the Act is amended by—

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(g)"; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a person enrolled for full-time service as a volunteer under title I of this Act who was otherwise entitled to receive assistance or services under any governmental program prior to such volunteer's enrollment shall not be denied such assistance or services because of such volunteer's failure or refusal to register for, seek, or accept employment or training during the period of such service.".

SEC. 10. Section 410 of the Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Director, in consultation with the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission and the Secretaries of Labor, Commerce, and the Treasury and officials of other appropriate departments and agencies, shall take all appropriate steps to encourage State and local governments, charitable and service organizations, and private employers (1) to take into account experience in volunteer work in the consideration of applicants for employment, and (2) to make provision for the listing and description of volunteer work on all employment application forms.".

(1) amending subsection (b) by—

(A) striking out in the first sentence "in programs under title I of this Act for periods of service of at least one year" and inserting in lieu thereof "as volunteers for periods of full-time service, or, as the Director deems appropriate in accordance with regulations, for periods of part-time service of not less than twenty hours or more per week for twenty-six or more consecutive weeks, under title I of this Act";

(B) striking out in clause (3) "and";

(C) amending clause (4)(A) by striking out "the monthly pay of a volunteer shall be deemed that received under the entrance salary for a grade GS–7 employee," and inserting in lieu thereof "the annual rate of pay of a volunteer enrolled for a period of full-time service under such title I shall be deemed to be that received under the entrance salary for a grade GS–7 employee, and the annual rate of pay of a volunteer enrolled for a period of part-time service under such title I shall be deemed to be an appropriate portion of such entrance salary,"; and

(D) striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and "and (5) be deemed employees of the United States for the purposes of section 5584 of title 5, United States Code (and stipends and allowances paid under this Act shall be considered as pay for such purposes)."; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) The remedy—

"(A) against the United States provided by sections 1346(b) and 2672 of title 28, United States Code, or

"(B) through proceedings for compensation or other benefits from the United States as provided by any other law, where the availability of such benefits precludes a remedy under section 1346(b) or 2672 of such title 28, for damages for personal injury, including death, allegedly arising from malpractice or negligence of a physician, dentist, podiatrist, optometrist, nurse, physician assistant, expanded-function dental auxiliary, pharmacist, or paramedical (for example, medical and dental technicians, nursing assistants, and therapists) or other supporting personnel in furnishing medical care or treatment while in the exercise of such person's duties as a volunteer enrolled under title I of this Act shall hereafter be exclusive of any other civil action or proceeding by reason of the same subject matter against such person (or such person's estate) whose action or omission gave rise to such claim.

"(2) The Attorney General shall defend any civil action or proceeding brought in any court against any person referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection (or such person's estate) for any such damage or injury. Any such person against whom such civil action or proceeding is brought shall deliver, within such time after date of service or knowledge of service as determined by the Attorney General, all process served upon such person or an attested true copy thereof to such person's immediate supervisor or to whomever is designated by the Director to receive such papers, and such person shall promptly furnish copies of the pleading and process therein to the United States attorney for the district embracing the place wherein the proceeding is brought and to the Attorney General.

"(3) Upon a certification by the Attorney General that the defendant was acting in the scope of such person's volunteer assignment at the time of the incident out of which the suit arose, any such civil action or proceeding commenced in a State court shall be removed without bond at any time before trial by the Attorney General to the district court of the United States of the district and division embracing the place wherein it is pending and the proceeding deemed a tort action brought against the United States under the provisions of title 28, United States Code, and all references thereto. After removal the United States shall have available all defenses to which it would have been entitled if the action had originally been commenced against the United States. Should a United States district court determine on a hearing on a motion to remand held before a trial on the merits that the volunteer whose act or omission gave rise to the suit was not acting within the scope of such person's volunteer assignment, the case shall be remanded to the State court.

"(4) The Attorney General may compromise or settle any claim asserted in such civil action or proceeding in the manner provided in section 2677 of title 28, United States Code, and with the same effect.".

SEC. 12. Section 414 of the Act is amended by inserting "among various regions of the country and" after "equitably".

SEC. 13. Section 417 of the Act is amended by—

(1) inserting at the end of subsection (a) the following new sentence: "For the purposes of this subsection, title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d), section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794), and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (Public Law 94–135, title III; 42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.), any project or activity to which volunteers are assigned under this Act shall be deemed to be receiving Federal financial assistance."; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) The Director shall apply the nondiscrimination policies and authorities set forth in section 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–16), in title V of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. ch. 16, subch. V), and in the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (Public Law 94–135, title III; 42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.) to applicants for enrollment for service as volunteers and to volunteers serving under this Act and the Peace Corps Act (22 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.), and any remedies under such laws shall be available to aggrieved such applicants or volunteers. Not later than ninety days after the date of the enactment of this Act, the Director, after consultation with the Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council (established by section 715 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–14)) with regard to the application of the policies set forth in section 717 of such Civil Rights Act and with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Interagency Committee on Handicapped Employees (established by section 501(a) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 791(a))) with regard to the application of the policies set forth in title V of such Rehabilitation Act, and not later than ninety days after the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare publishes final general regulations to carry out such Age Discrimination Act, the Director, after consultation with the Secretary with regard to the application of the policies set forth in such Act, shall prescribe regulations establishing the procedures for the application of such policies so as to promote the enrollment and service of persons as such volunteers without regard to the discriminatory factors proscribed in such laws.".

SEC. 14. Title V of the Act is amended by—

(1) amending section 501 by—

(A) striking out "(a)" and striking out "and" after "September 30, 1977," in the first sentence, and inserting "September 30, 1979, September 30, 1980, and September 30, 1981," after "September 30, 1978," in such sentence;

(B) striking out "$29,600,000" in the second sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "80 per centum"; and

(C) striking out the last sentence of subsection (a) and all of subsection (b).

(2) amending section 502 by—

(A) striking out in subsection (a) "and" after "September 30, 1976," and inserting "$25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, and $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981," after "September 30, 1978,"; and

(B) inserting below clause (B) of subsection (b)(2) the following new sentence: "There are further authorized to be appropriated $55,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $62,500,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978, and $70,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981, for the purpose of carrying out programs under part B of such title.";

(3) amending section 503 by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1977,", and inserting "September 30, 1979, September 30, 1980, and September 30, 1981," after "September 30, 1978,"; and

(4) amending section 504 by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1977,", and inserting "September 30, 1979, September 30, 1980, and September 30, 1981," after "September 30, 1978,".

SEC. 15. Not later than February 1, 1979, the Director of the ACTION Agency shall submit to the appropriate Committees of the Congress a report specifying the special needs and circumstances to be addressed in designing programs under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 for implementation in rural areas, and a strategy and timetable for meeting such needs and circumstances.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate on this bill is limited to 1 hour to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) and the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), with 30 minutes on any amendment, and with 15 minutes on any debatable motion, appeal or point of order.

The Senator from California is recognized.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Jon Steinberg, Fran Butler, and Jim O'Connell have the privilege of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I rise to urge favorable action on S. 2617, the proposed Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978, as reported by the Human Resources Committee on May 15. I introduced this legislation on March 1, 1978, along with the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), the Chairman of the Human Resources Committee to which the bill was referred and long a supporter of the volunteer programs administered by the ACTION Agency, and the Senator from Michigan (Mr. RIEGLE), the ranking majority member of the Human Resources Committee's Subcommittee on Child and Human Development which has oversight responsibility for the domestic volunteer programs of the ACTION Agency. I am privileged to serve as chairman of the subcommittee. The Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), the ranking minority member of the full committee, subsequently joined us in cosponsoring S. 2617 after contributing significantly to the development of an amendment—section 6 of the bill as reported—authorizing the creation of new urban neighborhood volunteer programs adopted in full committee.

I am pleased to report that S. 2617, as amended, was unanimously ordered favorably reported from the Human Resources Committee on May 3.

S. 2617 would extend the authorizations of appropriations for the domestic volunteer programs of the ACTION Agency through September 30, 1981, and provide for refinements and improvements in the authorizing legislation.

SUMMARY OF BILL AS REPORTED

Mr. President, I would like to highlight the major provisions of S. 2617, as reported.

First, to provide for a 3-year extension of the four authorizations of appropriations (for title 1 and title 2 volunteers, SBA small business volunteers, and administration) with special emphasis on bringing about an expansion of the RSVP and foster grandparent/senior companion programs and providing the latter volunteers with a long overdue stipend increase and on continuing the basic antipoverty focus of the title 1 program, while providing the director with increased flexibility as between the deployment of full-time and part-time volunteers and in the making of grants and contracts for older American volunteer projects under title 2;

Second, to clarify, in a number of instances, the status of volunteers (particularly part-time and health service volunteers) with respect to whether they are covered by or subject to other provisions of law (such as the Federal Tort Claims Act and workers' compensation laws) and with respect to service in a State where the Governor has some objections;

Third, to extend to ACTION Agency volunteers appropriate coverage and remedies under the nondiscrimination policies of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, and title VI of the Civil Rights Act;

Fourth, to provide authority for appropriate support of short-term, part-time volunteers;

Fifth, to direct the ACTION Agency to take appropriate steps to encourage employers to take into account experience in volunteer work in considering applicants for employment;

Sixth, to provide that the ACTION Agency meet in fiscal year 1979 its commitments (approximately $3.9 million) to UYA grantees before undertaking other service-learning efforts; and Seventh, to amend title I by adding a new part D—"urban neighborhood volunteer programs." The purpose of the new part, which Senator JAVITS and I developed based on a request of the administration, is to strengthen and encourage the involvement of individuals, neighborhood groups, voluntary associations, labor organizations, local enterprises, local governments, and other local entities in community revitalization and person-to-person service activities in distressed urban neighborhoods. The new "urban neighborhood volunteer programs" it authorizes would build on the capacity of existing and emerging neighborhood groups, through the assistance of part-time and full-time volunteers, to assist in efforts to reverse deterioration and improve the quality of life in their neighborhoods.

The strength of this approach lies in its recognition of the vital role which can be played by neighborhood self-help groups working in partnership with volunteers in combatting urban ills, and in its support for these groups as vehicles for community improvement.

The new programs authorized in the new part D include an "urban neighbors program" (section 133(a)) and a "national urban neighborhood priority program" (section 134). The priority programs will include a program designed by Senator JAVITS, called "helping hand" focused on deinstitutionalization, a program to provide personal and group financial counseling to low- and fixed-income individuals—which has long been a matter of keen personal interest on my part—and an additional national urban neighborhood priority program which may be initiated each year by the agency to carry out the purpose of the new part D.

BACKGROUND

Mr. President, on February 9 and 20, 1978, the Child and Human Development Subcommittee held hearings on the ACTION Agency's implementation of its authorizing legislation—the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (Public Law 93–113)—and on suggestions for its modification. Public witnesses included representatives from each of the Agency's major domestic volunteer programs—VISTA, university year for ACTION (UYA), the retired senior volunteer program (RSVP), the foster grandparent program (FGP), and the senior companion program (SCP), as well as representatives from private sector volunteer efforts. Subsequent to the hearings, each witness was sent the text of S. 2617 with related descriptive materials, and was requested to provide written comments for the hearing record and the subcommittee's consideration.

The witnesses generally favored the bill, which included many provisions similar to those included in the administration's proposal which I introduced by request on April 4, 1978, as S. 2823 and on May 2 as amendment No. 1839 to S. 2823.

Mr. President, several witnesses raised the question of whether or not the title II older American volunteer programs might not receive more effective advocacy under the leadership of the Administration on Aging in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. Most, however, favored retaining the programs under the ACTION Agency, with the caveat that the ACTION Agency should strive to deal more sensitively with problems commonly faced by older American volunteer program sponsors. The committee has not proposed any program transfer for the title II programs.

On April 6, 1978, the subcommittee considered and unanimously ordered S. 2617, with several substantive amendments, favorably reported to the full Human Resources Committee. The Human Resources Committee on May 3, 1978, approved and ordered favorably reported S. 2617, as reported from the subcommittee, with an amendment in the nature of a substitute adding additional substantive amendment designed to provide for the development of urban neighborhood volunteer programs and to stress rural programing needs.

HISTORY OF THE ACTION AGENCY

Mr. President, the ACTION Agency was created on July 1, 1971, pursuant to Reorganization Plan No. 1 of 1971, as an independent agency of the executive branch for the purpose of coordinating volunteer programs being administered by various agencies throughout the Federal Government. These programs included: Volunteers in service to America (VISTA) and auxiliary and special volunteer programs, both from the Office of Economic Opportunity; service corps of retired executives (SCORE) and active corps of executives (ACE) both from the Small Business Administration; foster grandparents program (FGP) and retired senior volunteer program (RSVP) both from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare; and the Peace Corps from the Department of State. The SCORE and ACE programs were subsequently transferred back to the sole sponsorship of the Small Business Administration by Executive order in July of 1975.

Reorganization Plan No. 1 empowered the ACTION Agency to administer these programs, while matters of entitlement, authorization, and appropriation remained with those agencies from which the programs had come.

The Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (Public Law 93–113), which I authored, incorporated into one law the legislative authority for each of the domestic volunteer programs administered by the ACTION Agency, and in addition provided the Director of the Agency with discretionary authority to develop new volunteer efforts designed to address pressing domestic needs of the country. The act in title IV contained 3-year authorizations of appropriations.

In 1976, Mr. President, these authorizations were extended for an additional 2 years beginning with fiscal year 1977. The bill before us today provides for another 3-year extension.

MAJOR PROVISIONS OF S. 2617

Mr. President, I would like to highlight the major provisions of S. 2617.

ANTIPOVERTY MISSION OF TITLE I PROGRAMS

Mr. President, S. 2617 as reported would continue the basic antipoverty nature of the title I programs—VISTA, service-learning programs, including the university year for ACTION program (UYA), the agency's discretionary programs, and the new urban neighborhood volunteer programs"—by requiring that 80 percent of the funds appropriated pursuant to title I must be spent on programs to eliminate poverty and poverty-related human, social, and environmental problems.

UNIVERSITY YEAR FOR ACTION

It would protect the university year for ACTION—UYA—program by modifying the limitations in present law on the funding for service-learning programs other than UYA so that the requisite amount to continue current commitments to UYA can be provided, dependent upon appropriations actions. The administration had requested total elimination of these limitations to allow approval of its recommendations to eliminate all funding for UYA projects during fiscal year 1979.

SPECIAL VOLUNTEER PROGRAM EMPHASIS

Mr. President, S. 2617 as reported highlights special volunteer programs authorized to be conducted which would provide assistance to vicitms of domestic violence, and those which would focus on deinstitutionalization and on the provision of consumer counseling to fixed-income and low-income persons.

SHORT-TERM VOLUNTEER SUPPORT

It would provide the Director of the ACTION Agency with new authority to provide certain in-service support for short-term, part-time volunteers enrolled for periods of service of 20 hours or more per weeks for 26 or more consecutive weeks.

URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

The Committee bill would add a new part D—urban neighborhood volunteer programs—to title I of the present law. This new set of provisions results from some very successful collaboration between Senator JAVITS and myself working closely with the administration. The new programs authorized under the new part D would include "urban neighbors programs" and "national urban neighborhood priority programs." The priority programs will include a new program designated "helping hand" focused on deinstitutionalization, a program to provide personal and group financial counseling to low-income and fixed-income individuals, and another national urban neighborhood priority program as may be added annually by the Director to carry out the purpose of the new part D.

URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD PROGRAMS

Mr. President, "urban neighbors programs" would have three aspects:

First would be designation of the Director, with the concurrence of the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of an urban area with distressed neighborhoods, of a "lead agency" to coordinate and support community revitalization and person-to-person projects in distressed urban neighborhoods.

The selection process for the local agency is further spelled out in an amendment which Senator NELSON, Senator JAVITS, and I will be proposing today.

The ACTION Agency would be authorized to provide financial assistance to the "lead agency" to support a staff consisting of a team or teams of paid employees and volunteers—each team composed of one professional employee familiar with the neighborhood and the support systems which can assist in its revitalization, at least one full-time volunteer, part- and other full-time volunteers, and essential support staff. Their work would include:

The recruitment, on a request for service basis, of volunteers possessing needed skills—such as lawyers, architects, and city planners—and the matching of those volunteers with neighborhood groups requiring their skills;

The development of a resource bank listing locally recruited persons willing to volunteer to work with the neighborhood groups in carrying out community revitalization and person-to-person projects;

The encouragement of the development of neighborhood groups in distressed urban neighborhoods to carry out such projects;

The coordination and facilitation of volunteer assistance available through "regional resource centers," also authorized under the new part D; and

Such other activities consistent with the provisions of the new part as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of the new part.

The second aspect would be provision for establishing, by grant or contract, "regional resources centers" to provide scarce-skill volunteers to neighborhood groups and to coordinate and provide technical and management assistance to the activities of "lead agencies" across the Nation. The new part D limits to $100,000 grant funds for salaries and expenses available to the "regional resource centers."

The third aspect would be provision for the Director—after consultation with the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of the urban area—to make "neighborhood seed money grants," generally averaging $5,000 to $7,000 but restricted so as not to be in excess of $15,000 or a total of more than $30,000 over any 3 fiscal years for any particular neighborhood group. The purpose of these grants, which are similar to the successful "mini-grants" program now operated by the ACTION Agency, is to promote volunteer activities in community revitalization and person-to-person service projects, and to provide volunteers working in neighborhood groups with such materials, tools, supplies, training, and administrative support as the Director deems necessary to enable them to work effectively in such projects. The grants would be made to nonprofit organizations in distressed urban neighborhoods either directly by the ACTION Agency or for distribution by "lead agencies."

URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD PRIORITIES PROGRAMS

Mr. President, the urban neighborhood priorities programs would include two mandated programs:

First, Helping Hand, utilizing person-to-person services to reduce the necessity for institutionalization and to ameliorate residential isolation of older, handicapped, and other persons, stressing interactions between persons from various age groups, particularly young and old; and

Second, a program designed to provide personal and group financial counseling to low- and fixed-income individuals, utilizing volunteers with specialized or technical expertise.

The committee bill also would authorize the Director to add each year (and continue thereafter) a new priority program to stimulate and initiate improved methods of utilizing volunteers to carry out the purpose of the new part D.

The new part D also would require that appropriate emphasis on activities consistent with national neighborhood priority programs be given by the lead agencies under the urban neighbors programs in developing and supporting community revitalization and person-to-person service projects.

Mr. President, the administration has stated it will request that $40 million be appropriated for fiscal year 1979 to carry out the urban neighborhood volunteer programs authorized by the new part D. These new programs would relate to a larger strategy to combat urban problems which the Carter administration proposed on April 13, 1978.

OLDER AMERICAN VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

Mr. President, S. 2617, as reported, significantly increases the authorizations of appropriations for the older American volunteer programs administered by the ACTION Agency—RSVP, foster grandparents, FGP, and senior companions SCP—in recognition of the committee's high regard for these programs. It would retain the present purpose of the RSVP program "to help retired persons to avail themselves of opportunities for voluntary service in their community." It would combine the authorizations of appropriations for FGP and SCP in order to encourage more jointly administered FGP/SCP projects.

APPROPRIATE RECOGNITION OF ENCOURAGING CREDIT FOR VOLUNTEER WORK

The committee bill would include a new provision making it an affirmative responsibility of the Director of the ACTION Agency, in consultation with appropriate governmental units, to take all appropriate steps to encourage State and local governments, charitable, and service organizations, and private employers first to take into account experience in volunteer work in the consideration of applicants for employment and second to make provision for the listing and description of volunteer work on their employment application forms.

NONDISCRIMINATION PROVISION

The committee bill would extend the nondiscrimination provisions of the present law pertaining to volunteer service to include title VI of the Civil Rights Act, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975, so as to cover both volunteers serving in programs authorized by the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 and volunteer applicants. It would charge the Director to establish a remedy process for volunteers and applicants for volunteer service in programs under the ACTION Agency (including Peace Corps service).

RURAL PROGRAMING EMPHASIS

Mr. President, S. 2617 as reported includes provisions to insure that the ACTION Agency gives appropriate focus to programing in rural as well as urban areas.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that a table showing the authorizations of appropriations in the bill as reported be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the table was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

TABLE 1.—Authorizations of appropriations in S. 2617 as reported

Title I (VISTA, UYA, discretionary programs, new urban neighborhood volunteer programs):
Fiscal year:
1979—"such sums"
1980—"such sums"
1981—"such sums"

Eliminates the VISTA earmarking and substitutes 80 percent of the title I appropriation for the present $29,600,000 antipoverty earmarking.

Title II (Older Americans Volunteer Programs):

[In millions of dollars]

| Fiscal year | Part A (RSVP) | Part B (FGP and SCP) | Total |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1979 | $25 | $55 | $80 |
| 1980 | 30 | 62 | 92 |
| 1981 | 35 | 70 | 105 |

Title III (SCORE/ACE):
Fiscal year:
1979—"such sums"
1980—"such sums"
1981—"such sums"

Title IV (Administration):
Fiscal year:
1979—"such sums"
1980—"such sums"
1981—"such sums"

CURRENT PROGRAMS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I would like to speak for a moment about the kinds of activities and accomplishments undertaken by the many volunteers now serving in the individual ACTION Agency programs.

VISTA

Since the Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA) program was created in 1964, nearly 50,000 men and women of all ages have served in its efforts to combat poverty by helping low-income persons come together and find ways to improve their lives and surroundings. They are assigned to antipoverty organizations for periods of service of 1 year or more. Volunteers are paid at a subsistence level, are on call without regard to regular working hours, and live among the people whom they are assigned to serve.

VISTA volunteers have served with groups that helped gain improvement in migrant housing, focused attention on the problem of black lung disease, secured food stamps for needy persons, encouraged parents to work for bilingual education for their children, worked for pure water to end parasite infestation, and worked to secure the rights of welfare recipients, Indians, and migrants. VISTA volunteers have helped poor people organize themselves to form consumer co-ops, to build or rehabilitate housing, to prevent highways and urban renewal schemes from destroying neighborhoods, and to assure older people the physical and financial security they deserve.

A recent evaluation showed that the fiscal year 1978 average of 4,560 VISTA volunteers will serve approximately 1,150,000 of the Nation's poor in fiscal year 1978. The average cost to the Federal Government of training, supporting, and supervising these volunteers is $5,866 for each full year of their service, compared to the $10,258 average equivalent salary that could be commanded by paid workers performing similar functions. This results in a cost/benefit ratio of 1:1.75. Their effort also resulted in bringing a project average of over $67,000 in money and program services to benefit the poverty community they were seeking to serve. Additionally, volunteers recruited on the average 14 non-ACTION volunteers to work on each project.

UNIVERSITY YEAR FOR ACTION PROGRAM (UYA)

Mr. President, the UYA program, providing full-time volunteer service in antipoverty projects together with academic credit, was the first new activity of the ACTION Agency. The concept of UYA was announced in July 1971, and a test program was begun by the Office of Policy and Program Development. In July 1972, the program was judged successful and was transferred to Domesitc and Anti-Poverty Operations' new ACTION education programs unit as an established program.

UYA programs, funded under title I of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, deal with problems of poverty. Typical UYA volunteer assignments which characterize the program's projects are: mental health/retardation, special youth service, comprehensive social service planning, housing rehabilitation/construction, early childhood/preschool education, tutoring/remedial education, delinquency/crime prevention, recreation, senior citizen programs, and prisoner/offender advocacy.

Of the 1,200 UYA volunteers active in about 50 UYA projects, 66 percent are in urban assignments, 28 percent in rural areas, and the remainder work in suburban or mixed area assignments. Of these, more than 30 percent represent ethnic and social minorities. Over one-third of UYA volunteers are from low-income families.

The ACTION Agency has indicated that it will be reviewing the UYA program model during the present fiscal year with the view of developing an alternative service-learning model. Although I look forward to reviewing this alternative proposal, I believe that the ACTION Agency should meet its current commitments to UYA grantees (which are generally funded for 3-year periods) as it develops new efforts in this area. The administration had requested no funding for UYA for fiscal year 1979. I was pleased that the members of the Human Resources Committee agreed that current commitments should be met in the interim period and included a provision to this effect in section 4 of the bill as reported.

THE RETIRED SENIOR VOLUNTEER PROGRAM (RSVP)

The retired senior volunteer program (RSVP) was developed in 1971 by the Administration on Aging, in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, to benefit older persons by providing them with a meaningful role in the community through opportunities for volunteer service. The program was transferred to the ACTION Agency on July 1, 1971.

This initial appropriation of $5 million funded a modest 11 pilot projects. The fiscal year 1977 appropriation of $20.1 million increased projects to the present 692 in the 50 States, Guam, Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands. By December 30, 1977, there were more than 240,000 RSVP volunteers.

RSVP is inherently a local community program. Each project is locally planned, operated, controlled, and supported.

In 1976, the Agency's Office of Evaluation completed a study of RSVP. The study showed where volunteers serve as follows, in percentage terms:

| | Percent of volunteers |
|---|---|
| Schools and colleges | 7.2 |
| Health care facilities, agencies, and organizations | 25.6 |
| Libraries, museums, performing arts centers | 4.4 |
| Parks, botanical gardens, zoos | .9 |
| Police departments, courts, correctional facilities | .3 |
| Other public agencies, (local, regional, State, and Federal) | 21.7 |
| Other private community service organizations (including private community ACTION agencies) | 28.2 |
| Other (nutrition sites, music festivals, information booths, handicrafts, churches, telephone reassurance, and Bicentennial planning) | 11.7 |

In its fiscal 1979 budget request to the Congress, the administration proposed a $4.7 million reduction in funding for RSVP (from the $20.1 million appropriated for fiscal year 1978). The administration explained this request as follows:

Despite its many useful projects and the genuine popularity for this program, the Citizen's Review Committee and the internal task force raised serious questions about some portions of RSVP. Their major criticism was that too many RSVP volunteers worked with people who were not members of any minority community and in settings where the income level was above the poverty line. They believed that although this was an allowable use of volunteers it should not be the primary use. The committee also felt little had been required of RSVP in the way of demonstrating useful community service beyond service to the volunteer.

As a result of these recommendations, plans are already underway to:

Support projects that directly affect minority and low-income individuals and groups. These would take precedence over projects that do not;

Thoroughly assess the relative need for expansion;

Measure the effectiveness of each project in meeting ACTION's goals; and

Focus on the projects, volunteer stations, and volunteer assignments that improve by service and advocacy the delivery of the most basic human needs.

Funding requirements have, therefore, been reduced for fiscal year 1979. During the remainder of fiscal year 1978, and throughout fiscal year 1979, RSVP project directors throughout the country will be asked to work closely with the Agency in identifying the most pressing needs in their communities and in assigning volunteers to stations which have the clearest positive impact on these needs. When this process of review has been completed, ACTION will have a higher quality program upon which to base future requests.

The proposed budget cut would have reduced the number of projects by 138, and the number of volunteers by 30,000.

The requested budget cut was met by very substantial opposition within the Congress and the public. Many RSVP volunteers expressed their concern that the reduced budget request signaled a lack of advocacy for RSVP on the part of the ACTION Agency. Numerous protests were received from recipients of RSVP service, Federal and State legislators, Governors, and other public officials. During the February 20 hearing, I expressed my own disagreement with the budget cut request, and asked the Director of the ACTION Agency to attempt to convince the administration to request a restoration. In addition, the committee chairman, the Senator from New Jersey, (Mr. WILLIAMS) and the ranking minority member (Mr. JAVITS), and other members expressed similar concerns.

On May 3, during full committee consideration of S. 2617 as reported from the subcommittee, ACTION Agency representatives advised me of the administration's agreement to make a supplemental request to the Congress for the additional $4.7 million for RSVP. Although I welcome the administration's pledge to seek restoration of the RSVP cut, I will continue to support expansion of RSVP along the lines authorized for appropriation in S. 2617 as reported.

FOSTER GRANDPARENT PROGRAM

Mr. President, in 1978, its 12th year of operation, the foster grandparent program, with a budget of $34.9 million has funded 16,500 foster grandparents serving about 42,000 children in 195 projects in every State, Puerto Rico, and the District of Columbia. In addition, the program has demonstrated its merits sufficiently to generate legislative appropriations in 24 States of $4,865,482, enough to support 1,726 additional foster grandparents.

The program was originally developed in 1965 as a cooperative effort between the Office of Economic Opportunity and the Administration on Aging in the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

ACTION Agency grants to support the operation of foster grandparent programs are awarded to public or private nonprofit agencies and organizations working in the program settings in which foster grandparents serve. Settings where foster grandparents serve include correctional facilities, pediatric wards of general hospitals, schools, day care centers, private homes and institutions for mentally retarded, physically handicapped, emotionally disturbed and dependent and neglected children. Foster grandparents serve 4 hours a day, 5 days a week, and receive a small stipend to enable them to serve without added cost to themselves.

The foster grandparent program provides volunteer service opportunities for low-income persons, aged 60 and over, to offer personalized support and care to children with exceptional needs in health, education, and welfare and related settings.

The program enables older persons to maintain a sense of personal worth and self-respect, to enrich social contacts and retain physical and mental alertness. Foster grandparents do not displace salaried staff, but complement staff care to special children with the love and personal concern essential to their well-being. The ACTION Agency is making a special effort to cooperate with communities in their efforts to deinstitutionalize children. Foster grandparents work long and hard to provide the support that makes it easier for handicapped children to adjust to a new environment.

SENIOR COMPANION PROGRAM

The senior companion program is modeled after the foster grandparent program. It expands on the concept of older persons serving children by providing opportunities for service to adults with special or exceptional needs.

Eighteen projects were funded by August 1, 1974. By February 1975, more than 1,000 senior companions were serving in rural, suburban, and urban community projects. By fiscal year 1977, there were 46 projects with approximately 3,000 volunteers nationwide. There are senior companion programs in 39 States which range in size from 52 to 120 volunteers.

The program is presently being directed primarily toward serving and helping vulnerable, frail older persons maintain independent or semi-independent living arrangements in their own places of residence. Senior companions are also helping to ease the impersonal nature of group care institutions by providing support to the forgotten and lonely and, where possible, contributing to their return to the community.

Approximately 68 percent of the senior companions are assisting their homebound peers on an individualized basis. Activities which they perform include giving peer-socialization support, observing and reporting on a client's health, social and environmental conditions, aiding in personal management of a household, and advocating improvement of a client's social support through appropriate community services.

The administration's fiscal year 1979 budget request of $7 million includes plans to expand and refine new concepts. New program elements will involve testing the feasibility of integrating senior companions into a written plan of care that addresses the social and health needs of clients.

In September 1975, a two-phased evaluation of the program was completed. Each of the original 18 projects was examined and assessed in terms of its early development, and operational procedures and progress were measured against project objectives. The study concluded that approximately 62 percent of the volunteers reported that their own physical and emotional health improved as a result of their participation in the program. The program's effect on clients served was in the study seen as having an "important impact" on alleviating loneliness and increasing their level of activity and meeting other basic needs.

OTHER PROGRAMS

Mr. President, in addition to these specifically authorized domestic volunteer programs, the ACTION Agency administers or supports a number of smaller-scale part-time volunteer programs designed to meet a broad range of human needs. They include projects in which volunteers serve as personal advocates for mentally retarded persons, programs in the areas of criminal justice, economic development, and conservation efforts.

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the section-by-section analysis from the committee report, setting forth in detail the provisions of S. 2617, as reported, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the analysis was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SECTION-BY-SECTION ANALYSIS OF S. 2617 AS REPORTED

Section 1 establishes the short title of the bill as the "Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978".

Section 2(1) amends section 103(b) of the Act to modify the career provisions for low-income VISTA volunteers by requiring that a plan for each such volunteer designed to provide opportunity for job advancement or for transition to a situation leading to gainful employment be developed within 30 days after the assignment of the volunteer, rather than prior to such volunteer's assignment. Section 103(b) is also amended to provide that such career development assistance be provided to any other volunteer (enrolled for at least 1 year of full-time service under title I) who requests such assistance.

Section 2(2) amends section 103(d) of the Act which presently prohibits the assignment of volunteers to a State unless the Governor has been given 45 days advance notice of the project and has not disapproved it, and provides that if a Governor requests the Director to terminate the assignment of a volunteer within a State, the Director must do so within 30 days. The amendment requires a Governor to state, in writing, the reasons for disapproval of a project or the assignment of a volunteer, or of a request for termination of a project or a volunteer. In either case—an initial disapproval or a later request for termination—the Director of the ACTION Agency may disagree, after reviewing the statement of reasons given by the Governor, based on a determination that the project or the assignment of a volunteer is fully consistent with the provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of the VISTA program. Any such determination must be in writing. This authority is derived from that contained in section 242 of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended, (42 U.S.C. § 2834), with respect to community action programs.

Section 3 amends section 105(a)(2) of the Act, relating to the payment of volunteers' end-of-service stipends, to make it consistent with a similar provision in the Peace Corps Act. The purpose of the amendment is to authorize advances of the end-of-service stipend under such conditions as the Director of the ACTION Agency shall determine, rather than only in "extraordinary circumstances," as is the case at present. Under the new provision, the Director could, for instance, authorize the advance of part of the end-of-service stipend for purchase of U.S. Savings Bonds, as has been done with respect to the readjustment allowances of Peace Corps volunteers.

Section 4 amends section 114(a) of the Act, which currently prohibits the expenditure of more than 10 percent of the first $6,700,000 of the service-learning program appropriation for programs other than UYA.

The amendments would raise the 10 percent to 15 percent, and reduce the $6,700,000 to $4,600,000, so that if the full $4.6 million is appropriated, the requisite amount to continue current commitments to UYA would be provided (approximately $3.9 million) in addition to allowing expenditure of the amount in the administration's budget request for non-UYA service-learning activities ($605,000). The administration requested no funds for UYA for fiscal year 1979.

Section 5(1) amends section 122(a) of the Act—the Director's discretionary special volunteer and demonstration project authority—to include specific mention of a program to provide assistance to victims of domestic violence and the "Helping Hand" and fixed-income counseling programs authorized by new section 134 (1) and (2) as added by section 6 of the committee bill as among the special volunteer or demonstration programs that the Director is authorized to conduct under part C of title I of the act. The Congress is currently considering legislation to assist victims of domestic violence which recognizes the important role of volunteers in mounting successful programs (S. 2759 (section 14(a)) also being reported from this committee on May 15). This modification in the act should encourage further programing by the ACTION Agency in this critical area. Section 122(a) is also amended to make clear that all these special programs should be carried out in both urban and rural areas, and to clarify the authority provided in the 1975 amendments to part C of title I for the Director to recruit, select, and train volunteers for part C special volunteer programs (the provision is moved from subsection (c) to subsection (a) of section 122).

Section 5(2) revises subsection (c) of section 122 to allow the Director, for the first time, to provide, except for stipends (end-of-service allowances), support for short-term, part-time volunteers provided they are enrolled for periods of service of 20 hours or more per week for 26 or more consecutive weeks. The amendment also (1) requires that full-time volunteers serving part C programs take the same oath required for VISTA volunteers by section 104(c), that the Director insure that they have sufficient support to carry out their assignments (as required for VISTA volunteers by section 105(b)), and that the Governor's approval provisions in section 103(b)—as revised by section 2 of the committee bill—would also apply to their service; (2) provides the Director with discretionary authority to provide stipends, in amounts not to exceed the stipends for VISTA volunteers, to full-time, full-year volunteers enrolled under part C programs (such as the National Youth Service demonstration program); and, with respect to those full-time, full-year volunteers whose service under part C is of similar character to VISTA service under part A, requires application of the provisions of section 103(b) (relating to employment counseling and services to low-income community volunteers), section 104 (d) (relating to grievance procedures), and section 105(a) (relating to the payment of stipends) to the extent those provisions are applied to part A volunteer service.

Section 6(a) amends title I of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (Public Law 93-113) by adding a new part D—"Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Programs." The new part D combines provisions of the Javits proposals for an Urban Service Corps (S. 2740), Senator Cranston's proposals, and the Carter administration urban policy proposals (submitted on April 13, 1978) for a new partnership among governments, voluntary associations, local businesses, neighborhood groups, and individuals to work for urban social and community development. The strength of the approach in new part D lies in its recognition of the vital role which can be played by neighborhood groups through volunteer activities and through teaming volunteers and paid workers to combat urban ills, and in the opportunities it provides for residents of all ages to join together in urban areas in providing person-to-person services to persons in distressed urban areas and elsewhere who need special help to overcome isolation and poverty, poverty-related, or near-poverty conditions.

The new programs authorized by the new part D includes "Urban Neighbors Programs" and "National Urban Neighborhood Priority Programs" (which shall include a program designated "Helping Hand," a program to provide personal and group financial counseling to low- and fixed-income individuals, and another national urban neighborhood priority program to be determined by the Director each year to carry out the purpose of the new part D).

NEW PART D—"URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS"

New Section 131 sets forth the purpose of the new part—to strengthen and encourage the involvement of individuals, neighborhood groups, voluntary associations, labor organizations, local enterprise, local governments, and other local entities (including community action agencies) in community revitalization and person-to-person service activities in distressed urban neighborhoods; and to build on the capacity of existing and emerging neighborhood groups, through the assistance of part-time and full-time volunteers, to assist in efforts to reverse deterioration and improve the quality of life in their neighborhoods.

Program emphasis is directed to problems associated with poverty. As part of title I, the title I 80-percent poverty/poverty-related earmark (as added by section 14(1)(B) of the committee bill) would have application to expenditures under the new part D, but only as part of the total amount expended for title I programs of which section 501(a) (as amended by the committee bill) requires 80 percent be expended for poverty and poverty-related purposes.

Subsection (a) of new section 132 provides the Director of the ACTION Agency with the authority to establish and operate programs and projects pursuant to the new part D. In authorizing the Director to conduct programs, or to make grants to and contracts with public agencies and private nonprofit organizations, the committee is paralleling the statutory language found in sections 112 and 122(a) of the act. The committee recognizes with regard to the new section 132, as with these other two authorities, that the most appropriate mechanism may be a cooperative agreement, as authorized by Public Law 95-244 (92 Stat. 5). It is not the committee's intention to preclude the use of these types of agreements in appropriate cases.

New Subsection (b) of new section 132 provides that volunteers working in the new part D programs would serve under the same terms, conditions, and restrictions, and would receive and accrue and be subject to the same limitations as volunteers of similar character serving in programs under the various authorities of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973. These provisions will serve to encourage—as subsection (b) also requires—the working together of volunteers from various age groups and of volunteers able to commit themselves to various periods of full-time and part-time service, while insuring that volunteers serving under this part receive no more or no fewer benefits than volunteers of a similar character serving in other programs under the act, such as VISTA, Foster Grandparents, or RSVP.

Thus, all full-time volunteers would be deemed to be Federal employees to the extent provided in section 415 of the Act, except that section 415(d) relating to noncompetitive appointment to the competitive civil service would not apply to any such volunteers. To the extent that full-time volunteers are enrolled for a full year of service, they would be eligible to receive both stipends and allowances, not in excess of those paid to VISTA volunteers. Part-time volunteers would not be eligible to receive either stipends or allowances, except that volunteers enrolled for not less than 20 hours per week for at least 26 weeks could be paid appropriate allowances (but not stipends). To the extent that volunteers under this part meet the eligibility requirements of section 404(g) of the Act, relating to income disregard for public assistance eligibility, that section would apply to them.

New subsection (c) of new section 132 provides that administrative expenses (appropriated under section 504 of the act) for carrying out the new part D may not exceed 15 percent of the amount available for carrying out part D programs.

Section (a) of the new section 133 establishes "Urban Neighbors Programs" under which the Director—with the concurrence of the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of an urban area with distressed neighborhoods—would designate and provide financial assistance to a "lead agency" to coordinate and support community revitalization and person-to-person projects in distressed urban neighborhoods.

Lead agencies will generally be public or private, nonprofit organizations. Local government agencies, community action agencies, community colleges, broad-based coalitions of neighborhood groups, church organizations, and other voluntary agencies would be logical candidates for the local lead agency role. Critical in the selection of the lead agency will be the demonstrated effectiveness of the applicant in earning acceptance on the part of residents of the area to be served, in establishing firm and ongoing relationships with the business, academic, and public service communities in the area, and in its capacity to mobilize volunteers and broker for volunteer assistance on behalf of neighborhood groups. In some communities, community action agencies of demonstrated effectiveness may offer the best mix of these qualities.

The committee expects that no new entities will be created solely for the receipt of the lead agency grant, although in some cases new coalitions of existing groups might be designated a lead agency. The committee further expects that funds granted to lead agencies will not be used to duplicate nor supplant existing efforts.

The "lead agency" would be required to provide staff consisting of a team or teams of paid employees and volunteers (each team composed of one professional employee familiar with the neighborhood and the support systems which can assist in its revitalization, at least one full-time volunteer, and part- and full-time volunteers) and essential support staff. Their work would include—

(1) the recruitment, on a request-for-service basis, of volunteers who possess needed skills (such as lawyers, architects, city planners) and the matching of such volunteers with neighborhood groups requiring their skills with appropriate emphasis on activities consistent with the national neighborhood priority programs established under section 134;

(2) the development of a resources bank listing locally recruited persons willing to volunteer to work with the neighborhood groups in carrying out community revitalization and person-to-person projects;

(3) the encouragement of the development of neighborhood groups in distressed urban neighborhood to carry out such projects;

(4) the coordination and facilitation of volunteer assistance available through regional resource centers, also authorized under the new part (section 133(b)(1)); and

(5) such other activities consistent with the provisions of the new part as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of the part.

The process of lead agency selection will be based on a partnership with the chief elected official who will be involved in the process from the outset. No proposal will be funded without the concurrence of the chief elected official. The committee expects this process will include the following operational steps:

1. First notice of availability of "urban neighbors programs" grants will go to the mayor.

2. The ACTION Agency and the mayor will work together in developing a proposal from the lead agency.

3. A letter of support from the mayor will be required as part of all lead agency proposals.

New subsection (b)(1) of new section 133 includes, as part of the "urban neighbors programs", provision for regional resource centers to provide scarceskill volunteers to neighborhood groups and to coordinate and provide technical assistance to the activities of lead agencies across the Nation. In addition, authority is provided for the centers to make payments of essential job-related expenses (such as travel or out-of-pocket expenses) for volunteers serving under the new part D. The subsection restricts to $100,000 annually the amount of financial assistance which may be provided for salaries and related expenses for the regional resource centers.

New subsection (b)(2) of new section 133 authorizes the Director, as part of the "urban neighbors programs," to make neighborhood seed money grants (similar to the successful "mini-grants" program now operated by the ACTION Agency)—after consultation with the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of the urban area involved—generally averaging $5–7 thousand, but restricted to not in excess of $15 thousand nor a total of more than $30 thousand over any 3 fiscal years to a particular entity for use in a particular neighborhood. The purpose of these grants is to promote volunteer activities in community revitalization and person-to-person service projects and provide volunteers working in neighborhood groups with such materials, tools, supplies, training, and administrative support as the Director deems necessary to enable such volunteers to work effectively in such projects. The grants would be made to non-profit organizations in distressed urban neighborhoods either directly or for distribution by lead agencies. Not more than 30 percent of the sums appropriated for the new part shall be used to fund the neighborhood seed-money grants program and the regional resource centers.

The committee anticipates that in recognition of the small amounts of these grants, the agency will develop simplified application and audit procedures.

With respect to the requirement for consultation with the mayor or chief elected official of the urban area in which a seed money grant would be made, the agency has advised the committee that a time-limited mayoral concurrence process will be followed as follows:

1. Advance Notice.—Upon receipt of proposals from neighborhood groups the ACTION Agency will send a letter to the appropriate mayor or chief elected official. This letter will notify the mayor that the proposals have been submitted.

2. Formal Notice of Intent.—After the ACTION Agency has screened the proposals and selected the finalists, the ACTION Agency will notify the mayor or chief elected official of the intent to award a grant. The mayor will have 30 days to communicate concurrence or nonconcurrence. If the mayor takes no action within 30 days the grant will be awarded. If the mayor informs the ACTION Agency within 30 days that he or she does not concur within the 30 days period, no award will be made.

In focusing the urban neighborhood volunteer programs on distressed urban neighborhoods, it is the intention of the committee to provide the Director with authority to provide assistance to a wider range of neighborhoods and communists than those that meet the test of a poverty target area because they have a high proportion of low-income residents. Neighborhoods might be suffering from stress, for instance, because of a combination of some or all of the following: racial tensions, deterioration or lack of needed municipal services, instability of population, deterioration of housing stock, displacement of residents, or any one of a number of other conditions which combine to prevent the realization of a vital, stable urban environment. The committee expects that the Director will develop standards for determining those areas which may be considered distressed.

The committee also recognizes that the term neighborhood is an imprecise one, and intends that it shall be interpreted to include logical groupings of individuals and families in contiguous areas who are affected in common by the problem sought to be addressed, without regard to traditional political or other subdivisions.

New section 134 establishes "urban neighborhood priorities program," which the Director is mandated to develop and carry out, with two mandated programs: (1) "Helping Hand," utilizing person-to-person services to reduce the necessity for institutionalization and to ameliorate residential isolation of older, handicapped (physically or mentally) and other persons, stressing interactions between persons from various age groups, particularly young and old, and requiring that the Director coordinate programs under "Helping Hand" which assist handicapped persons with the appropriate State system for the protection and advocacy of persons with developmental disabilities; and (2) a program designed to provide personal and group financial counseling to low- and fixed-income individuals, utilizing volunteers with specialized or technical expertise. The new section also authorizes the Director to add each year (and continue thereafter) a new priority program to stimulate and initiate improved methods of utilizing volunteers to carry out the purpose of the new part.

In addition to the agency's developing the new "helping hand" program to serve handicapped and other persons, the committee expects the ACTION Agency to provide greater visibility and opportunities for handicapped people to participate in each of its programs. This emphasis is expressed in the amendments to the nondiscrimination provisions (section 417) of the act, made by section 13 of the committee bill, to prohibit discrimination against handicapped individuals among others, in any ACTION Agency assisted or administered volunteer program.

The committee wishes to stress that it is not its intention that the person-to-person services authorized by the national urban neighborhood priorities programs be limited to individuals living in distressed neighborhoods. These services are designed to assist individuals, and are not necessarily related to the place of residence of the person being served.

The administration has indicated it will seek the appropriation of $40 million to carry out the new part D porgram for fiscal year 1979.

Section 6(b) amends the table of contents of the act to reflect the addition of new part D made by subsection (a) of section 6.

Section 7(1) amends section 201 of the act—the RSVP program authority—by reducing from 10 to 45 days the time which is given to State agencies on aging to comment on proposed RSVP programs, the same time period permitted for review of foster grandparent and senior companion program project applications (which review period is continued in the amendments to section 212 (a) made by section 7 of the committee bill).

Section 7(2) also adds a new subsection (d) to section 201 to make clear that RSVP volunteers are not employees, either of the ACTION Agency or of local sponsoring agencies, for any purpose which the Director of the ACTION Agency finds not to be fully consistent with the provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of the act. This clarification is necessary because questions are being raised in several States as to whether RSVP volunteers must be covered by workers' compensation. RSVP volunteers do not receive compensation, they must be over 60 years of age, and they serve for relatively short periods of time each week. The ACTION Agency requires that all RSVP volunteers be provided with medical insurance to cover costs associated with any injury to the volunteers. Self-insured sponsors, such as public agencies, cover the volunteers under their own policies. For non self-insured sponsors, the ACTION Agency makes available a policy of medical insurance.

RSVP service has never been considered as employment. Application of a State requirement that they be covered by workers' compensation laws would clearly be inconsistent with the purpose and volunteer nature of the program, and would increase the cost of the program, thereby making it available to fewer older persons than are now participating.

Section 8 modifies provisions in section 212(a) of the Act—the foster grandparent and senior companion program authority—which have tended to result in an absolute preference for the award of foster grandparent or senior companion grants or contracts to State agencies on aging (in the case of a proposed project area which is more comprehensive than one community) or to community action agencies (in the case of a proposed project area entirely in a community served by a community action agency) by providing that grants or contracts shall be awarded to such agencies in these situations unless there are no such agencies or unless such agencies have had 45 days to examine and make recommendations on other such project applications. In order to be approved, it is required that applications from other than these two agencies must contain satisfactory assurances that those applications have been developed and will, as appropriate, be carried out in consultation with these two agencies. These requirements will more nearly approximate the treatment of such agencies for purposes of RSVP project application under section 201(c) of the act.

Section 9 amends section 404(g) of the act—the income disregard provision for previous public assistance recipients—by adding a new paragraph (2) providing that full-time, title I volunteers may not be denied during their service public assistance or food stamps for which they were eligible before service because of a refusal to register for, seek, or accept employment or training during the period of their enrollment.

The new paragraph resolves an unintended conflict between the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 and the work incentive provisions of title IV of the Social Security Act, which require that recipients of aid to families with dependent children (AFDC) register with a sponsor of the work incentive (WIN) program for manpower services, training, and employment as a condition of eligibility for AFDC (and resultant medicaid eligibility). More recently, eligibility for food stamps has been conditioned on a similar requirement (section 6(d)(1) of the Food Stamp Act of 1977 (Public Law 95–113, section 1301)).

Section 103(b) of the Act contains explicit authority for the Director of the ACTION Agency to enroll low-income individuals as full-time volunteers, and requires that, as part of their service, they receive an individual plan designed to provide an opportunity for job advancement or transition to gainful employment. Section 104(b) requires that all volunteers in the VISTA program be enrolled for periods of service of at least 1 year, with limited exceptions. Section 404(g) of the Act provides that payments to volunteers under the Act shall not reduce or eliminate the level of or eligibility for assistance or services any such volunteers may be receiving under any governmental program.

It is the intention of these provisions that low-income persons should be encouraged to participate in programs of voluntary service, and that the allowances they receive not be counted as income to reduce public assistance benefits for which they or their families were eligible prior to commencing volunteer service. The purpose of this provision is to assure that the families of these volunteers would continue to receive the same level of benefits, for instance medicaid coverage for children, during the volunteer's service as they received prior to the commencement of the service. A WIN registration requirement would disqualify for AFDC, medicaid, and food stamps benefits the families of individuals who are otherwise qualified but who cannot participate in training or register for or seek employment because of their enrollment as volunteers.

Volunteer service provides a positive benefit to the volunteer as well as to the community, and low-income volunteers and their families should continue to receive throughout their service public assistance benefits to which they were entitled before becoming volunteers. If they are required to accept training, or to seek employment, during their service as a condition to receiving benefits, their service will be disrupted, to the detriment of the individual and the community.

Section 10 amends section 410 of the Act, relating to coordination of programs, to require the Director, in consultation with the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission and the Secretaries of Labor, Commerce, and the Treasury and officials of other appropriate departments and agencies, to take all appropriate steps to encourage State and local governments, charitable and service organizations, and private employers to take into account experience in volunteer work in the consideration of applicants for employment, and to make provision for the listing and description of volunteer work on all employment application forms.

The concepts embodied in this section were earlier introduced by Senator Cranston as part of Senate Concurrent Resolution 21, expressing the sense of the Congress that experience in volunteer work should be taken into account for this purpose. Volunteers acquire valuable skills, which, if remunerated, would no doubt be immediately marketable. But the irony of volunteer work lies in the tendency of employers to measure contributions and skills only by the amount of money expended to secure them. The result is that the value of the contributions made and the skills developed by those dedicated enough to work for little or no pay too often have been underrated.

This section seeks to turn around this situation by making it an affirmative responsibility of the ACTION Agency to encourage employers to take a new look at whether they give sufficient consideration to volunteer experience in the information requested on their standard application forms, and to take positive action to improve the situation. The Civil Service Commission standard form for application for Federal employment (SF–171) already contains an appropriate provision for the listing of volunteer work.

Section 11(1) (A), (B), and (C) amend section 415(b) of the Act—the provision deeming volunteers as Federal employees for certain purposes—to provide that, in addition to the full-time, full-year volunteers now covered under this section, part-time volunteers enrolled for periods of service of not less than 20 hours per week for at least 26 consecutive weeks are deemed to be Federal employees, as the Director determines is appropriate, for the purposes of the Hatch Act, the Internal Revenue Code, title II of the Social Security Act, the Federal Tort Claims Act, and the Federal Employees Compensation Act. (The committee, however, does not expect part-time volunteers to be covered by the Hatch Act, and, indeed, feels that such coverage should be determined by the Director to be inappropriate.) The previous lack of authority to provide appropriate coverage to less than full-time, full-year volunteers has been impediment to the enrollment short-term full-time volunteers.

Section 11(1)(D) further amends section 415(b) of the Act by deeming full and part-time volunteers covered under this section to be Federal employees for the purposes of section 5584 of title 5 of the United States Code, which authorizes the waiver of collection of erroneous overpayments of pay to Federal employees, up to a limit of $500, where collection would be against good conscience and not to the advantage of the Government. This authority is already available with respect to Peace Corps volunteers, and is necessary because the agency has, in the past, been required to attempt recovery of relatively small overpayments, with consequent damage to volunteer morale and loss of substantial parts of the volunteers' end-of-service allowances. Volunteer in-service allowances are designed to meet only basic needs, and are insufficient to permit repayment of overpayments. In addition, the administrative cost burden to the agency has been substantial in relation to the relatively small amounts recovered.

Section 11(2) makes the Federal Tort Claims Act the sole available remedy of an individual making a medical malpractice claim as a result of actions by a volunteer serving in a health-care capacity. At present, the individual can elect to make a claim against the Government, or against the individual volunteer. Since volunteers serve for no personal gain and are paid only minimal allowances, not sufficient to pay for expensive medical malpratcice insurance, the agency's ability to attract individuals to serve in health-care programs is severely limited by its present inability to give assurance that there is no possibility of a ruinous malpractice claim against the individual volunteer. This section is similar to the malpractice provisions contained in section 4116 of title 38 of the United States Code which applies to health personnel employed by the Veterans' Administration and similar authority in section 224 of the Public Health Service Act (42 U.S.C. 223) applicable to commissioned officers and employees of the Public Health Service.

Section 12 amends section 414 of the Act to insure that the Director, in assuring that equitable distribution be made of benefits and service to residents of rural and urban areas, takes into account the various regions of the country as well.

Section 13(1) amends section 417(a) of the Act—the provision prohibiting discrimination in programs receiving financial assistance under the Act—to provide that the assignment of volunteers under programs authorized by the act shall be deemed to be the provision of Federal financial assistance for purposes of the anti-sex-discrimination provision presently incorporated by reference in subsection (a) of section 417 as well as for purposes of title VI of the Civil Rights Act, section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975. This new provision will assure that minority individuals or those with handicaps, or other conditions which do not interfere with their ability to perform volunteer service, will have remedies against any discrimination by any project or sponsor under the Act if such individuals desire to participate in or secure the benefits of these federally supported volunteer programs.

Section 13(2) adds a new subsection (c) to section 417 to make the policies (and remedies thereunder) set forth in section 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964, as amended (42 U.S.C., section 2000e–16), title V of the Rehabilitation Act, and the Age Discrimination Act, applicable to volunteers and applicants for volunteer service under the ACTION Agency (including Peace Corps service). At present, since volunteers under title I are not deemed employees of the Federal Government, they have no formal remedy in cases of racial, religious, age, sex, or handicap discrimination. The new subsection charges the Director of the ACTION Agency to establish (generally within 90 days after enactment) a remedy process for volunteers and applicants for volunteer service, after consulting with the Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council (whose responsibilities have now been transferred to the Equal Employment Opportunity Commission by Executive order), the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Interagency Committee on Handicapped Employees. Since the committee has received indications that such discrimination—particularly with respect to victims of cancer who were perceived by others to be "handicapped"—has taken place within the Agency in the past, it wishes to underscore its view that a volunteer or volunteer applicants' ability to perform a volunteer assignment should be the determinative factor in the selection and assignment process.

Section 14 amends title V of the Act—providing authorizations of appropriations—to provide authorizations of appropriations for the ACTION Agency domestic programs for fiscal years 1979, 1980, and 1981.

Clause (1) amends section 501 of the Act to provide an authorization of appropriations for programs under title I of the Act (National Volunteer Anti-Poverty Programs), as follows: such sums as are necessary, except that 80 percent of the funds appropriated pursuant to title I must be spent on programs to eliminate poverty and poverty-related human, social, and environmental problems. The Act now stipulates that not less than $29.6 million shall be used for this purpose. Section 501 (a) and (b) is also amended by deleting the earmarking for the part A VISTA program and deleting subsection (b) which sets forth a formula for distribution of funds appropriated for title I in excess of $37.6 million. These changes are made to provide greater flexibility to the Director in carrying out title I.

Clause (2) amends section 502 of the act to authorize appropriations for older American volunteer programs (retired senior volunteer program, foster grandparents, and senior companions) under title II of the act as follows:

| Program: | Millions |
|---|---|
| RSVP | $25,000,000 |
| FGP and SCP | 55,000,000 |
| Fiscal year 1980: | |
| RSVP | 30,000,000 |
| FGP and SCP | 62,500,000 |
| Fiscal year 1981: | |
| RSVP | 35,000,000 |
| FGP and SCP | 70,000,000 |

Specific breakdowns of appropriations between the foster grandparent and senior companion programs would be deleted in order to provide encouragement for more jointly administered FGP/SCP projects.

Clause (3) amends section 503 to authorize the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary for fiscal years 1979, 1980, and 1981 for programs utilizing business volunteers under title III of the Act. These programs were transferred to the Small Business Administration by Executive order in 1975.

Clause (4) amends section 504 to authorize the appropriation of such sums as may be necessary for the ACTION Agency to perform administrative functions in fiscal years 1979, 1980, and 1981.

Section 15 requires that the Director of the ACTION Agency submit a report to the appropriate committees of Congress, not later than February 1, 1979, on the special needs and circumstances to be addressed in designing programs under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 for implementation in rural areas, and a strategy and timetable for meeting such needs and circumstances. This section is included to insure that the ACTION Agency does not neglect its responsibilities to rural areas it develops the new "urban neighborhood volunteer programs" authorized under the new part D added to title I of the Act by section 6 of the committee bill. The committee expects that the needs of migrant workers will be considered in the development of rural programming strategies.

CONCLUSION

Mr. CRANSTON. Before closing, I want to express my particular appreciation to the cosponsors of S. 2617, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS), chairman of the Committee on Human Resources, the Senator from Michigan (Mr. RIEGLE), the ranking majority member of the Child and Human Development Subcommittee, and the Senator from New York (Mr. JAVITS), who is our ranking minority member on the Child and Human Development Subcommittee. I would also like to recognize the special contributions made in the development of S. 2617 by their staffs and other staff members of the Committee on Human Resources, particularly Fran Butler, Susanne Martinez, Bonnie Connors, Pat Markey, Craig Polhemus, and Jack Andrews. I want especially to thank Jim O'Connell and Diane Kamino of Senator JAVITS' staff, who made major contributions to the development of the urban neighborhood volunteer programs provisions in S. 2617, and Dave Rust and Jeff Lewis for Senator DOMENICI, Scott Ginsburg and Lori Hansen for Senator NELSON, and Mary Wheat for Senator DOLE, who worked so hard with the majority and minority staff of the committee to develop the floor amendment we will be offering. I also want to thank for their great cooperation Sam Brown, Dan Maldonado, Bob Martin, Tom Glynn, Kathy Garmezy, Dana Rodgers, and Marge Tabankin of the ACTION Agency.

Mr. President, S. 2617, the committee bill, will enable the continuation of these fine programs for an additional 3 fiscal years. In addition, the committee bill reflects suggestions for modification of current law that were made by witnesses at the February 9 and 20 hearings held by the Subcommittee on Child and Human Development; it reflects provisions included in the administration's bill, S. 2823; and it reflects my own provisions and those developed by the members of the Human Resources Committee. I think we have developed a responsible legislative product, and I urge my colleagues to approve S. 2617 as reported, with one floor amendment that I am about to offer. But at this time I would like to yield to my distinguished friend and colleague from New York, Senator JAVITS.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, the S. 2617 Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978, extends for 3 years the authorization for the domestic volunteer programs in the ACTION Agency, and will enhance the ability of these programs to serve low-income and older Americans.

The committee bill would extend title I, "national volunteer antipoverty programs," which include, VISTA (part A), University Year for ACTION (part B), and the special volunteer programs (part C); title II, the "national older American volunteer programs" which include RSVP (part A) and the foster grandparents and older American community service programs (part B); and title III, the "national volunteer programs to assist small business and promote volunteer service by persons with business experience."

S. 2617 would, first, modify State Governor's approval authority for VISTA projects to make it more consistent with the approval authority for community action programs in the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended; second, make the VISTA volunteer stipend more consistent with that of Peace Corps volunteers; third, clarify the employee status of retired senior volunteers and low income VISTA volunteers; fourth, provide authority to support short-term, part-time VISTA volunteers; and fifth, enable ACTION to continue programs designed to assist victims of domestic violence.

Mr. President, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978 which is before the Senate today also contains in title I, part D, a new authority for urban neighborhood volunteer programs, to be established under the ACTION Agency. Its genesis is my own Urban Service Corps bill, S. 2740, which proposed the establishment of programs to encourage residents of urban areas to volunteer on a full- or part-time basis to help relieve the serious crisis in our central cities and other urban areas.

This is a particularly propitious time for consideration of this legislation, because a recent Gallup poll shows that 89 percent of city residents would be willing to contribute their time, efforts, or money to help resolve urban problems. The Gallup poll confirms my belief that citizens are rady to come forward and help in solving the problems of their cities. They need only the opportunity to become involved in meaningful projects that can make use of their energies and dedication.

Indeed, this was the essence of my own proposal for estabilshment of an Urban Service Corps, to tap the potential volunteer spirit that is latent in our cities.

Mr. President, in my own city of New York, we have many indefatigable and public-spirited citizens. They do not wish to stand by while their city slips so materially, as it has so in recent times. They stand ready, willing, and able to enlist in urban neighborhood volunteer programs and contribute their time and talent to the amelioration of our economic and social ills.

To help deal with such problems in New York beginning in 1975, and in cooperation with the mayor and Governor of New York, my then Senate colleague Jim Buckley, and the ranking Members of the New York congressional delegation, Representatives DELANEY and WYDLER, I caused to be established the Citizens Committee for New York City which, under the leadership of Oz Elliott—former deputy mayor of New York City, and former editor of Newsweek magazine—and Dennis Allee—his deputy and formerly my New York City executive assistant—and now Sandra Silverman as executive director, inspired thousands of New Yorkers to volunteer their time and effort to help maintain these desperately needed services.

Mr. President, I believe our experience can be a model of what can be achieved throughout our country by the establishment of urban neighborhood volunteer programs under the ACTION agency.

President Carter, in his urban initiative program proposed an urban volunteer program which, like my own proposal for the Urban Service Corps, sought to promote voluntarism by increasing the effectiveness of voluntary activities at the local level. The urban neighborhood volunteer program in part D of S. 2617, therefore, contains provisions from the President's urban package, my own bill and Senator CRANSTON'S proposals.

The thrust of the urban neighborhood volunteer program is to enlist older and younger residents of cities and other areas by mobilizing community action agencies, neighborhood groups, voluntary associations, labor organizations, local enterprises, local governments, and other local entities in community revitalization and person-to-person service activities designed to halt and reverse the decline of municipal services and the deterioration of neighborhoods.

In the urban neighbors program provided for under section 133, the Director of ACTION is authorized to make grants to—or enter into contracts with—local "lead agencies," which would be catalysts in bringing together volunteers and neighborhood groups. The lead agencies would recruit volunteers who possess needed skills and match these persons with neighborhood groups requiring such skills. Lead agencies would also maintain resources of locally recruited volunteers and, in general, would coordinate volunteer assistance in the area.

While any existing public or private nonprofit agency would be eligible for selection as the lead agency for part D—for example, the United Way, the Red Cross, or a local government social services office—special consideration would be given to a local Community Action Agency in a poverty-impacted area. Many of the CAP's have a proven record of effectiveness in encouraging constructive voluntarism at the local level, so we intend that such agencies be given every consideration for selection as the local lead agency.

Volunteers working under the urban neighbors program would emphasize services to local neighborhood groups. Efforts would be made to enlist persons with professional, managerial and technical skills, as volunteers who could advise and work with neighborhood associations in improving their effectiveness and strengthening their contributions in ameliorating problems. Examples of the activities section 133 volunteers might engage in include accountants assisting organizations which could not otherwise get such services with their record-keeping and accounting practices; engineers advising associations about space and material requirements; horticulturalists assisting in area beautification projects; artists designing esthetic improvement programs; and lawyers advising housing associations about organizational procedures. Urban volunteer programs participants would not be likely to deliver services directly to poor persons but, rather, would be engaged in assisting local organizations in improving their effectiveness in neighborhoods.

Section 133(b) contains authority for regional resource centers and neighborhood seed-money grants, both of which will improve the logistical abilities of organizations in assisting volunteer activities.

Mr. President, a unique feature of the part D, urban neighborhood volunteer programs, is the "urban neighborhood priorities program," authorized in section 134, which would include two mandated programs: Helping hand and fixed income counseling.

The helping hand program of section 134(1), for the first time, will utilize direct person-to-person volunteer services to help reduce the necessity for institutionalization of the ill and disabled and thus ameliorate the problems associated with residential isolation. In contrast to section 133 activities, the urban neighborhood priorities programs will involve direct provision of services by volunteers to needy persons. Older and younger individuals working side by side will volunteer their time and energies in hospitals, mental institutions, nursing homes, other extended care settings and other facilities to be a source of encouragement, support and help to patients. Volunteers could do such things as taking residents of senior citizen centers shopping, or assisting handicapped people to and from work, or helping individuals in mental institutions or other institutional settings in a variety of ways. Mr. President, all of us in this body understand from our own experiences that what they do will not nearly be so important as their presence; their helping hands.

Additional programs under the urban neighborhood volunteer plan would concentrate on social services, such as emergency shelters, service to the elderly or disabled and child care; and community services, such as block security, housing renovations, park beautification and sanitation. Technical and management assistance will also be provided to individuals and organizations seeking to establish or continue business in deteriorating urban neighborhoods.

The urban neighborhood volunteer programs will provide an opportunity for our Nation's citizens—old and young—to take part in a positive work-service experience. With proper safeguards to protect existing employees, volunteers can work in their own urban neighborhoods, and can be utilized for such services as block security, child care, park beautification, and home improvement projects. Such qualitative and one-on-one services in the cities have been materially diminished and the reason for this is to be found in a lack of adequate funds. Personal and esthetic services are always the first to go. The establishment of urban neighborhood volunteer programs can greatly help to improve these services and help restore the morale of our urban citizens.

Our experience now with the cities which, because of financial difficulties simply have to rely heavily upon this kind of volunteer effort has dictated the specialized applications of the volunteer principle.

Mr. President, I would be remiss in my duty if I did not pay an enormous tribute to the rank and file Americans. People want to do it. Our lists really are crowded with people for whom we have to find a slot and give whatever little training is required. But the will is there as well as the need, and that would just be belaboring the obvious to talk about the need.

So it is a necessary element that has come into American life because of the financial stringency. I think we have learned something about ourselves which we may not have known before, of how many people are ready, able, and willing to lend a hand if we give them a channel through which to do it. I am very thankful that the American people show this response.

In addition, Mr. President, S. 2617 increases the authorization for the older American volunteer programs—RSVP, foster grandparents, and senior companions—administered by the ACTION agency. The administration, in its fiscal year 1979 budget request to Congress, proposed a $4.7 million reduction in funding for RSVP, and a tacit reduction in the other older Americans volunteer programs. The Human Resources Committee, in reporting S. 2617, has supported strengthening rather than weakening of these essential programs, which provided older persons with the opportunity for volunteer service to their local communities. In the 6 years of RSVP, for example, the program's volunteer strength has grown to 240,000. These volunteers render extremely useful service to their communities in a wide range of programs designed to address basic human needs, and their numbers should be increased rather than reduced. S. 2617 will provide for their necessary expansion of volunteer strength.

Many representatives of our older American population have advocated the transfer of the older American volunteer programs currently under the administration of the ACTION Agency to the Administration on Aging in HEW. If the intent of the ACTION Agency, as expressed in the reduced budget request for these programs, is indeed to downgrade or phase out the services rendered in these programs by older Americans, then it may be appropriate to remove these programs from ACTION and return them to the Administration on Aging in HEW. While S. 2617 does not mandate such a transfer, the Human Resources Committee will continue to monitor the ACTION Agency's administration of these older American volunteer programs and the relationship of these programs to the other activities of the ACTION Agency, in order to assure that these programs best serve the needs of older American volunteers and their communities.

Mr. President, let us give our citizens the opportunity to volunteer; let us marshall their spirit, their talent, and their passion for our cities' survival in constructive ways that can best help resolve the severe problems of our distressed cities.

I ask unanimous consent that two recent articles by Neal Peirce which appeared in the Washington Post be included at this point.

There being no objection, the articles were ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

A SELF-HELP BINGE IN NEW YORK CITY

(By Neal R. Peirce)

NEW YORK.—In a perverse but important way, New York City performed a service for the nation through its fiscal crisis. From coast to coast, mayors and councils and citizens' groups began to examine their own cities' financial practices, to make sure they weren't falling into the same trough of red ink.

Now New York, on a more positive note, is showing the country what a city's people, through volunteer and self-help efforts, can do to compensate for sliced budgets and to make their own neighborhood upbeat, pleasant places to live.

The story is told in a new, 140-page "New York Self-Help Handbook." Published by the Citizens Committee for New York City (630 Fifth Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10020), it is probably the most exhaustive listing ever compiled of what citizens, on their own, can do to enhance the quality of life of their city. All of the hundreds of citizen efforts listed in the handbook are now taking place, sometimes in hundreds of locations in New York's boroughs.

The self-help binge doesn't mean that all of New York's familiar selfishness, cynicism and impersonality has been expunged. Crime (albeit reduced), indifference and exploitation remain. But only the most hard-bitten skeptic can dismiss the sense of small-town community spirit and cooperation that's sprouting on the city's blocks.

The Self-Help Handbook starts with a section on community crime prevention, including block-watcher programs, civilian car and foot patrols, auxiliary police officers and alarm systems. It goes on to parent safety patrols, property identification systems and a buddy alarm system for merchants.

Fire prevention comes next, with suggestions on how to set up volunteer fire-warden groups and fight false alarms. To back up the badly undermanned sanitation department, there are programs for block cleanups, sidewalk sweeps, litter baskets, graffiti removal, recycling centers, neighborhood dog runs and anti-litter campaigns. There are programs in community gardening, playlots, mural painting, bench painting, and how citizens can adopt and care for street trees.

The handbook reviews many programs for children, ranging from street olympics and volunteer tutorial programs to trips for youth, family day care and turning residential blocks into daytime play streets. For senior citizens, there are suggestions for local-merchant-discount programs, medical- and food-supply delivery to homebound people, escort services and telephone reassurance.

Citizen self-help was clearly needed when New York plunged into its fiscal crisis in 1975. But the Citizens Committee, founded that year with foundation support, has been an invaluable catalyst. It ran public service ads asking "greedy, heartless New Yorkers" to volunteer for work in city or social service agencies. It got 8,000 responses, and placed 2,000 volunteers. To spread the self-help gospel, the committee maintains a speaker's bureau, utilizes the media and has assembled a mailing list of 8,000 block associations, civic groups and concerned citizens.

The outside world is generally unaware of the "vibrant" life of New York's neighborhoods, says Osborn Elliott, chairman of the Citizens Committee. Of the city's 35,000 blocks, some 10,000 have organized block associations. The Citizens Committee believes it may have inspired 2,000 to start up. Active in areas from crime control to credit unions, the block associations have begun to replace New York's declining political clubs as mini-governments at the grassroots level.

At annual Citizens Committee dinners, awards are given to unsung New York heroes—people like Patricia Cordes, who set up teams of students to stop false fire alarms in an arson-torn section of the South Bronx; and Jackie and Dennis Canning, who organized their Brooklyn block to drive out prostitutes and drug pushers (one method: bombarding pimps with balloons filled with water from rooftops). The Cannings also converted a vacant, rat-infested lot into a children's playground and garden.

When the blackout and looting hit New York last summer, the Citizens Committee administered a $3-million emergency fund to encourage owners of vandalized businesses to reopen their doors—and some three-quarters did. The organization launched a "Citizen Sweep Corps" and gave away 5,000 brooms to volunteers willing to sweep their sidewalks regularly. And it has made hundreds of small grants to groups that need a little seed money ($1,000 limit, usually less than $100) for projects. A $70 grant stimulated several Manhattan women to collect $2,000 in contributions from department stores and use the proceeds to plant 3,000 flowers in front of the New York Public Library.

Elliott hopes New York's self-help record will soften congressional hearts when further emergency assistance is debated this spring. Political reality dictates Congress probably won't act unless it thinks bankruptcy is imminent. But by any objective scorecard, the city has made immense strides since 1975.

It may be years before New York is completely "out of the woods." But the despair of 1975 has given way to cautious optimism in 1978. And for that, a lot of credit goes to New Yorkers who have cared enough to help sustain their neighborhoods—and thereby their city.

PEOPLE, NEIGHBORHOODS AND THE ROSALYNN PLAN

(By Neal R. Peirce)

While President Jimmy Carter struggled for months to formulate his policy for the cities, Rosalynn Carter was at work on one of her own.

The Rosalynn Plan, which she has now formulated and outlined in an interview with me, involves no billions of dollars, no master management strategies. It is simply to use her good offices—the broad influence she has as First Lady—to encourage volunteerism and self-help, and to stimulate business and foundation support to revitalize neighborhoods and provide fresh opportunities for the disadvantaged people of the inner cities.

Mrs. Carter will pay major attention to neighborhood and civic activities in Washington. "That's where I am; that's my community," she says. But she will also, from time to time, travel the country visiting neighborhoods with successful programs in youth employment, housing rehabilitation, commercial strip revitalization, neighborhood beautification and various forms of volunteerism.

Rosalynn Carter's city and neighborhood program, complementing her continuing but lower-profile activities in mental health and for the elderly, could well become the hallmark of her years as First Lady—counterpart of Eleanor Roosevelt's advocacy of the poor and Lady Bird Johnson's beautification program.

Mrs. Carter would like to counteract the prevailing attitude "that the cities are beyond hope"—to get Americans to realize that, despite deep pockets of despair, "the cities are alive." Countless self-help activities are already under way, she notes, but need to be spread further because "there's not enough money in the U.S. treasury to rebuild every city. If I can somehow get people in the whole country excited about doing things in their own communities, then I think it will be a real contribution."

It is a tall order, and the caution and modesty with which Mrs. Carter approaches most activities could militate against full success. Her own roots and experience are primarily rural and small town, and she quickly notes she has had a lot to learn about the big cities and has turned for counsel to a wide range of experts on the urban scene.

But she's proven a quick learner, and her well-known tenaciousness may stand her in good stead. She says she's intensely excited about the prospects of what she might achieve, and pledges to devote a major portion of her time to city and neighborhood activities.

It's possible the First Lady's constant exposure to the urban grass roots could bear dividends beyond the White House imprimatur she'll be placing on promising undertakings.

Her urban interests should telegraph to administration officials a continuing and deep residential interest in specific city issues. No bureaucrat is likely to be impervious to a call from the president's wife asking why a program for cities or neighborhoods is not moving forward smoothly.

Mrs. Carter is careful to say she won't let herself be put in the position of "distributing federal funds" to specific local projects. Also, by virtue of her constant access to the president (he has called her "a perfect extension of me"), Mrs. Carter may help to keep urban concerns in his consciousness, even when other domestic and foreign problems tend to preocupy or bedevil him.

The idea of active White House encouragement for urban volunteerism came from what would seem an unlikely source—Arthur Burns, then chairman of the Federal Reserve Board—in a talk with the president last October. "Jimmy came home to see me just very excited about the idea of getting the private sector involved and people in their communities excited about solving problems themselves," Mrs. Carter explains. "We talked about it a long time." Since the president "was bogged down in the energy program," the responsibility became Mrs. Carter's.

From handwritten notes, Mrs. Carter outlined the specific initiatives she's starting. She'll invite pastors from Washington churches, then national church leaders, to discuss how they can help poor people—often befuddled by bureaucratic forms—apply for government manpower program jobs.

She's trying to get private philanthropy directed toward neighborhood projects by assisting a fledgling community foundation in Washington, hoping that will set an example for other cities. She'll work with the National Council of Negro Women and other women's organizations to help them assist unskilled, low-income women who are single heads of households.

She believes there are rich possibilities in involving private citizens in work with public institutions. Already, the interest she expressed in improving conditions at D.C. General Hospital has prompted the Jaycees and the Business and Professional Women's Club to take an action interest. An architect has volunteered to renovate the lobby and construct a gift shop, the Corcoran School of Art to do graphics and wall paintings, a fabric company to install curtains and ACTION to assist with volunteer services. Mrs. Carter hopes a more positive climate will help the hospital win the accreditation it lost a few years ago.

There are some problems in the Rosalynn plan: blurry lines of staff responsibility within her office, for instance, and the question whether other communities will automatically pick up on the local programs she supports here.

But with luck in even a reasonable share of the projects she's set before herself, the onetime Navy wife and keeper of peanut warehouse accounts could well become the most influential occupant of the White House ever enlisted on the neighborhoods' side.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, may I, too, while I am on my feet and before the amendment comes in, express my deep appreciation and my gratification at being associated with the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) who is chairman of the Child and Human Development Subcommittee, which has jurisdiction over the ACTION Agency. He joined me last year in seeking an additional appropriation for ACTION for, among other things, demonstration projects in the Urban Service Corps, and has remained a working partner with me this year. I deeply appreciate his leadership in guiding the urban volunteer program authorization through the subcommittee and full committee. Also, we acknowledge the help of those with whom we worked on the amendment which will come forward, Senators NELSON and DOMENICI, for their very constructive and creative participation in the final result which is now before the Senate. and which I urge upon the Senate as a highly constructive way to utilize American talents in important services which do not displace other talents, other efforts.

Mr. President, the bill is an excellent bill. I endorse it very strongly. It does the needed things respecting volunteer man of the Child and Human Develop-service, things which we have learned from our experience.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank the Senator very much. It is a genuine pleasure to be associated with him in this and in so many other very important endeavors. He is always a great person to work with.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1455

(Purpose: To provide a process for designation of and coordination of activities by lead agencies for Urban Neighborhood Programs, to require submission of a program plan to Congress prior to initiation of such programs, to provide for expansion of Older American Volunteer Programs, and to modify the volunteer income disregard provision in existing law)

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, there is one amendment to be considered agreed to by all the parties.

Mr. President, I call up, on behalf of Senator NELSON, myself, and Senator JAVITS, the amendment to which I have referred, and ask that the reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered. The clerk will report the amendment by number.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON), for himself, Mr. NELSON, and Mr. JAVITS, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1455.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 18, between lines 13 and 14, insert the following new subsection:

"(d) In prescribing regulations to carry out this part and in designating lead agencies pursuant to section 133(a) of this Act, the Director shall consult with the Director of the Community Services Administration established under section 601(a) of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2941(a)).

On page 18, line 15, insert "(1)" after "(a)" and on line 18, insert "in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection" after "agency".

On page 19, line 3, strike out "(1)" and insert in lieu thereof "(A)".

On page 19, line 11, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(B)".

On page 19, line 15, strike out "(3)" and insert in lieu thereof "(C)".

On page 19, line 18, strike out "(4)" and insert in lieu thereof "(D)".

On page 19, between lines 23 and 24, insert the following new paragraph:

"(2) An organization which is a public or private nonprofit organization (such as a local governmental agency, a community action agency, a community college, a broad-based coalition of neighborhood groups, or other voluntary organization or agency) or a combination of such organizations may qualify for designation as a lead agency under paragraph (1) of this subsection. In the selection of lead agencies, the Director shall assure that—

"(A) an application process, pursuant to regulations which the Director shall prescribe, has been established for organizations and agencies interested in being designated as a lead agency;

"(B) public announcement has been made and other appropriate efforts have been made to provide individual notification to potentially eligible organizations and agencies of such process; and

"(C) special consideration is given to those organizations and agencies which have demonstrated their effectiveness in serving persons in distressed urban areas and in mobilizing volunteers, coordinating volunteer assistance projects, and working with other appropriate private, public, and voluntary organizations and agencies or Federal, state, and local governmental agencies, with priority given to community action agencies (as defined in section 212(b) of this Act) of demonstrated effectiveness where the program in the urban area in question will focus predominately on low-income persons served by such agency.".

On page 19, strike out lines 24 and 25, and on page 20, line 1, strike out "resource centers to support" and insert in lieu thereof:

"(b)(1) The Director is authorized to provide directly, and not by grant or contract, appropriate assistance to programs operated under this section, including

On page 20, line 8, strike out beginning with "Not more" through the end of line 10.

On page 21, between lines 6 and 7 insert the following new subsection:

"(c) With respect to activities carried out under this section to assist low-income persons residing in areas served by community action agencies (as defined in section 212(b) of this Act), lead agencies designated under subsection (a) of this section and the Director shall consult with such community action agencies, and, with respect to activities carried out under this section to assist elderly persons residing in an area served by an area agency on aging designated under title III of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended (42 U.S.C. ch. 35), such lead agencies and the Director shall consult with such agency.

On page 21, line 17, strike out "in" and insert in lieu thereof "through".

On page 22, line 8, insert "(based on the Director's determination that the activities to be carried out under such program have been demonstrated in programs carried out under part C of this title to be effective in achieving their purposes)" after "priority".

On page 16, line 12, insert "(1)" after "(a)", and on page 22, between lines 12 and 13, insert the following new paragraph:

(2) Not less than 60 days prior to instituting any programs, carrying out any activities, or making any grants or contracts under part D of title I of this Act (as added by paragraph (1) of this subsection), the Director of the ACTION Agency shall submit to the appropriate Committees of the Congress a program plan describing in particularity the proposed nature, scope, and geographic distribution of such programs, activities, grants, and guidelines proposed to govern the implementation of such part D and the specific arrangements to be made for the conduct of evaluations of such programs, activities, grants, and contracts pursuant to section 417 of this Act. Not later than 18 months after such program plan is submitted, the Director shall submit to such Committees a report on such programs, activities, grants, and contracts, including a description of all programs established and contracts and grants made under such part D and funds obligated therefor and thereunder.

On page 24, line 18, strike out "and"; on line 19, strike out "(2)" and insert in lieu thereof "(3)"; and between lines 18 and 19, insert the following new clause:

(2) insert before the period at the end of paragraph (1) (as redesignated by clause (1) of this section) a colon and "Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply in the case of such payments when the Director determines that the value of all such payments, adjusted to reflect the number of hours such volunteers are serving, is equivalent to or greater than the minimum wage then in effect under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (29 U.S.C. 201 et seq.)".

On page 30, between line 21 and 22, insert the following new section:

SEC. 14. (a) Title IV of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK

"SEC. 423. Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, the Senators from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON) and New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) have raised several questions about implementation of the new part D—urban neighborhood volunteer programs—which Senator JAVITS and I, as coauthors of the legislation, agreed should be dealt within an amendment, which we then prepared in consultation with our two colleagues, to the bill as reported, to be offered by Senator NELSON on behalf of himself, Senator JAVITS, and me. In addition, the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) wished to modify the income disregard provisions of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973—section 404(g)—and his modification is also included in our amendments. We are grateful for his help and cooperation.

I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

SUMMARY OF AMENDMENT

Mr. CRANSTON. These amendments would provide a process for designation of and coordination of activities by lead agencies for the new part D urban neighbors programs, it would require submission to Congress of a program plan prior to initiation of the part D activities, it would provide for expansion of the title II older Americans volunteer programs, and it would provide for modification of the coverage of the volunteer income disregard provisions in current law. The latter provision was proposed by my friend from Kansas (Mr. DOLE).

This amendment is, I believe, acceptable to all parties involved; it is cosponsored by the floor managers of the legislation and is acceptable to the committee. I ask unanimous consent that a description of the amendments, prepared and agreed to by the sponsors, be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the description was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

DESCRIPTION OF NELSON/CRANSTON/JAVITS UNPRINTED AMENDMENT NO. 1455 TO S. 2617

SHORT STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

These Amendments would provide a process for designation of and coordination of activities by lead agencies for the Urban Neighbors Programs (proposed in section 6 of S. 2617 as reported); require submission of a program plan to Congress prior to initiation of such programs; provide for expansion of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973's title II Older American Volunteer Programs; and provide for modification of the volunteer income disregard provisions in existing law.

SUMMARY OF AMENDMENTS

Consultation requirements

The first Amendment would amend new section 132 (added by section 6 of the bill) by adding a new subsection 132(d) to require consultation between the Directors of the ACTION Agency and the Community Services Administration both during the process of establishing regulations to carry out the new part D programs and in designating lead agencies to carry out the Urban Neighbors Programs authorized by new section 133(a).

Criteria for selection of lead agencies

The second Amendment would make clear the types of agencies and organizations that may qualify as "lead agencies" under programs authorized under new section 133(a) (added by section 6 of the bill). This amendment would amend new section 133(a) specifically by adding a new paragraph (2) stating that an organization which is a public or private nonprofit organization (such as a local governmental agency, a community action agency, a community college, a broad-based coalition of neighborhood groups, or other voluntary organization or agency) or a combination of such organizations may qualify for designation as a lead agency. Further, the new paragraph (2) would require (a) that, in the selection of lead agencies, the Director of the ACTION Agency shall assure that an application process is established for agencies and organizations interested in being designated as a lead agency; (b) that public announcement and other appropriate efforts have been made to provide individual notification to potentially eligible organizations and agencies of that process; and (c) that special consideration be given to those organizations and agencies that have demonstrated their effectiveness in serving persons in distressed urban areas in mobilizing volunteers, coordinating volunteer assistance projects, and working with other appropriate private, public, and voluntary organizations and agencies or Federal, State, and local governmental agencies. The requirement that there be "appropriate efforts" made by the agency to make individual notification to potential lead agencies does not require that any particular type of potential lead agency receive individual notification, although it is the strong intention of the sponsors, and the ACTION Agency has agreed, that community action agencies will be so notified in every case where a section 133(a) grant is being contemplated and where the Agency has decided to designate other than the CAA as the lead agency.

Role of community action agencies

The new paragraph (2) added to new section 133(a) by the second amendment would further give "priority" in the lead agency designation process—that is, a presumptive role as the lead agency—to a community action agency (CAA) of demonstrated effectiveness where the section 133(a) program in the urban area in question will focus predominately on low-income persons residing in the area served by the CAA. In such cases, it is the intention underlying this amendment that such a CAA should be designated as the lead agency unless there is strong justification for concluding that another agency in the area would be superior. This priority would not supercede the request in new section 133(a)(1) that the mayor or other chief elected official must approve of the lead agency designation.

Deletion of grant and contract authority for backup services

The third amendment would revise the new section 133(b) (added by section 6 of the bill) to authorize the Director to provide directly for backup assistance to lead agencies. Under the bill as reported the Director would have been authorized to contract or grant out for such assistance through the creation of regional resource centers. This function would now be carried out by the Agency itself through its regional and State offices. The amendment also would strike the grant and contract funding limitation in the last sentence of new section 133(b) since it would no longer be applicable.

Consultation with community action agencies and area agencies on aging

The fourth amendment would amend new section 133 (added by section 6 of the bill) by inserting a new subsection (c) to require the Director to consult regarding section 133 activities (1) with the respective CAA when an agency other than a CAA is designated as the lead agency and where section 133 Urban Neighbors Program activities will assist low-income persons served by CAA's, and (2) when Urban Neighbors Programs activities will assist elderly persons residing in an area served by an area agency on aging designated under title III of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended), with that area agency on aging.

Technical modification

The fifth amendment would rephrase slightly the parenthetical in new section 134 (1) (added by section 6 of the bill)—authorizing the "Helping Hand" program—oy making clear that senior centers, halfway-house facilities, and other types of residential settings are examples of ways to ameliorate residential isolation.

Restriction on development of new programs

The sixth amendment would amend section 134(3) (added by section 6 of the bill)—authorizing the development annually of a new National Urban Neighborhood Priorities program—by adding a parenthetical to provide that any new such priority programs have first been developed as part of programs of demonstrated effectiveness carried out by the Agency under its existing title I, part C, discretionary demonstration and special volunteer authority.

Reporting requirements

The seventh amendment would add a new paragraph (2) to section 6(a) of the bill—adding the new part D programs—to require the Director of the ACTION Agency (1) 60 days prior to implementing any activities or making any awards under the new part D to submit to the appropriate Committees of the Congress a program plan describing in particularity the proposed nature, scope, and geographic distribution of the new part D programs, activities, grants, and contracts, including the regulations and guidelines proposed to govern their implementation and the specific arrangements to be made for their evaluation; and (2) not later than 18 months after submission of the program plan, to submit to the appropriate Committees of Congress a report on the new part D activities, including a description of the types of grants and contracts made and an accounting of the funds obligated for them.

The purpose of the new paragraph (2) is to ensure accountability to the Congress in the ACTION Agency's implementation plan for carrying out the new part D programs. This provision responds directly to the suggestion for such "'report-and-wait' provisions" to deal with these type of situations, made by the President in his June 21, 1978, Message to the Congress on "The Legislative Veto".

Modification of the existing volunteer payments disregard provision

The eighth amendment would modify present section 404(g) of the Act by including an amendment proposed by Senator Dole to add a proviso to make clear that the income disregard provision in existing law applicable to volunteer payments under the Act does not apply in any case where payments to volunteers under the Act equal or exceed the applicable minimum wage. (The existing 404 (g) authority is intended to apply only in those cases where the volunteer had been receiving benefits prior to entering volunteer service.) The purpose of the modification is to make clear that Federal benefits recipients receiving employment income should not be treated differently from volunteers who receive allowance and stipend payments under the Act which are equivalent to or greater than the applicable minimum wage.

Reduction in paperwork

The ninth amendment would add a new section 423 to the Act to require the Director to take such action as may be necessary to reduce the paperwork required under the Act. This provision would be identical to the provision added (as proposed by Senator Domenici in S. 2609) to the Older Americans Act of 1965 as a new section 212 by S. 2850 as reported from the Committee on Human Resources (S. Rept. 95–855).

Expansion of older American volunteer programs and limitations on funding of new part D initiatives

The tenth amendment would amend existing section 501 of the Act (as amended by section 14 of the bill) to make a technical change in the Act to make clear that the anti-poverty set-aside in section 501(a) applies only to funds appropriated to carry out title I of the Act, and to limit the three-year authorization of appropriations for the new part D programs (from the Administration-proposed $40 million each for fiscal years 1979, 1980, and 1981) to $25 million for FY 1979, $27.5 million for FY 1980, and $30 million for FY 1981. It would further add a proviso to existing section 501 to require that at least an additional $10 million be appropriated in each of the three fiscal years over the Administration's fiscal year 1979 amended budget request of $52.6 million for the title II, Older American Volunteer Programs (Foster Grandparents, Senior Companions, and the Retired Senior Volunteer Programs), before the Agency may obligate and expend funds to undertake the new part D urban initiatives, and that the first $8.1 million of funds available for these new part D programs be obligated for the new Fixed Income Counseling and Helping Hands programs authorized by new section 134 (added by section 6 of the bill) before further obligations may be made to carry out such part D programs.

CONSULTATION REQUIREMENTS

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, Senator NELSON was concerned about the relationship of the new urban neighborhood volunteer programs to programs operated by community action agencies—CAA's.

To clarify this relationship, the amendments call for consultation between the Directors of the ACTION Agency and the Community Services Administration—both during the process of establishing regulations to carry out the new section 133 programs, and in designating lead agencies to carry out the section 133(a) urban neighbors programs. In addition, the amendments would make clear the types of agencies and organizations that may qualify as "lead agencies" under the section 133 programs. The amendment adding a section 133(a)(2) states that an organization which is a public or private nonprofit organization (such as a local governmental agency, a community action agency, a community college, a broad-based coalition of neighborhood groups, or other voluntary organization or agency) or a combination of such organization may qualify for designation as a lead agency. Further, the new paragraph (2) would provide that, in the selection of lead agencies, the Director of the ACTION Agency shall assure that an application process is established for agencies and organizations interested in being designated as a lead agency; public announcement and other appropriate efforts have been made to provide individual notification to potentially eligible organizations and agencies of that process; and special consideration is given to those organizations and agencies which have demonstrated their effectiveness in serving persons in distressed urban areas in mobilizing volunteers, coordinating volunteer assistance projects, and working with other appropriate private, public, and voluntary organizations and agencies or Federal, State, and local governmental agencies.

Mr. President, our intention here is that the major organizations such as community action agencies, United Way, the Red Cross, church organizations, social service agencies, and family service organizations, be looked at carefully as potential lead agencies and, unless infeasible, those types of organizations should receive individual notification as potential applicants—not that individual letters go to every conceivable potential sponsor—and that those that have demonstrated their ability to mobilize volunteers and develop effective relationships with other entities which can assist in the urban neighborhood volunteer programs established under the new part D be given special consideration during the selection process.

In addition, Mr. President, the amendment gives a presumptive lead agency role to community action agencies where the program in the urban area in question will focus predominantly on low-income persons residing in the area served by the CAA. In such cases, the CAA should be designated as the lead agency unless there is strong justification for concluding that another agency serving residents of the area would be superior in carrying out the purposes of a lead agency. In cases where an agency other than a CAA is designated as the lead agency and where urban neighbors program activities will assist low-income persons served by CAA's, another amendment—adding a new subsection (c) to new section 133 of the act—would require the Director to consult with the respective CAA.

Similarly, Senator DOMENICI was concerned that in cases where urban neighbors program activities will assist elderly persons residing in an area served by an area agency on aging—designated under title III of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended—the responsible lead agency and the Director should also consult with that agency on aging. We agreed, and provision for such consultation has been part of this new subsection (c).

AREAS TO BE SERVED

Mr. President, Senator NELSON also raised the question of which distressed urban areas would receive support under these new programs. I wish to make clear my intention that "bigness" not be the chief factor. Smaller urban areas may have a greater incidence of urban distress than some larger areas, and this must be taken into consideration. The question of what constitutes urban distress is addressed on pages 43 and 44 of the committee report. In this connection, Mr. President, we do not believe that the Agency should exclude urban areas from participation under part D merely because they do not meet a particular population size. Rather, the committee expects that a variety of approaches will be pursued in a variety of urban areas, ranging from the largest to some of the smallest ones, throughout—as required by section 414 of the act, as it would be amended by section 12 of S. 2617 as reported—the various regions of the country. Mr. President, the Subcommittee on Child and Human Development intends to work with the Agency in developing the criteria for determining which urban areas should receive assistance under the new part D programs.

RESOURCE CENTERS

Mr. President, section 133(b) of the reported bill would authorize the Director to provide financial assistance, by grant or contract, for the establishment and operation of "regional resource centers" to provide backup and support services to the lead agencies operating the urban neighbors programs. Both Senator NELSON and Senator DOMENICI questioned the need for setting up new structures such as resource centers, using outside organizations to carry out such a function, although both acknowledged the importance of the technical assistance function itself. We agreed, reluctantly, that a suitable modification was to authorize the Director to provide directly for such backup assistance through ACTION Agency State and regional offices and thus included in the amendment a provision providing for the direct provision of such assistance.

REDUCTION IN AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATION

Mr. President, in addition to eliminating authority to set up regional resource centers by grant or contract, we made a corresponding reduction of $1 million in the amount which is authorized to be spent for the part D programs—a reduction which, when added to additional reductions made to accommodate an increase in the older American volunteer programs which I will discuss further on in my remarks and a decrease in the need for administrative expenses, would reduce spending for the new part D from the projected $40 million to a maximum of $28,750,000 for fiscal year 1979; $31,625,000 for fiscal year 1980; and $34,500,000 for fiscal year 1981—including not more than $3,750,000, $4,125,000, and $4,500,000 in administrative expenses for each such year, respectively.

NATIONAL PRIORITY PROGRAMS

Mr. President, Senator DOMENICI had an additional concern about the nature of the discretionary national priority program which the Director is authorized to identify and carry out each year under section 134—national urban neighborhood priorities programs—in addition to the two programs—the fixed-income counseling program and the helping hand program—mandated by section 134. We agreed that any new thrusts developed under this authority should be based on programs of demonstrated effectiveness which the ACTION Agency has carried out under its existing title I, part C, discretionary authority for special volunteer and demonstration programs and, therefore, included an amendment to new section 133(3) to add that condition.

REPORTING REQUIREMENTS

Mr. President, as I have stated in my remarks describing the reported bill, the new part D—urban neighborhood volunteer programs constitute the legislative authority for the ACTION Agency's participation—the volunteer role—in the multifaceted urban policy which President Carter proposed on March 27. The basic purpose of the new part D programs is to mobilize individual involvement in neighborhood betterment and person-to-person service projects. Although I solidly support the purpose of this effort, I have already expressed by dissatisfaction with the timeliness of the urban strategy announcement vis-a-vis the legislative calendar. With respect to the ACTION Agency programs, the urban policy was announced well over a month after the conclusion of the subcommittee's hearings on the ACTION Agency, and in the middle of the process of moving S. 2617 through the committee process. The Agency's actual legislative submission was dated 7 days after the subcommittee markup.

Because we were unable to review the administration's proposal for the ACTION Agency's role in the urban strategy to the extent we would have liked, we agreed with Senators DOMENICI and NELSON to include in our amendments a reporting requirement as follows: 60 days prior to implementing any activities or making any awards under part D, the Director of the ACTION Agency shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Congress a program plan describing in particularity the proposed nature, scope, and geographic distribution of the new part D programs, activities, grants, and contracts, including the regulations and guidelines proposed to govern their implementation and the specific arrangements to be made for their evaluation. In addition, not later than 18 months after submission of the program plan, the Director must submit to the appropriate committees of Congress a report on the new part D activities, including their description and an accounting of the funds obligated for them. This provision responds directly to the suggestion for such " 'report-and-wait' provisions" to deal with these types of situations, made by the President in his June 21, 1978, message to the Congress on "The Legislative Veto."

Mr. President, we feel that such reporting requirements will help insure accountability to the Congress in the carrying out of the new part D programs. In addition, as chairman of the ACTION Agency oversight subcommittee, I intend to call a hearing 18 months after the part D programs are in place to review the Agency's record in implementing this new part D.

Mr. President, Senator NELSON prepared a very detailed letter of inquiry to Sam Brown, Director of the ACTION Agency, in which he asked many of the kinds of questions which would have been included in hearings in the new part D programs. Because his June 22, 1978, letter and the Agency's July 11, 1978, response are so descriptive of the new program, it will be included in the hearing record on the ACTION Agency programs, and Senator NELSON will be including it in the RECORD along with his remarks.

In connection with this letter, I want to stress three additional points which I feel should be a part of the legislative history on S. 2617 as reported and these amendments.

First. With respect to question 3 of the letter on the role of lead agencies in carrying out the section 133 urban neighbors program, the Agency has assured us that while in its response to Senator NELSON it emphasized the recruitment of skilled volunteers, it understands that lead agencies—assisted by the Agency itself—will also be recruiting generalist volunteers to work in community betterment and person-to-person service projects—indeed, this will be a major function of the lead agencies.

Second. With respect to questions 5 and 6 concerning fixed-income consumer counseling activities, it has always been my intention that these activities be service and informational oriented, and that volunteers involved in them take on only noncontroversial advocacy activities—such as assistance in securing benefits and advantages provided by existing law and regulation, rather than advocating new such benefits and advantages. The emphasis here is on counseling activities.

Third. With respect to the application of terms, conditions, and restrictions generally placed on volunteers serving under other programs authorized by the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973—Public Law 93-113—such as the restrictions on political activities set forth in section 403 of the act and the prohibitions on pro- or antiunion activities set forth in section 404(d) of the act, I want to make clear that the same such conditions and restrictions apply to volunteers serving under the new part D program.

REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK

Mr. President, also included in our amendment is a provision, suggested by Senator DOMENICI, that would require the Director to take such action as may be necessary to reduce the paperwork required under the act. This provision is similar to a provision included in the Older Americans Act amendments at my request during committee consideration of that legislation—now new section 212 added by S. 2850 as reported by the committee, Senate Report No. 95-855—based on a provision in Senator DOMENICI's bill, S. 2609, and I agree that it provides needed focus and a plan of action to deal with a very troublesome aspect of Government in general—excess paperwork burdens. I was pleased that during our February hearings on the ACTION Agency, Sam Brown was able to provide the subcommittee with an impressive report of the Agency's record—in response to President Carter's Government-wide directive—for reducing its paperwork requirements.

EXPANSION OF OAVP

Mr. President, finally, and most significantly, the amendment to section 501 of the act would provide that an additional appropriation of $10 million above the administration's no-growth budget request for the proven older American volunteer programs must be made available for these programs before the Agency undertakes to obligate any funds for the new part D urban initiatives. To accommodate this mandate, we have correspondingly limited the expenditures that may be made for the part D programs, as I outlined earlier. The basis for this change is our conviction that increases in funding for the proven older Americans volunteer programs should be provided before the Agency takes on new programs of such considerable size.

Mr. President, it is my preference that the majority of the $10 million be targeted for an increase in the hourly stipend provided for participants in the foster grandparent and senior companion programs, but some program expansion in title II programs is also anticipated, and the allocation of the $10 million among the three title II programs and the focus of the use of these funds is left to the Agency to determine. These hourly stipends, established in 1965 at $1.60 per hour—then the minimum wage—have never been increased. I have recommended to the Appropriations Committee that a stipend increase to $2.05 per hour be provided in the appropriate fiscal year 1979 Labor/HEW appropriations measure. If all of this $10 million increase over the administration's fiscal year 1979 budget request of $62.6 million for the older Americans volunteer programs were applied to such a stipend increase, it would provide, according to the Agency, necessary additional funds for a stipend increase to approximately $1.90 per hour.

In addition, Mr. President, this amendment would require that the first $8.1 million of funds available for the new part D programs be obligated for the section 134 fixed income counseling and "Helping Hand" programs. The Agency had previously indicated its intention to allocate $5.1 million for the fixed income counseling initiative and $3 million for "Helping Hand." Our amendment requires that the Agency adhere to this allocation projection within the overall program expenditure limitation provided by the amendments and described earlier in my remarks.

INCOME DISREGARD MODIFICATION

Finally, Mr. President, our amendment deals with a concern expressed by the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) with respect to the volunteer-payments disregard provision in existing section 404(g) of the act. The original provision in the act was designed to remove the disincentives to the enrollment in VISTA, Foster Grandparents, and the senior companions programs of low-income individuals whose preservice social security, supplemental security income, or AFDC benefits—including medicaid coverage for the children of VISTA volunteers—was jeopardized by their joining these programs. By assuring these potential volunteers through section 404(g) that their existing benefits would not be jeopardized, Congress was able to afford greater opportunity to the most needy to become involved in these community service efforts, and to make the VISTA experience a potential and viable stepping stone to future gainful employment for the low-income enrollees in that program. It was our intention, however, that individuals who meet eligibility requirements for benefits solely because of their volunteer enrollment in an ACTION Agency program, and who, except for the fact of such enrollment, would not be so eligible, should not establish an entitlement for these benefits, because of the economic status they assume by virtue of their enrollment as volunteers.

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) was concerned that the volunteer payment disregard provisions might result in unequal treatment for other such benefits recipients who also received employment income rather than volunteer payments. I agree that if a volunteer in one of these programs were to receive allowances and payments under the act, the value of which was equal to or greater than the hourly rate of the applicable minimum wage, then the section 404(g) protections should not apply to them. We, therefore, included in our amendments a proviso to this effect to be added to existing section 404(g).

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, if I may digress for a moment, I think the amendments are so important that they should be referred to specifically, because the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON) and the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI) have raised certain concerns they have about the new part D programs in title I of S. 2617.

The Senator from Wisconsin has been concerned, among other things, about the possible crowding out effects of the lead agencies described in section 133, particularly on existing community action agencies operated locally under title II of the Economic Opportunity Act. On reflection, I agreed that to the extent volunteers under this bill would be working in both poverty and nonpoverty areas, there was some danger that the CAP agencies—which are almost exclusively poverty area-oriented—might be preempted from selection as lead agencies.

Accordingly, the amendment before us has been drafted in order to secure the place of community action agencies in being designated as lead agencies under part D. Specifically, the amendment: First, mandates consultation between the ACTION Director and the Director of CSA in the preparation of regulations under section 133; and second, provides that where the program to be operated will focus predominantly on low-income persons, priority for selection of the lead agency will be afforded to community action agencies.

I commend highly the Senator from Wisconsin for bringing this matter to the attention of the committee and believe the agreed upon language greatly improves part D of the bill.

The Senator from New Mexico expressed a number of concerns to the committee, including the fact that ACTION intended to request an appropriation of $40 million for part D, even though funding for the RSVP, foster grandparents and senior companions programs has remained relatively unchanged at around $62 million. We have discussed this particular matter in detail and concluded that $10 million of the planned request for part D ought to be earmarked instead for title II older American volunteer programs.

Accordingly, our amendment provides that no funds appropriated for part D may be obligated unless not less than $72.6 million has been appropriated for section 502, the authorization of appropriations provisions for the national older American volunteer programs.

I specify that because he considered this an important element of his agreement with us, which we have duly entered into.

The Senator from New Mexico was also concerned that section 133 of part D was lacking in specifics respecting the kinds of activities volunteers would engage in on behalf of neighborhood groups. While there was no generic objection to the idea of professionals as volunteers assisting organizations in community revitalization activities—there was some concern that volunteers might get engaged in irrelevant or controversial issues.

I wish to make clear that it is our intent that volunteers not get involved in political activities. We do not, however, wish to discourage the wide range of useful activities volunteers could engage in at the local level, such as lawyers helping with tax exempt status, architects designing community recreation facilities, athletes organizing neighborhood sports programs or artists helping prepare neighborhood crafts festivals. There really is no limit to the kinds of fine activities these volunteers could undertake, so we had to be very careful in how we wrote the provisions. But I understood the Senator's concerns and know that as a former mayor of the city of Albuquerque he supports the committee's effort to design an urban volunteer program that can have such salutary effects on our cities, small and large.

What the amendment does, therefore, is to pinpoint that the activity, especially of professionals—doctors, lawyers, accountants, or engineers, which will be as volunteers, and which, by the way, will not displace activities which might otherwise be professionally engaged in—will be of a very finite nature; the activity will be defined in advance. Sixty days before commencing any program, a notice is to be filed with Congress, quoting now from the amendment, "describing in particularity the proposed nature, scope and geographic distribution of such programs."

Also, I have given assurance to Senator DOMENICI, as the ranking minority member of the committee, that I will see that there is strong oversight by the committee of the activities that are undertaken under this part D.

In my judgment, Senator DOMENICI has made a most valuable contribution to the development of this idea; one that will help to assure that the urban neighborhood volunteer programs improve the quality of living in our distressed urban areas. I thank him for his interest and concern in this regard and urge the Senate to agree to the amendment.

Mr. CRANSTON. I thank my colleague.

Mr. President, I want to acknowledge the very helpful cooperation of Senator NELSON, Senator JAVITS, Senator DOMENICI, and Senator DOLE and their very able staffs—Jim O'Connel for Senator JAVITS, Scott Ginsburg and Lori Hansen for Senator NELSON, Dave Rust and Jeff Lewis for Senator DOMENICI, and Mary Wheat for Senator DOLE, all of whom worked with us so very diligently in developing the amendments. Without their constructive suggestions and very extensive efforts, we would have been unable to reach the consensus set forth in the amendments. I want to thank in particular Senator JAVITS for his continuing strong and abiding support in working with me both in developing the part D amendment for full committee consideration on May 3, and for his constant assistance in moving the bill and the amendments to it on the floor today.

Mr. President, I am prepared to yield back all time on the amendment.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, Senator DOLE wants to put in a word.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. I thank the Senator from New York.

Mr. President, the Senator from Kansas would like to address a few points covered by S. 2617, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978.

PROGRAMS FOR SENIORS

I am particularly pleased to see the continued emphasis placed on creating meaningful service slots for senior citizens. From my mail, I know that the older Americans participating in the retired senior volunteer program (RSVP) and the senior companion and foster grandparents' programs benefit tremendously from their association with these volunteer activities.

Many have indicated that through these programs, they have regained an interest in living, they have rekindled a feeling of self-worth, and they have found a new independence. For many older Americans, these benefits have erased the guilt of dependency which they have often been made to feel. Now, equipped with a new outlook, volunteers are contributing needed services to their communities. The volunteer, his family, the recipient, and the community in general all benefit from these programs.

THE HANDICAPPED

Additionally, I am particularly pleased to note the specific emphasis given to serving handicapped citizens. I would hope that efforts will also be made to attract the handicapped as volunteers into the program. Many disabled persons have little or no work experience, and are not given much encouragement—either from society or from their family and friends—to seek employment. Consequently, they have no experience or work record.

The thrust of current law is clearly aimed toward integrating the able disabled into the work force and into positions of responsibility. I hope that S. 2617 will benefit those people who are handicapped and wanting to work, as well as those persons who are handicapped and needing some assistance.

SECTION 404(g)

Section 404(g) of the act has caused some problems over its interpretation. The intent behind this provision is to allow persons receiving public assistance at the time they volunteer to continue receiving benefits. In other words, it provides an income disregard for volunteers who were on public assistance before joining the action program.

GUARD AGAINST ABUSE

I am anxious that this income disregard not be abused. I think the Congress needs to be extremely careful that we never make job programs with the Federal Government more attractive than private employment. We also must be mindful of the fact that all citizens are entitled to equal treatment under law. It is immoral to give one low-income group preferential treatment over another low-income category.

COMPROMISE

I have discussed my concerns with the floor manager, and together we have arrived at a satisfactory compromise. We have agreed to add clarifying language to section 404(g) indicating that if any income received under this program is more than or equal to the minimum wage, it will not be disregarded under other Government programs.

This addition is necessary, for it will help reinforce the distinction between a volunteer program such as VISTA and other Government jobs programs. I am pleased that this compromise has been reached.

JUSTIFICATION OF EXCLUSION

The income exclusion is not intended to be applicable to VISTA volunteers who were not receiving welfare at the time they volunteered. We do not expect nor want persons to become eligible for welfare because of their VISTA service.

The reason for this exclusion is to make sure that welfare recipients are not discouraged from applying for volunteer service because of the possibility of losing public assistance. We want to attract many of these very individuals, for the domestic service jobs are designed to give volunteers experience in a work environment, and to instill good work habits. Furthermore, the VISTA Director is instructed to see that each low-income volunteer has an individual plan leading to job advancement or opportunities for gainful employment.

DISCREPANCIES IN THE REGULATIONS

I would like to reemphasize that section 404(g) restricts the income disregard solely to those volunteers who were receiving public assistance when they joined ACTION. There appears to be a lack of understanding concerning the intent of this provision, particularly at the departmental level.

For instance, the AFDC regulations provide as an income inclusion those payments made to VISTA volunteers (section 233.20)(a)(4)(h) of title 45 code of Federal regulations). There is no distinction made between volunteers who were or were not receiving welfare at the time they joined VISTA.

The "Food Stamp Certification Handbook," section 2263.7, excludes payments to domestic service volunteers under treatment of income. The proposed food stamp regulations, dated May 2, 1978, likewise exclude from treatment of income all payments to ACTION volunteers. These departments clearly are not administering their assistance programs in accordance with congressional intent.

Furthermore, a letter from the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare to the Department of Agriculture, reads in part as follows:

Current policy is based on the Department's opinion that there is no statutory requirement to limit the disregard to persons who were receiving public assistance prior to becoming VISTA volunteers. Therefore, the disregard is now extended to both applicants and recipients.

I ask unanimous consent that the letter in its entirety be reprinted in the RECORD following my statement.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. DOLE. This letter and these regulations point out an obvious inconsistency between the law and the implementation of the law. I trust that the accompanying Senate Report 95–823, as well as today's floor remarks, will provide helpful direction for the administration of these programs.

SOCIAL SECURITY ADMINISTRATION,
Washington, D.C., September 7, 1977.

Mr. BILL TLUCEK,
Acting Chief, State Agency Operations Branch, Food Stamp Division of Agriculture, U.S. Department of Agriculture, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. TLUCEK: This is in response to your letter of July 28, 1977 in which you request information in the form of any position paper, General Counsel opinion, fair hearing decision or potential law suit that influenced our decision to revise the HEW interpretation of Section 404(g) of P.L. 93–113 with respect to payments to Volunteers in Service To America (VISTA).

Section 404(g) of P.L. 93–113, The Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973, provides that "notwithstanding any other provision of law except as may be provided expressly in limitation of this subsection, payments to volunteers under this Act shall not in any way reduce or eliminate the level of or eligibility for assistance or service any such volunteer may be receiving under any governmental program."

Current policy is based on the Department's opinion that there is no statutory requirement to limit the disregard to persons who were receiving public assistance prior to becoming VISTA volunteers. Therefore, the disregard is now extended to both applicants and recipients.

In 1974, General Counsel held that either interpretation is permissible under the law. The Acting Administrator, Social and Rehabilitation Service chose to interpret the law as disregarding VISTA payments only for recipients at that time. A subsequent administrative decision was made in 1976 to read the law as providing for the disregard of VISTA payments for applicants and recipients. This decision also reflects the 1974 General Counsel opinion.

I hope that this information will be of value to you. If I may be of further assistance, please inform me.

Sincerely yours,

DAVID S. HURWITZ,
Acting Associate Commissioner, Office of Family Assistance.

● Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the amendment offered here today, which I have introduced with Senators CRANSTON and JAVITS, would make several improvements in the proposed urban neighborhood volunteer programs established by S. 2617, as part D in title I of the Domestic Volunteer Services Act of 1973. This amendment, which establishes requirements and procedures for consultation with other agencies, designation of lead agencies, priority selections of agencies, and program reporting, is designed to insure that the urban volunteer program does not duplicate the activities of other programs or create new agencies or structures.

DESIGNATION PROCESS FOR "LEAD AGENCIES"

The amendment establishes a process for the designation of an agency, an organization, or a group of agencies or organizations as a "lead agency" under the proposed urban neighborhood volunteer programs. A "lead agency" is the term used to describe the agency or organization, or combination of agencies or organizations, through which the urban neighbors programs, established by this legislation, will be administered. Without this amendment, the legislation would not contain provisions for a process to designate "lead agencies".

The urban neighbors programs have two separate components: one of them is to provide funding to lead agencies to support the efforts of teams of volunteers and essential support staff to carry out community revitalization and person-to-person activities in distressed urban neighborhoods, and the other component authorizes the Director of ACTION to make neighborhood seed money grants to nonprofit organizations in distressed urban neighborhoods. The nonprofit organizations may receive their funding directly from the Director of ACTION or through the lead agency.

A prescribed designation process is necessary to insure that agencies or organizations potentially eligible to participate in the programs funded under part D of title I are given appropriate notice of the new program's availability in their community and its application process. Under the provisions of the amendment the Director is responsible for establishing an application process—through the promulgation of regulations—for agencies interested in being designated as a lead agency. In addition, the Director is required to make public announcement and take other appropriate action to give individual notice to potentially eligible organizations and agencies of the programs' purposes and activities, the availability of local funding, and the application process to apply for such funds.

These particular provisions are designed to insure that potentially eligible organizations and agencies are made aware of the program's purposes, activities, and the application process. For example, community action agencies in areas eligible to participate in the program should be notified of ACTION's intent to designate a lead agency and how the community action agency would apply to be designated as a lead agency.

In every State and thousands of communities across the Nation, community action agencies are conducting community revitalization and person-to-person activities. Frankly, I was concerned that unless community action agencies were apprised of the existence and availability of urban neighborhood volunteer funds and activities, duplication of activities could occur. The Director of the ACTION Agency, Mr. Sam Brown, addressed these concerns in a letter to me. In this letter the ACTION Director indicated that the Agency was prepared to take two actions "to insure maximum cooperation at the local level between the CSA (Community Services Administration) and ACTION":

1. ACTION will notify, in writing, all Community Action Programs of the availability of funds to local lead agencies under the Urban Neighbors Program. Local CAAs will thus be notified of the availability of funds and the process of applying for them.

2. ACTION will notify, in writing, the CAA agencies of the intent to award a grant in their communities.

These actions would comply with the intent of the designation process.

Mr. President, I ask that a letter I sent to Director Brown and his response to me be inserted in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

Mr. NELSON. As part of the designation process, the Director would also be required to give special consideration to agencies which have demonstrated their effectiveness in serving persons in distressed areas, in mobilizing and coordinating volunteers and in working with other public, private, and voluntary organizations or Federal, State, and local governmental agencies. In areas which are predominantly low-income, priority for selection as a lead agency is given to community action agencies.

Community action agencies are an excellent example of the type of agency or organization which would be given special consideration for designation as a lead agency and would in fact, be given priority for selection as a lead agency in low-income areas. For instance, community action agencies usually have demonstrated effectiveness in the coordination and mobilization of volunteers, in serving the people in distressed areas, and in working with other agencies, especially Federal, State, and local agencies. Community action agencies are also well suited to accomplish the purposes of the program. In my judgment, it appears that in most areas the community action agency is probably the agency which could best further the purposes of the urban neighborhood volunteer program.

The other types of public or private nonprofit organizations that could be designated as a lead agency under this amendment, other than community action agencies, include local governmental agencies, community colleges, broad-based coalitions of neighborhood groups, or other organizations or agencies.

CONSULTATION

Mr. President. this amendment would also establish consultation requirements in order to further the coordination of activities under the urban neighborhood volunteer program with other volunteer efforts and to avoid duplication. The Director of ACTION would be required to consult with the Director of the Community Services Administration in prescribing regulations to carry out the urban volunteer program and in the designation of lead agencies. In low-income areas served by community action agencies lead agencies and the Director would be required to consult with such community action agencies regarding program activities in the area. Lead agencies and the Director would also be required to consult with area agencies on aging with respect to any activities to assist elderly persons residing in an area served by such an area agency on aging.

REPORT TO CONGRESS

Mr. President, when any new program is established, it is essential that the program's performance be monitored closely and carefully evaluated. Because certain aspects of the urban neighborhood volunteer program operation have not yet crystallized, it is very important that Congress be kept informed of the program's operations and progress. This is especially applicable to the question of how the lead agency designation process is working, what agencies or organizations and activities are being funded, which areas are being selected as distressed urban areas and which neighborhoods within these areas are receiving assistance.

This amendment would, therefore, require the Director to submit to Congress, at least 60 days prior to program implementation, an urban neighborhood volunteers program plan describing the proposed nature, scope, and geographic distribution of programs, activities, grants, and contracts, including the proposed regulations and guidelines for the program, and the evaluation plans for the program. Within 18 months after this program plan has been submitted to the Congress, the Director would be required to submit a report on the operating programs, activities, grants, and contracts, including a description of all programs, established contracts and grants.

REGIONAL RESOURCE CENTERS

The amendment would also eliminate the provision for regional resource centers established in S. 2617. The establishment of such regional centers would have unnecessarily duplicated existing regional offices and would have added to an already bloated and unmanageable Federal bureaucracy. The technical assistance activities provided for in S. 2617 could be carried out by the existing regional and State ACTION offices.

Mr. President, this amendment would also lower the authorization for appropriations to $25 million in fiscal year 1979, $27.5 million in 1980, and $30 million in 1981 from the $40 million which S. 2617 would authorize for each of these 3 fiscal years. These revised appropriation levels will enable the program to become operational at a more modest level and begin the testing phases of the program. I believe the Congress must provide for a trial period for new programs, in terms of appropriations, before commiting the Federal Government to a new program and sizable appropriation authorizations. This amendment will, in effect, provide for a trial period in this new program.

DISTRESSED URBAN AREAS

Mr. President, I have some reservations about the use of the term "distressed urban areas," primarily because the term is not defined anywhere in the legislation. The committee report accompanying S. 2617 does discuss the meaning of "distressed urban neighborhoods," but is silent as to areas in which these neighborhoods are to be found. The committee report states:

In focusing the urban neighborhood volunteer programs on distressed urban neighborhoods, it is the intention of the committee to provide the Director with authority to provide assistance to a wider range of neighborhoods and communities than those that meet the test of a poverty target area because they have a high proportion of low-income residents. Neighborhoods might be suffering from stress, for instance, because of a combination of some or all of the following: racial tensions, deterioration of housing stock, displacement of residents, or any one of a number of other conditions which combine to prevent the realization of a vital, stable urban environment. The committee expects that the Director will develop standards for determining those areas which may be considered distressed.

The committee also recognizes that the term neighborhood is an imprecise one, and intends that it shall be interpreted to include logical grouping of individuals and families in contiguous areas who are affected in common by the problem sought to be addressed, without regard to traditional political or other subdivisions.

Given the fact that the President's urban policy package makes use of similar terminology, I am concerned that the areas eligible for the urban neighbors programs would be limited to the 143 areas the President has established as meeting the prerequisites for assistance through his urban package. In the implementation of this legislation, the availability of the program should not be limited to just those areas qualifying for assistance under the President's urban program.

The primary authors of this particular legislation—Senator CRANSTON and Senator JAVITS—have assured me that it is not the intent of the urban neighbors programs to serve just those areas qualifying under the administration's urban program. Instead, the program should be available to as many communities as possible that have been or are likely to be in a distressed situation for some time. The most apparent example of this type of area is a low-income community in an economically distressed area.

Moreover, the term "urban" should not be applied strictly. The programs funded through this authorization should be available to not only those areas that qualify as "urban" in the Census definition of the word, but also to those areas which have problems similar to those of large urban areas. Under section 414 of The Domestic Volunteer Service Act, as provided for in S. 2617, there is a requirement that the benefits under the act will be distributed equitably among various regions of the country and between residents of rural and urban areas. In implementing the legislation, the requirements of section 414 of the act, as amended by S. 2617, may necessitate adjustments in the distribution of benefits and services under the act due to the addition of the urban neighbors program.

This amendment also contains a provision put forth by Senator DOLE modifying the existing volunteer income disregard, and a provision put forth by Senator DOMENICI which expands the older American volunteer programs and limits the funding of the urban neighbors programs initiatives.

Mr. President, I appreciate the cooperation of Senators CRANSTON and JAVITS, as well as that of the ACTION Agency, in the preparation and drafting of this amendment. Their leadership has been very important to the expeditious approval of this legislation.

U.S. SENATE,
Washington, D.C., June 22, 1978.

Director SAM BROWN,
ACTION Agency,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. BROWN: As you know, S. 2617, the Domestic Volunteer Service Amendments of 1978, has been placed on the Senate calendar for floor action. This legislation contains the authorization for a new program called the Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Program. Since no hearing record exists on the purposes or activities of such a program, I believe it is very important that a number of questions regarding the Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Program be answered prior to Senate consideration of this legislation.

These questions include:

1. What types of volunteer efforts are now ongoing in communities across the country? How many communities have volunteer efforts taking place?

2. What is the estimated number of additional volunteer efforts which would occur as a result of Federal involvement and Federal dollars spent in this new program area?

3. What activities will "lead agencies" be engaged in? What types of existing agencies would be able to carry out the purposes of the program and best qualify for designation as a "lead agency"?

4. What kinds of activities will be funded with "seed money"? Are there any types of activities which could not be funded?

5. Will either volunteers or funding be utilized to facilitate the delivery of services? To what extent will the program focus on service delivery? Please describe the types of service delivery activities which would be carried out.

6. Will either volunteers or funding be utilized for advocacy activities? To what extent will the program focus on advocacy? Please describe what types of advocacy activities, if any, would be carried out.

7. What role will Community Action Agencies have in this new program? What relationship will a Community Action Agency and a lead agency have to one another in an area which they both serve?

8. What new structures might be set up as a result of this program?

9. What do the terms "distressed urban area" and "distressed urban neighborhood" mean? In the bill proposed by the Administration and ACTION the term "urban area" was used. What is the difference, if any, between the terms "distressed urban area," "distressed urban neighborhood" and "urban area"?

10. What does the term "community revitalization" mean? What activities are included within the definition of "community revitalization"?

11. What does the term "team" mean? How were the components of a team decided upon? Why are the specified components necessary?

12. What are the purposes and the activities of the resource centers?

Any additional information in supplement to the answers supplied to these questions would, of course, be appreciated.

I look forward to a response as soon as possible, in order to allow for adequate review prior to Senate consideration of S. 2617.

Thank you for your cooperation in this matter.

Sincerely,

GAYLORD NELSON,
U.S. Senator.

ACTION,
Washington, D.C., July 11, 1978.

Hon. GAYLORD NELSON,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR GAYLORD: Attached is ACTION's response to the questions you raised on the Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Program portion of S. 2617, The Domestic Volunteer Service Amendments of 1978.

Poverty remains a serious and systemic problem. This is a society which leaves millions unemployed and without hope or work; unhealthy without hope of decent medical care; and poorly housed without reason to dream of improvement. Government has a responsibility to see that its citizens are decently employed, housed, and fed. And there is now a virtually unprecedented effort at the federal level to integrate and coordinate a range of anti-poverty initiatives that have historically tended to fragment and undermine local efforts.

ACTION's commitment to expanding the capacity of voluntary associations to participate in the lives of their communities will not solve the systemic problems of poverty, but the careful support of voluntary associations and their combined efforts can go a long way toward averting some problems and creating workable models for solving still others. This is the point I made in a speech to the United States Conference of Mayors at their annual conference in Atlanta on June 19. (A copy of that speech it attached.) But ACTION can't do it alone.

Our agency, together with the Community Services Administration, can help to stimulate and support efforts which further this ideal. Indeed, ACTION's new urban programs have been designed to capitalize on the energy, creativity, and problem-solving skills that ordinary people possess. In order to ensure maximum cooperation at the local level between CSA and ACTION, we are prepared to undertake two measures:

1. ACTION will notify, in writing, all Community Action Programs of the availability of funds to local lead agencies under the Urban Neighbors Program. Local CAAs will thus be notified of the availability of funds and the process of applying for them.

2. ACTION will notify, in writing, the CAA agencies of the intent to award a grant in their communities.

I appreciate your interest in this new initiative, and hope this response will serve to clarify some of your concerns. I hope we can look forward to your continued support.

Should you or your staff need additional information on this program, please let me know.

Sincerely,

SAM BROWN,
Director.

QUESTIONS AND ANSWERS

Question 1. What types of volunteer efforts are now on-going in communities across the country? How many communities have volunteer efforts taking place?

Answer. The National Association of Neighborhoods estimates that there are over twenty-two thousand (22,000) essentially voluntary organizations operating around the country. The majority of these organizations would be eligible for funding under tho Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Program.

A recent survey (January, 1978) conducted by ACTION's Office of Policy and Planning Evaluation Division, assessed the breadth of volunteer activities in five ACTION programs: Volunteers in Service to America (VISTA); Foster Grandparent Program (FGP); Retired Senior Volunteer Program (RSVP); Senior Companion Program (SCP); and University Year for ACTION (UYA). The compilation of that data, which is attached, shows the variety of community-based efforts in which volunteers are involved around the country. We feel this survey provides a fairly representative picture of such efforts, whether or not they are ACTION funded.

To identify more precisely the number of communities with existing volunteer efforts becomes difficult because of the very nature of community associations. Often they spring up in response to a particular need and disband when their objectives are met; other organizations are active within their own communities, but are unknown outside that area; still others are "hidden" within the formal structure of a large program such as a health center, day care project, or recreation program.

VISTA

Volunteers in Service to America: provide full-time volunteer resources to public and private nonprofit organizations working to eliminate poverty and poverty-related human, social and environmental conditions.

Volunteers: 4,246.

Projects: 702 (42 percent had one to three volunteers) (Region IV, greatest percent).

Types of activity*: 1,867.

Location: 36 percent rural, 59 percent (including surrounding suburban), 5 percent other.

Basic human needs (project areas): 48 percent Community Services, 13 percent knowledge/Skills, 11 percent Legal Rights, 10 percent Health/Nutrition, 9 percent Housing, 7 percent Economic Development/Income, 1 percent Energy/Conservation, 1 percent Food/Water.

FGP

Foster Grandparent Program: provide meaningful volunteer opportunities for low-income persons, age 60 and over, provide supportive services to children with special needs in health, education, welfare and related settings.

Volunteers: 16,500.

Projects: 195.

Types of Activity: 9.

Location: 76 percent in Social Agencies—mostly with institutionalized children.

Basic human needs (project areas): 71 percent Health, 21 percent Education, 8 percent Community Services.

RSVP

Retired Senior Volunteer Program: create meaningful opportunities for persons of retirement age to participate more fully in the life of their communities through volunteer service.

Volunteers: 242,080.

Projects: 680.

Types of Activities: 62.

Location: 49 percent urban, 14 percent suburban, 37 percent rural.

Basic human need: (project areas) 35 percent Community Services, 15 percent knowledge/Skills, 1 percent Legal Rights, 43 percent Health/Nutrition, 1 percent Housing, 5 Economic Conservation.

SCP

Senior Companion Program: provide meaningful volunteer opportunities for low-income persons, age 60 and over, provide supportive services to adults with special needs in health, education, welfare and related settings.

Volunteers: 3,100.

Projects: 49.

Types of Activities: 6.

Location: 31 percent rural, (—65 percent in homes and—35 percent in institutions), 69 urban.

Basic human needs: (project areas) 100 percent Health.

UYA

University Year for Action: provides effective full-time volunteer manpower to work on problems of poverty, combine community service and academic study, encourage university involvement in local poverty communities, administer volunteer projects at the local level through universities, and institutionalize these purposes at participating schools.

Volunteers: 1,070.
Projects: 41.
Types of Activities: 326.
Location: 66 percent urban, 28 percent rural, 6 percent suburban.

Basic human need: (project areas) 41 percent Community Services, 24 percent knowledge/Skills, 7 percent legal rights, 13 percent Health/Nutrition, 10 percent Housing, 4 percent Economic Development/Income, 1 percent Energy Conservation, Food/Water.

Mental Health/Mental Retardation is most frequent area of project involvement and area with highest percentage of volunteers.

Question 2. What is the estimated number of additional volunteer efforts which would occur as a result of Federal involvement and Federal dollars spent in this new program area?

Answer. We estimated, based upon experience with ACTION's established part-time volunteer programs, that an Urban Neighbors Program investment of approximately $22,000,000 will generate a minimum of 14,875,000 volunteer hours of direct service. A breakdown of this estimate follows below:

46,000 volunteers in the Urban Neighbors Program volunteers will produce 10,979.000 hours of technical and managerial assistance.[1]

145 lead agencies broker 300 volunteers each per year, each volunteer serving 10 hours per week for 25 weeks [2] equals 10,875,-000 hours.

10 regional back-up centers provide 50 volunteers each per year, each volunteer serving 8 hours per week per year equals 104,000 hours. For a total of 10,979,000 hours.

47,000 fixed income consumer counselling (FICC) volunteers will provide an average of 5 hours per week of services to an average of 40 weeks per year equals 9,400,000 hours.

10,000 Helping Hand volunteers will provide an average of 10 hours per week of services for an average of 35 weeks per year equals 3,500,000 hours.

Total estimated amount of volunteer hours equals 23,997,900.

Question 3. What activities will "lead agencies" be engaged in? What types of existing agencies would be able to carry out the purposes of the program and best qualify for designation as a "lead agency?"

Answer. The role of lead agencies is to provide for the "recruitment, on a request for service basis, of volunteers who possess needed skills and the matching of such volunteers with neighborhood groups." To accomplish this purpose lead agencies will engage in the following activities:

1. Solicit from neighborhood groups requests for services of volunteers with specific occupational and professional skills, where the availability of such skills will permit the neighborhood groups to perform more effectively in providing community services or in contributing to neighborhood revitalization. Examples of such needs include: a day care center required to establish sound accounting practices in order to qualify for a mortgage loan; a teen-age crisis center seeking legal advice concerning incorporation; a housing cooperative seeking sound management practices in organizing its purchasing of goods and services.

2. It will develop a roster of skilled volunteers willing to offer their time to respond to neighborhood organizations' needs. Areas which local lead agencies are expected to concentrate attention include: management techniques, accounting, legal services, public relations and fund-raising, artistic design and activities which reflect the national neighborhood priority emphasis of Section 133A. Where special skills are requested for which a roster has not been developed, the lead agency would attempt to locate volunteers capable of supplying that skill, or contact the regional resource center on behalf of the neighborhood group (see question 12). Where skill banks of volunteer professionals already exist, local lead agencies would be expected to work with them to enhance this community resource, rather than compete with it.

3. It would work with volunteers and neighborhood groups to facilitate productive relations between the two. Experience shows that skilled volunteers work most effectively with neighborhood groups when they are provided with an orientation to volunteering in this way, and when neighborhood groups are provided with an orientation toward the use of skilled volunteers.

We anticipate that a variety of existing agencies qualify as lead agencies. These are the agencies, both public and private, which in each jurisdiction are best able to work with neighborhood groups, with the established volunteer sector, and with associations of professionals who might help provide the volunteer resources. Private associations and agencies that qualify include the United Way, established charity associations, Catholic Charities, settlement houses, the Urban League, or already existing volunteer clearinghouses. Public agencies that might qualify include community action agencies, mayors' offices of neighborhood affairs, city offices of volunteer services or offices of community development. Where volunteer services are already provided in occupational sectors (such as lawyers), it is anticipated that these networks will be utilized by the lead agency. ACTION will seek to insure that a full cross section of lead agencies are selected and that this cross section represents existing public and private agencies.

Question 4. What kinds of activities will be funded with "seed money?" Are there any types of activities which would not be funded?

Answer. "Neighborhood seed money grants" will be used to support two broad categories of activity:

1. Those which engage residents of an urban community in providing volunteer assistance to their neighbors.

Examples include: assistance to the elderly; programs focused on young people (particularly those facing problems with the criminal justice system); cultural activities which celebrate or educate; programs designed to lower consumer costs for disadvantaged urban residents; and programs which enhance the ability of voluntary organizations to make ongoing contributions to their neighborhoods.

2. Those which involve preservation, restoration, or reuse of abandoned property or other facilities in support of the above.

Examples include: development of land for urban gardening; the utilization of property for community use (e.g. creation of a community craft center); a one shot purchase of capital items such as a transportation vehicle or the hardware or material needed for an essentially voluntary neighborhood project (e.g. van for a jitney service).

These two activity categories are reflective of the broad range of community efforts underway throughout the country. The distinguishing characteristic of the "seed money" is that it allows neighborhoods to undertake a volunteer effort around an issue important to community residents, and to continue that effort, using local resources after the federal seed money has been expended.

ACTION will make careful use of accounting, evaluation, and monitoring criteria to ensure both an equitable distribution of seed money and the quality of project design. ACTION intends to provide funds for the equipment, supplies, tools, and other resources needed to support existing voluntary projects and to mobilize additional volunteer efforts.

A wide range of activities will be eligible for funding (see Question 10) and, with three exceptions, ACTION does not intend to a priori prescribe any broad category of projects. Funds will not be used in support of political campaigns or legislative lobbying. Further, funds will not be available to use as overhead for existing community organizations.

The criteria for project eligibility are as follows:

Project proposals will be evaluated against two sets of criteria. The first set describes basic requirements which all proposals must meet in order to qualify. The second set represents issues of special emphasis, which while not mandatory, are of national importance. Premium consideration in the competitive process will be given to those proposals which meet the special criteria. Both sets of criteria are listed below:

(1) Basic Criteria—All project proposals must:

a. Be achievable in a relatively short period of time; and be responsive to an assessment of human needs in the low-income community to be served.

b. Demonstrate that neighborhood members are supportive of the purpose and activities of the project; and that the project does not duplicate the activities or thrust of other activities in the area.

c. Be directed toward mobilizing volunteers in neighborhood revitalization efforts producing high impact in the community. (e.g., number of people affected by stimulation of other community betterment projects. Note: Proportionately greater impact expected from larger project grants.)

(2) Special Premium Criteria

In the competitive grant award process, premium consideration will be given to those projects meeting the following additional areas of national priority:

a. Impact upon the needs of urban communities experiencing unusual distress, e.g., concentrated areas of high unemployment, extreme deterioration of housing and/or public services, etc.

b. Impact upon multi-ethnic communities and/or isolated minority groups in poor communities.

c. Innovative projects which offer opportunity for future replication in other urban communities.

d. Support community efforts to mobilize additional community based human and material resources. Note: Proportionately greater impact expected from larger project grants.

Question 5. Will either volunteers or funding be utilized to facilitate the delivery of services? To what extent will the program focus on service delivery? Please describe the types of service delivery activities which would be carried out.

Answer. In general, only two components of the Urban Neighborhood program will emphasize the delivery of services directly. They are the Fixed Income Consumer Counselling (FICC) and the Helping Hand programs. The FICC program is designed to provide personal and group financial counseling to persons living on low and fixed incomes. FICC will be administered as part of the [1] Activities which fall under technical and management assistance include those which (1) engage residents in stabilizing and organizing their community associations through improved management techniques (e.g. use of lawyers to assist with an exempt status, or an accountant to "balance the books") and those which (2) use volunteers to assist neighborhood groups in the preservation, restoration, and improvement in the quality of life in their community (e.g. an artist to support a community fair, an architect to help with a small mall plan, an engineer to design street lighting or to assist with an elderly van service, a nutrition expert to help set up a food co-op). Question No. 10 details the types of activities further.

Urban Neighborhood Program: Local Lead Agencies (LLAs) will recruit, train, and match part-time-non-stipended volunteers to the needs of individuals, families, and groups of people living on low or fixed incomes. Counseling services and other assistance will be offered in such areas as: low cost/no cost transportation; consumer affairs; welfare and health care entitlements; nutrition; and effective strategies for combatting utility and insurance rate increases.

The Helping Hand program emphasizes the provision of "person-to-person" services that will reduce the need for institutionalizing individuals (in hospitals, mental institutions, nursing homes, and other extended care settings) and to ameliorate the isolation frequently experienced by older people or handicapped people living in residential settings. This program will stress personal interactions among people of different age groups, particularly young and old, and will be carried out in coordination with the appropriate State system for the protection and advocacy of individuals with developmental disabilities.

The Urban Neighbors Program, broadly defined, will essentially "purchase the services" of a network of skilled volunteers. It is unlikely that in cities with an Urban Neighbors Program, Neighborhood Seed Money grants would be used toward purchase of such services. In cities without an Urban Neighbors Program, Neighborhood Seed Money grants might be used to purchase the services of skilled professionals. However, Neighborhood Seed Money grantees will be discouraged from seeking services for individual citizens, since that program's objective is to build the capacity of neighborhood groups to accomplish and support community-wide voluntary activities and objectives.

Question 6. Will either volunteers or funding be utilized for advocacy activities? To what extent will the program focus on advocacy? Please describe what types of advocacy activities, if any, would be carried out?

Answer. Both the volunteers recruited by Local Lead Agencies and the small grants will be available to neighborhood organizations in support of existing and new program activities. Especially with respect to the volunteers, the character of the organizations ongoing emphasis will determine the area of activity. Thus certain kinds of advocacy will take place under the Urban Neigborhoods Program. Since a primary thrust of the Urban Neighbors Program is the mobilization of new volunteers (those with technical skills who will serve in both full time and part time service), the program will act as a catalyst for the use of volunteers in community revitalization activities. This, in effect, implies volunteers being advocates for the role of other volunteers in both their own and other neighborhood efforts. For example, volunteers in the Urban Neighbors Program might provide urban planning or architectural assistance to a community organization evaluating the impact of a shopping center project on the elderly in a community, and assist that organization in the preparation of a survey which details that impact. Or a local artist might assist a community group in designing a brochure which brings together other artists, and local resources in support of a community based craft center. Similarly, volunteers will likely assist on the development of proposals and recommendations with respect to the allocation of community development block grants, Title XX or other funds which require citizen participation and review. The volunteers working in fixed income consumer counseling activities will also be advocates on behalf of those individuals whom they assist.

Under no circumstances will the local lead agency initiate any advocacy. In this regard, ACTION will take steps to insure that its funds do not support either electoral activity or legislative lobbying.

ACTION also anticipates that volunteers working in Fixed-Income Consumer Counseling and the Helping Hand programs will be engaged in certain kinds of advocacy on behalf of individual citizens. The small grants are expected to be capital rather than staff intensive and are unlikely to be used in support of significant advocacy activities.

Question 7. What role will Community Action Agencies have in this new program? What relationship will a Community Action Agency and a lead agency have to one another in an area which they both serve?

Answer. Community Action Agencies can qualify as a designated Local Lead Agency and will serve that purpose in a number of jurisdictions. In cities where the Local Lead Agency and the local Community Action Agency are different entities, it is expected that the CAA will serve as a valuable resource for identifying the needs of particular neighborhoods and providing reliable area-wide information to the Local Lead Agency.

Community Action Agencies and programs initiated by them are often the most important and significant institutions operating in low-income neighborhoods. ACTION anticipates that a significant portion of the volunteer energy marshalled through Local Lead Agencies will therefore be used by CAA's and CAA affiliates. Close and cooperative working relationships between CAA's and Local Lead Agencies will be crucial.

To insure maximum cooperation between CSA and ACTION at the local level, ACTION is prepared to:

1. Notify in writing the CAA of the availability of funds to Local Lead Agencies under the Urban Neighbors Program, so that the CAA's will be aware of the availability of funds and the process of applying for them.

2. Notify in writing the CAA agencies in cities with an Urban Neighbors Program of the intent to award a grant in their communities.

Question 8. What new structures might be set up as a result of this program?

Answer. ACTION does not anticipate that any new structures will be established as a result of these programs. Both the Urban Neighbors Program and the Neighborhood Seed Money grants program are explicitly designed to support existing organizations and their initiatives. With respect to Local Lead Agencies, only existing, established, and credible organizations will be able to meet the funding criteria we will establish. Supporting local initiatives and providing the necessary resources for institutions in the community and voluntary sectors are the major goals of the ACTION initiatives and would be significantly vitiated if a new layer of organizations were to emerge.

Question 9. What do the terms "distressed urban area" and "distressed urban neighborhood" mean? In the bill proposed by the Administration and ACTION the term "urban area" was used. What is the difference, if any, between the terms "distressed urban area", "distressed urban neighborhood" and "urban area"?

Answer. The report of the Committee of Human Resources states that "the Committee also recognizes that the term neighborhood is an imprecise one and intends that it should be interpreted to include logical groupings of the individuals and families in contiguous areas who are affected in common by the problem sought to be addressed, utmost regard to traditional political or other subdivisions." ACTION intends to write guidelines and develop standards which determine those areas which might be considered distressed, as required by the Human Resources Committee. In doing so, the Agency recognizes the characteristics of a "distressed urban area" and a "distressed neighborhood" will differ. As the President voiced in his announcement of these initiatives "distress" is not limited to large cities. Further there are distressed neighborhoods in some of the nation's "statistically affluent" cities, and there are affluent neighborhoods in some of the country's "distressed urban areas". The standards which ACTION plans to develop will be threefold.

(1) They will broadly define urban area, based on population and political jurisdiction, with an eye toward a range of city size.

(2) They will determine criteria for a "distressed urban area," which are based on a variety of factors, but not limited to population size.

(3) They will stipulate guidelines for a distressed neighborhood which will include economic and quality of life indicators (e.g. status of municipal services, housing stock, business loss) which focus on the characteristics of neighborhood distress as they differ from the larger "distressed urban area."

In this manner, ACTION hopes to provide assistance to neighborhoods in larger urban areas as diverse as Phoenix or Houston and Los Angeles, New York and Detroit, as well as smaller cities across the country.

Question 10. What does the term "community revitalization" mean? What activities are included within the definition of "community revitalization"?

Answer. Activities to be conducted under Part D authorizes ACTION to provide resources in support of "community revitalization and person-to-person activities in distressed urban communities." As detailed in sub-sections (a) and (b), all such revitalization and service activities have as their principal focus the participation of volunteers in activities which solve or allevate locally-perceived problems.

Two broad categories of programs which fall within the definition of community revitalization are discussed in Question 4. The following list covers activities in which volunteers might participate under Section 133.

A. Programs to the Elderly (or Using Elderly Volunteers):

1. Fixed-income counseling and consumer education;
2. Mobile groceries;
3. Specialized transportation assistance (Jitney services);
4. Food buying clubs;
5. Block watch activities or tenant patrols;
6. Escort services;
7. Library delivery;
8. Visiting services;
9. Medical cooperatives;
10. Pre-retirement planning;
11. Elderly/Youth Activities—visiting, tutoring, etc.;
12. Senior Citizen Centers.

B. Cultural/Community Betterment:

1. Clean-up campaigns or anti-litter campaigns;
2. Recycling centers;
3. Crafts/Arts fairs;
4. Creation of Cultural Centers;
5. Wall Murals;
6. Health Fairs;
7. Street Malls and Bazaars;
8. Street Furniture;
9. Volunteer Ambulance Corps;
10. Cosmetic Building Renovation;
11. Community Planning Projects;
12. Community museums;
13. Landscaping;
14. City-wide (multi-ethnic and multi-racial) coordination of volunteer activities;
15. Community films and videos;
16. Energy related programs—e.g., solar energy uses; local energy councils.

C. Cooperatives and Open Space Projects:

1. Playlots;
2. Urban gardening and greenhouses;
3. Tree planting;
4. Health/housing cooperatives;

5. Food Distribution Systems: Food Coops, buying clubs, houses;
6. Erosion control;
7. Furniture repair coops;
8. Tool lending libraries;
9. Parent babysitting cooperatives;
10. Automobile repair coops;
11. Adopt a Building Program;
12. Community Credit Systems;
13. Sweat equity programs;
14. Women's programs; lay rape hotlines, family violence;
15. Food processing centers.

D. Safety and Transportation:
1. Playground watches;
2. Block watches;
3. Volunteer fire prevention;
4. Property identification;
5. Whistle stop programs;
6. Bicycle cooperatives;
7. Victim assistance;
8. Telephone hotlines;
9. Crime prevention education;
10. Community transport services;
11. Street lighting/physical planning prevention programs.

E. Education:
1. Consumer education;
2. Preventative health education and health resources;
3. Food stamp outreach;
4. Adult education;
5. Nutrition education;
6. Energy conservation education;
7. Environmental education;
8. Child care and parenting education.

F. Young People:
1. Playground centers;
2. After school facilities—Play streets;
3. Street olympics—youth recreation;
4. Bi-lingual tutoring;
5. Telephone hotlines;
6. Youth offenders (i.e. deinstitutionalization or division) programs.

G. Organizational:
1. Volunteer placement services;
2. Administrative assistance in community stabilizing efforts;
3. Legal assistance with tax exempt status, etc., for small neighborhood organizations;
4. Marketing;
5. Bookkeeping;
6. English/Spanish (and other language) translation;
7. Auditing procedures;
8. Community Recruitment and Advertising Campaigns;
9. Community Resource Surveys/identification of services;
10. Block management assistant programs;
11. Planning assistance for community revitalization;
12. Community publicity efforts;
13. Fundraising and financing.

Question 11. What does the term "team" mean? How were the components of a team decided upon? Why are the specified components necessary?

Answer. The team concept is one which has proven very viable and effective in the health and social service field. The combination of a professional employee with both full time and part-time volunteers is viewed as a mechanism for maximizing the ability of a lead agency to reach throughout an urban area. The team will in fact be an "outpost" of a centrally located lead agency. Many of the agencies who will qualify as a Local Lead Agency (LLA) already have such neighborhood based branch offices staffed by professionals.

Volunteers in the Urban Neighborhood Volunteers Program could be assigned to work within such a branch office, as well as on a City-wide basis through the LLA headquarters. The decision on the team components was made on the basis of discussions with the majority and minority of staff(s) of the Senate Human Resources Subcommittee on Child and Human Development.

Question 12. What are the purposes and activities of the Regional Resource Center?

Answer. The ten Regional Resource Centers will function as a backup system to support the Local Lead Agencies (LLAs) of the Urban Neighbors Program, strengthening their capacity to serve local clients groups by recruiting highly specialized volunteers with specific technical/management assistance not available locally.

The support activities of the Regional Resource Centers fall into four principal categories: 1) receiving and evaluating requests for help from LLAs and their clientele, developing and maintaining a national volunteer information and referral system, matching appropriate volunteers (willing to travel outside their areas) with requests for assistance; 2) developing and/or distributing specialized materials, handbooks, media resources, etc.; 3) designing seminars, workshops, conferences, and institutes which address problems common to LLAs and their clientele; and 4) strengthening the capacity of LLAs to implement a city-wide program and to train a local cadre of skilled volunteers.

ACTION will award grants, on a competitive basis, to organizations which already have experience in providing training and technical assistance in management, volunteer, and consumer advocacy activities on a multi-state basis. The Regional Resource Centers will be operated within the funding limitation of $100,000 annually for salaries and related expenses as stipulated in S. 2617.●

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I yield myself 1 minute to thank the Senator from California (Mr. CRANSTON) and his staff, the Senator from Wisconsin (Mr. NELSON), the Senator from New Mexico (Mr. DOMENICI), and now the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) and their staffs, for their outstanding cooperation in helping us to get this renewal of the ACTION programs under way, and Senator DOLE for his concurrence in and helping us to shape the new part D, which is based upon experience in recent times. We feel it can be a very critical and very helpful addition to the total program.

I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, once again I thank the Senator for his cooperation and his good words, and yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing, en bloc, to the amendment (UP No. 1455) of the Senator from California.

The amendment, en bloc, was agreed to.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I know of no other amendments. I believe we are ready for the adoption of the committee substitute amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The amendment, as amended, was agreed to.

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I am extremely pleased to speak in support of S. 2617, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978.

I have served on the Human Resources Committee since entering the Senate 16 years ago. Since that time, the idea of voluntary participation by Americans in helping to build both a more secure and humane world through the Peace Corps and a more secure and humane America through VISTA and other programs, has flourished and has been one that is very close to my heart. It was in 1961 that President Kennedy proposed the establishment of the Peace Corps, the forerunner of the current ACTION. I have always believed that one of our Nation's greatest strengths was the willingness of our people to voluntarily contribute to the creation and development of a better America.

We have all seen evidence of the American voluntary spirit illustrated in cities and towns across the country.

In Boston, VISTA volunteers are staffing educational counseling centers which provide basic educational skills and a new sense of hope to young people who had dropped out of high school. I spoke to the graduates of one such program last month and was heartened after seeing the rekindled educational interest in students who not long before had given up on themselves and their environment.

I have long been deeply interested in the work of programs such as the Retired senior voluntary program, the foster grandparent program and the senior campanion program that enable older Americans to perform part-time voluntary services in their communities. Through these programs, hundreds of thousands of our elderly have given of themselves to others in need. An additional benefit has been the utilization of the skills of these citizens who are largely retired but still productive. All of these men and women are to be commended for extending the cup of human kindness to the children and other adults having exceptional needs.

Since the creation of ACTION, thousands of our citizens have sacrificed in these people-to-people programs helping to alleviate poverty and deprivation in the United States. They have faced the most complex problems and have brought sensitive and well-planned solutions. Senator CRANSTON and his committee, through this legislation, intend not only to assure the continuance of these and other fine programs, but they have also worked with the administration to develop needed new initiatives.

I am encouraged by the proposed "Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Programs" the purpose of which is to strengthen and encourage the involvement of individuals, neighborhood groups, voluntary associations, labor organizations, and other local entities in community revitalization and person-to-person service activities in distressed urban neighborhoods.

Paramount under this provision is the focus on consumer services to those citizens who are living on fixed incomes and the elderly who are unemployed, I believe that the relatively small amount of Federal dollars that will be available to make grants to neighborhood and local organizations engaged in this work will have a broad-based affect on the lives of some of our most needy citizens.

Mr. President, in passing this legislation, we have the opportunity to support those Americans whose efforts made a difference in the quality of life in our country and throughout the world. The passage of this legislation is one of the great hopes for our future.●

● Mr. CHURCH. Mr. President, I support S. 2617, to reauthorize the Domestic Volunteer Services Act for 3 years. Of particular importance to me are the provisions which would extend the retired senior volunteer program and the foster grandparent and senior companion programs for 3 years and significantly increase funding levels.

Last year, more than 225,000 older Americans participated in the retired senior volunteer program. Many more older Americans throughout the Nation want to use their skills and energies to help other people. The authorization levels in this bill—$25 million for fiscal year 1979, $30 million for fiscal year 1980, and $35 million for fiscal year 1981—will help provide this opportunity.

I know the RSVP program well, and I know how effective the volunteers are. Older men and women are providing services to other older Americans, working with children in school settings, operating health screening clinics, and performing many other jobs.

The volunteers themselves have been very effective spokesmen for the program, and I have heard from literally hundreds of them during the past few months.

I have also heard from community leaders and many others who have worked with the volunteers and wanted to tell me how important the program has been to them.

These volunteers deserve our full recognition and thanks for the unselfish contributions they are making and our continued support for the work they will do.

This is especially true of older Americans who serve as foster grandparents and senior companions. Most foster grandparents work in sensitive relationships with emotionally and physically handicapped children. Many others give long, diligent attention to youngsters with special learning problems, providing the continuing support and tutoring so often necessary to overcome frightening disabilities. More than 41,000 children have been served in this way by foster grandparents.

Almost 3,000 senior companions are providing the same kind of specialized assistance to 10,000 older Americans in nursing homes and in other residential settings.

All foster grandparents and senior companion program participants have very low incomes, and they receive a small stipend of $1.60 an hour to help defray their expenses. This stipend has not been raised since the programs began, and an adjustment is long overdue. The increased authorizations in S. 2617 can make this possible for the first time, and I urge my colleagues and ACTION to raise this modest rate.●

● Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleague, Senator CRANSTON, the chairman of the Subcommittee on Child and Human Development, and other members of the Committee on Human Resources in recommending the adoption of S. 2617, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act amendments of 1978.

S. 2617 would extend the ACTION Agency's domestic volunteer programs through fiscal year 1981 and is designed to strengthen the ACTION programs and improve the administration and overall operation of this unique agency. ACTION was originally conceived in July of 1971 to consolidate an array of voluntary action programs operating throughout the executive branch of the Federal Government. Through the years, this agency has made marked gains in addressing the needs of the disadvantaged through voluntary efforts and has served as the vehicle to engage older Americans in a variety of productive activities benefitting young and old alike.

The Volunteers In Service to America (VISTA) program, authorized under title I of the act, has served a critical role in the effort against poverty. It was designed to combat poverty and to improve the lives of the poor. In my own State of New Jersey, the VISTA program has been an invaluable tool for helping those in need. The services being provided include: Legal services to those who otherwise could not afford them, assistance in neighborhood renewal, day care services, youth programs, and urban assistance. Such services are at the cutting edge of meeting the basic human needs of the disadvantaged. An increased allocation for these and other services could be critical these communities and others like them across the Nation.

Under this measure, legislative authority for the continuation of older American programs—the retired senior volunteer program, the foster grandparent program, and the senior companion program—would also be provided. These vital programs draw upon the strengths of citizens, 60 years of age and older, who contribute their time, energy, and talents to redress the problems of poverty, disadvantage, and other areas of human need.

Historically, the older American programs have enjoyed widespread support and have been highly valued by many Members of Congress. These programs have been responsible for the delivery of a multiplicity of services by older citizens to children with special needs and to the elderly themselves, often alone and forgotten. Participants have aided citizens of all ages and has assisted in providing many basic services such as food, housing, transportation, adequate health care and other services. The long-standing achievements of these programs underscore the importance of allocating increased funds to continue and expand their activities.

Therefore, S. 2617 calls for increased authorization levels for title II programs at levels of $80 million, $92 million, and $105 million for fiscal years 1979–81 respectively.

My continuing interest in the needs of the disabled and the elderly move me to strongly endorse the proposed provision in the bill which would require ACTION to apply the nondiscrimination policies and authorities set forth in the Civil Rights Act of 1964, the Rehabilitation Act of 1973, and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975. I am hopeful that this provision will assist in opening new horizons for both the handicapped and the elderly so that they may fully participate in the volunteer activities of the Agency.

In addition, the Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978 would provide a new authority for the establishment of an urban neighborhood volunteer program designed to assist in revitalizing communities and delivering self-help services in distressed urban neighborhoods. The underlying concept of this section is to stimulate neighborhood residents to join forces against urban deterioration and to equip communities with the needed resources and manpower to accomplish this objective.

The urban neighbors program would authorize financial assistance to a lead agency. such as a local government agency, a community action agency, a community college, or a broad-based neighborhood coalition, to administer, coordinate, and support efforts to solve debilitating community problems. Seed grants totaling not more than $30,000 over 3 fiscal years could be provided for any particular neighborhood group. These funds would be used to promote volunteer activities, as well as to provide volunteers and neighborhood groups with materials, training, and administrative support.

Under the urban neighborhood priorities programs two other self-help programs would be implemented in rural as well as urban areas. A Helping Hand program would utilize volunteers to reduce unnecessary institutionalization and isolation of older and handicapped persons. A financial counseling program, utilizing volunteers with specialized or technical expertise, would provide advice to low- and fixed-income persons.

I strongly endorse the reauthorization of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act, and I recommend passage of this important legislation which will do so much to enhance the lives of the elderly, the impoverished, and the disadvantaged.●

Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, I would like to touch briefly upon several areas of concern to me with regard to the ACTION Agency and its programs. When I first reviewed S. 2617, after it was reported by the Human Resources Committee, I noted that a category of new programs was being authorized without the benefit of hearings. In my view, this portion of the legislation was unnecessarily vague, and it granted to the ACTION Agency far too much discretion in the structuring of a whole new urban volunteer strategy. My initial reaction was to seek to delete altogether the new part D programs. It struck me as being especially ironic that we would be opening a whole new classification of volunteer activities, with an authorization of $120 million over the next 3 years, at the same time we were "suffocating" the older American volunteer programs.

RSVP, senior companions, and foster grandparents are programs of demonstrated effectiveness. The overwhelming majority of ACTION volunteers are older American volunteers, and yet the Agency, in setting its budget priorities for fiscal year 1979 chose to permit no growth in two of these programs, and recommended a 25 percent cut in the RSVP program. To me, Mr. President, this attitude represented gross insensitivity to the valuable role older volunteers play in the overall ACTION program.

Mr. President, I believe very strongly that RSVP, foster grandparents, and senior companions are excellent programs which involve elderly individuals in a whole range of activities which better the lives of their fellow citizens. These programs have been free of many of the disturbing abuses which have sometimes tainted other ACTION endeavors.

It was my opinion, Mr. President, that we should not rush to enact the urban volunteer program without the careful scrutiny and safeguards necessary to prevent abuse. I need not remind my colleagues that the ACTION Agency, under its present leadership, has entered into a number of contractual agreements with organizations that have not always adhered to the letter or the spirit of the law. Some of these grantees have engaged in overt political activitv, while others have become involved in union organizing activities, both of which are prohibited in the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973.

In an effort to correct the most obvious deficiencies in this legislation, Mr. President, I entered into a period of negotiations with Senators CRANSTON, NELSON, and JAVITS. The result of that negotiation was a corrective amendment which seeks to tighten this program, and establish far more clearly the statutory guidelines under which the action agency will be operating. More specifically, this amendment will:

First, reduce the $40 million authorization to $25 million in fiscal year 1979; $27.5 million in fiscal year 1980, and $30 million in fiscal year 1981.

Second, delete the authority to establish, by contract, 10 regional resource centers, thus saving an additional $1 million per year.

Third, along with the joint explanatory statement that accompanies it, explain more precisely the role of local elected officials in the control and supervision of this program.

Fourth, require the agency to develop a program plan for these new urban volunteer programs, and to submit that plan to the appropriate committees of Congress 60 days before their effective date.

Fifth, obligate the agency to increase spending on the older American volunteer programs by $10 million before new funds can be made available under the new part D program.

Sixth. limit the agency's flexibility requiring that the first $8.1 million appropriated for part D will be devoted to "helping hand" and the financial counseling to individuals on fixed income programs. Both of these programs, I would note, have as their primarv objective the improvement of the quality of life for older Americans.

Seventh, S. 2617, as reported, grants to the Director the authority to establish a new urban volunteer program each year. We have insisted that this authority be tempered by limiting the Director to those programs which have already proved their effectiveness during a demonstration period, as described by part C of the act; and finally,

Eighth, require the ACTION Agency to ease the general paperwork burden by establishing a review process within ACTION which will continually reexamine the nature and frequency of all agency requests for information.

Mr. President, in closing, I would like to simply say that even in its modified form I am concerned about the prospect of this new program. As a former city official of Albuquerque, N. Mex., I understand the need for expanded volunteer activities in our urban areas. The need for such an expansion becomes even greater as the budget crunch worsens, and taxpayer resistance to new levies intensifies. But I am not at all certain that these programs are going to have the beneficial impact that I would like to see. It is my hope that the leaner, tighter provisions contained in S. 2617, as amended by the Nelson amendment here on the floor today, can achieve these objectives without abuse and undue controversy and we will be watching.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is all time yielded back?

Mr. JAVITS. All time is yielded back.

Mr. CRANSTON. Yes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass?

The bill (S. 2617) was passed, as follows:

S. 2617

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Domestic Volunteer Service Act Amendments of 1978".

SEC. 2. Section 103 of the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 (42 U.S.C. 4951 et seq.) (hereinafter referred to as "the Act") is amended by—

(1) amending subsection (b) by—

(A) striking out "Prior to" and inserting in lieu thereof "Within thirty days after" in the second sentence; and

(B) inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Director shall offer to provide each volunteer enrolled for a period of full-time service of one year or more under this title, and, upon the request of such volunteer, provide such volunteer with an individual and updated plan as described in the preceding two sentences."; and

(2) amending subsection (d) to read as follows:

"(d)(1) Volunteers under this part shall not be assigned to duties or work in a project or program in any State unless the project or program has been submitted to the Governor or other chief executive officer of the State concerned, and has not been disapproved by him or her within forty-five days of the date of such submission. In the event of a timely disapproval in writing, supported by a statement of reasons, by the Governor or other chief executive officer, volunteers may be assigned to duties or work in such project or program if, following disapproval, the Director determines in writing, with a statement of reasons therefor, that such project or program is fully consistent with the provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of this part.

"(2) Except as provided in the second sentence of this paragraph, when so requested by the Governor or other chief executive officer of the State concerned in writing, supported by a statement of reasons, a volunteer project or program or the assignment of a volunteer to a project or program in such State shall be terminated by the Director not later than thirty days after the date such request is received by the Director, or at such later date as is agreed upon by the Director and such Governor or other chief executive officer. The Director may refuse to terminate such a project or program if the Director so determines by notifying the Governor or other chief executive officer in writing, with a statement of reasons therefor, that such program or project or the assignment of such a volunteer to a project or program is fully consistent with the provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of this part.".

SEC. 3. Section 105(a)(2) of the Act is amended by amending the first sentence thereof to read as follows: "Stipends shall be payable only upon completion of a period of service, except that under such circumstances as the Director shall determine, in accordance with regulations which the Director shall prescribe, the accrued stipend, or any part thereof, may be paid to the volunteer, or, on behalf of the volunteer, to members of the volunteer's family or others during the period of the volunteer's service.".

SEC. 4. Section 114(a) of the Act is amended by—

(1) striking out in the first sentence "10" and inserting in lieu thereof "15"; and

(2) striking out in the second sentence "$6,700,000" both times it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "$4,600,000".

SEC. 5. Section 122 of the Act is amended by—

(1) amending subsection (a) by—

(A) inserting "in urban and rural areas" after "programs" the first place it appears;

(B) striking out "and" the first place it appears and inserting a comma and "a program of assistance to victims of domestic violence, and the programs specified in section 134 (1) and (2) of this Act" after "abusers"; and

(C) inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "In carrying out programs authorized by this part, the Director is authorized to provide for the recruitment, selection, and training of volunteers."; and

(2) amending subsection (c) to read as follows:

"(c)(1) The Director, in accordance with regulations which the Director shall prescribe, may provide to volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service of twenty hours or more per week for twenty-six or more consecutive weeks under this part such allowances, support, and services as are described in section 105(b) and as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of this part, and shall apply the provisions of sections 103(d), 104(c), and 105(b) to the service of volunteers enrolled for full-time service under this part.

"(2) The Director, in accordance with regulations which the Director shall prescribe with respect to volunteers enrolled for periods of full-time service of one year or more under this part—

"(A) may provide to such volunteers such stipends, in total amounts not in excess of stipends provided under section 105(a) to volunteers serving under part A of this title, as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of this part; and

"(B) to the extent that the terms and conditions of the service of such volunteers are of similar character to the terms and conditions of the service of volunteers enrolled under part A of this title, shall apply to the service of such volunteers enrolled under this part the provisions of sections 103(b) (with respect to low-income community volunteers), 104(d), and 105(a) to the extent such provisions are applied to the service of volunteers enrolled under such part A.".

SEC. 6. (a)(1) Title I of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new part:

"PART D—URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

"STATEMENT OF PURPOSE

"SEC. 131. The purpose of this part is to strengthen and encourage the involvement of individuals, neighborhood groups, voluntary associations, labor organizations, local enterprises, local governments, and other local entities in community revitalization and person-to-person service activities in distressed urban neighborhoods by providing for Urban Neighborhood Volunteer Programs which build on the capacity of existing and emerging neighborhood groups, through the use of volunteers enrolled for a period of full-time service and volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service, to assist in efforts to reverse deterioration of and improve the quality of life in their neighborhoods, particularly in situations where the application of human talent and dedication may assist in the solution of poverty and poverty-related problems, and to provide appropriate authorities and responsibilities designed to assist in the development and coordination of such programs.

"GENERAL PROVISIONS

"SEC. 132. (a) The Director is authorized to conduct or make grants to and contracts with public agencies and private nonprofit organizations, or both, for projects to carry out the purpose of this part in accordance with the authorities and subject to the restrictions in the provisions of this part.

"(b) The assignment of volunteers under this part shall be on such terms and conditions, and volunteers may be provided only such allowances, stipends, and benefits and be afforded such status and be subject to such restrictions as are provided for in this Act (except with respect to coverage under section 415(d)) for volunteers whose service and time commitment is of similar character. The Director shall take appropriate steps to encourage the assignment together of volunteers from various age groups, particularly young and old, and the use of volunteers enrolled for a period of full-time service of one year or more and volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service in assignments as catalysts to extend the effectiveness of paid employees of projects and in assignments to carry out recruitment and placement activities.

"(c) Notwithstanding any other provision of this Act or any other law, not more than an amount equal to 15 per centum of the total amount available for grants and contracts and the conduct of programs under this part for each fiscal year shall be expended for administrative expenses from sums appropriated under section 504 of this Act in order to carry out this part.

"(d) In prescribing regulations to carry out this part and in designating lead agencies pursuant to section 133(a) of this Act, the Director shall consult with the Director of the Community Services Administration established under section 601(a) of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2941(a)).

"AUTHORITY TO OPERATE URBAN NEIGHBORS PROGRAMS

"SEC. 133. (a)(1) The Director, with the concurrence of the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of an urban area with distressed neighborhoods, is authorized to designate and provide financial assistance to a lead agency in accordance with the provisions of paragraph (2) of this subsection to support the efforts of teams (each team consisting of one professional employee familiar with the distressed urban area in question, at least one volunteer enrolled for a period of full-time service of one year or more, and volunteers enrolled for periods of full-time and part-time service) and essential support staff to operate Urban Neighbors Programs to carry out community revitalization and person-to-person service activities in distressed urban neighborhoods through—

"(A) the recruitment, on a request-for-service basis, of volunteers who possess needed skills and the matching of such volunteers with neighborhood groups requiring the skills of such volunteers in carrying out community revitalization and person-to-person service projects, with appropriate emphasis on activities to carry out the national neighborhood priority programs established under section 134 of this Act;

"(B) the development of a resource bank listing locally-recruited persons willing to serve as volunteers enrolled for periods of part-time service to assist such groups in such projects;

"(C) the encouragement of the development of neighborhood groups in distressed urban neighborhoods to carry out such projects;

"(D) the coordination and facilitation of volunteer assistance available through regional resource centers pursuant to subsection (b) of this section; and

"(E) such other activities consistent with the provisions of this part as the Director determines are necessary to carry out the purpose of this part.

"(2) An organization which is a public or private nonprofit organization (such as a local governmental agency, a community action agency, a community college, a broad-based coalition of neighborhood groups, or other voluntary organization or agency) or a combination of such organizations may qualify for designation as a lead agency under paragraph (1) of this subsection. In the selection of lead agencies, the Director shall assure that—

"(A) an application process, pursuant to regulations which the Director shall prescribe, has been established for organizations and agencies interested in being designed as a lead agency;

"(B) public announcement has been made and other appropriate efforts have been made to provide individual notification to potentially eligible organizations and agencies of such process; and

"(C) special consideration is given to those organizations and agencies which have demonstrated their effectiveness in serving persons in distressed urban areas and in mobilizing volunteers, coordinating volunteer assistance projects, and working with other appropriate private, public, and voluntary organizatons and agencies or Federal, State, and local governmental agencies, with priority given to community action agencies (as defined in section 212(b) of this Act) of demonstrated effectiveness where the program in the urban area in question will focus predominately on low-income persons served by such agency.

"(b)(1) The Director is authorized to provide directly and not by grant or contract, appro riate assistance to programs operated under this section, including (A) the recruitment of scarce-skill volunteers to assist in projects carried out pursuant to this part, (B) the provision, where appropriate, of such payments (such as essential job-related expenses) to volunteers serving under this part as are authorized under section 132(b) of this Act, and (C) the provision of technical, management, and coordination assistance for lead agencies designated under subsection (a) of this section.

"(2) The Director, after consultation with the mayor or other chief elected governmental authority of the urban area involved, is authorized to make neighborhood seed-money grants to nonprofit organizations in distressed urban neighborhoods (either directly or for distribution to such organizations by lead agencies designated under subsection (a) of this section) to promote volunteer activities in such neighborhoods. and provide volunteers working in neighborhood groups with such materials, tools, supplies, training, and administrative support as the Director deems necessary to enable such volunteers to work effectively, in community revitalization and person-to-person service projects. No nonprofit organization grantee shall be eligible to receive in any fiscal year funds under this subsection in excess of $15,000 or a total of $30,000 over any three fiscal years for use by an entity in a particular neighborhood.

"(3) Not more than 30 per centum of the sums appropriated to carry out this part for each fiscal year shall be used for the purpose of making grants under this subsection.

"(c) With respect to activities carried out under this section to assist low-income persons residing in areas served by community action agencies (as defined in section 212(b) of this Act), lead agencies designated under subsection (a) of this section and the Director shall consult with such community action agencies, and, with respect to activities carried out under this section to assist elderly persons residing in an area served by an area agency on aging designated under title III of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended (42 U.S.C. ch. 35), such lead agencies and the Director shall consult with such agency.

"AUTHORITY TO DEVELOP AND CARRY OUT NATIONAL URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD PRIORITIES PROGRAMS

"SEC. 134. The Director shall develop and carry out National Urban Neighborhood Priorities Programs, including—

"(1) a program designated 'Helping Hand', utilizing person-to-person services to reduce the necessity for institutionalization (in hospitals, mental institutions, nursing homes, other extended-care settings, and other facilities) and to ameliorate residential isolation (through senior centers, halfway-house facilities, and other residential settings) of older persons, handicapped persons, and other affected persons, stressing interactions between persons from various age groups, particularly young and old, and carried out in coordination with the appropriate State system for the protection and advocacy of the rights of persons with developmental disabilities established pursuant to amendments made by section 203 of the Developmental Disabilities Assistance and Bill of Rights Act;

"(2) a program designed to provide personal and group financial counseling to low- and fixed-income individuals, utilizing volunteers with specialized or technical expertise; and

"(3) such other additional program as the Director may identify each year as a national program priority (based on the Director's determination that the activities to be carried out under such program have been demonstrated in programs carried out under part C of this title to be effective in achieving their purposes) to stimulate and initiate improved methods of utilizing volunteers to carry out the purpose of this part, and the continuation of any such programs as the Director may determine.".

(2) Not less than sixty days prior to instituting any programs, carrying out any activities, or making any grants or contracts under part D of title I of this Act (as added by paragraph (1) of this subsection), the Director of the ACTION Agency shall submit to the appropriate Committees of the Congress a program plan describing in particularity the proposed nature, scope, and geographic distribution of such programs, activities, grants, and contracts, including the regulations and guidelines proposed to govern the implementation of such part D and the specific arrangements to be made for the conduct of evaluations of such programs, activities, grants, and contracts pursuant to section 417 of this Act. Not later than 18 months after such program plan is submitted, the Director shall submit to such Committees a report on such programs, activities, grants, and contracts, including a description of all programs established and contracts and grants made under such part D and funds obligated therefor and thereunder.

(b) The table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting below the heading for section 123 the following:

"PART D—URBAN NEIGHBORHOOD VOLUNTEER PROGRAMS

"Sec. 131. Statements of purpose.

"Sec. 132. General provisions.

"Sec. 133. Authority to operate Urban Neighbors Programs.

"Sec. 134. Authority to develop and carry out National Urban Neighborhood Priorities Programs.".

SEC. 7. Section 201 of the Act is amended by—

(1) striking out in subsection (c) "sixty" and inserting in lieu thereof "forty-five"; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, volunteer service under this part shall not be deemed employment for any purpose which the Director finds is not fully consistent with provisions and in furtherance of the purpose of this part.".

SEC. 8. Section 212(a) of the Act is amended by striking out paragraphs (2) and (3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2)(A) The Director shall award a grant or contract under this part for a project to be carried out over an area in a State more comprehensive than one community, to the State agency established or designated pursuant to section 304(a)(1) of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended (42 U.S.C. 3024(a)(1)), unless (i) the State has not established or designated such as agency, or (ii) such agency has been afforded at least forty-five days to (I) review the project application made by a prospective grantee or contractor other than such agency for a project to be carried out in such State and (II) make recommendations thereon. In the event that such an established or designated State agency is not awarded the grant or contract, any application approved for a project in such State must contain or be supported by satisfactory assurances that the project has been developed, and will, to the extent feasible, be conducted, in consultation with, or with the participation of, such agency.

"(B) The Director shall award a grant or contract under this part for a project to be carried out entirely in a community served by a community action agency, to such agency unless such agency and the State agency established or designated pursuant to section 304(a)(1) of the Older Americans Act of 1965, as amended (42 U.S.C. 3024(a)(1)) have been afforded at least forty-five days to (i) review the project application made by a prospective grantee or contractor other than either such agency for a project to be carried out in such community and (ii) make recommendations thereon. In the event that such a community action agency or such an established or designated State agency is not awarded the grant or contract, any application approved for a project to be carried out entirely in such community must contain or be supported by satisfactory assurances that the project has been developed, and will, to the extent feasible, be conducted, in consultation with, or with the participation of, such community action agency.".

(1) inserting "(1)" after "(g)";

(2) insert before the period at the end of paragraph (1) (as redesignated by clause (1) of this section) a colon and "Provided, That this paragraph shall not apply in the case of such payments when the Director determines that the value of all such payments, adjusted to reflect the number of hours such volunteers are serving, is equivalent to or greater than the minimum wage then in effect under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, as amended (29 U.S.C. 201 et seq.)"; and

(3) inserting at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(2) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, a person enrolled for full-time service as a volunteer under title I of this Act who was otherwise entitled to receive assistance or services under any governmental program prior to such volunteer's enrollment shall not be denied such assistance or services because of such volunteer's failure or refusal to register for, seek, or accept employment or training during the period of such service.".

SEC. 10. Section 410 of the Act is amended by inserting at the end thereof the following new sentence: "The Director, in consultation with the Chairman of the Civil Service Commission and the Secretaries of Labor, Commerce, and the Treasury and officials of other appropriate departments and agencies, shall take all appropriate steps to encourage State and local governments, charitable and service organizations, and private employers (1) to take into account experience in volunteer work in the consideration of applicants for employment, and (2) to make provision for the listing and description of volunteer work on all employment application forms.".

(1) amending subsection (b) by—

(A) striking out in the first sentence "in programs under title I of this Act for periods of service of at least one year" and inserting in lieu thereof "as volunteers for periods of full-time service, or, as the Director deems appropriate in accordance with regulations, for periods of part-time service of not less than twenty hours or more per week for twenty-six or more consecutive weeks, under title I of this Act";

(B) striking out in clause (3) "and";

(C) amending clause (4)(A) by striking out "the monthly pay of a volunteer shall be deemed that received under the entrance salary for a grade GS–7 employee," and inserting in lieu thereof "the annual rate of pay of a volunteer enrolled for a period of full-time service under such title I shall be deemed to be that received under the entrance salary for a grade GS–7 employee, and the annual rate of pay of a volunteer enrolled for a period of part-time service under such title I shall be deemed to be an appropriate portion of such entrance salary,"; and

(D) striking out the period at the end thereof and inserting in lieu thereof a comma and "and (5) be deemed employees of the United States for the purposes of section 5584 of title 5, United States Code (and stipends and allowances paid under this Act shall be considered as pay for such purposes).."; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(f)(1) The remedy—

"(A) against the United States provided by sections 1346(b) and 2672 of title 28, United States Code, or

"(B) through proceedings for compensation or other benefits from the United States as provided by any other law, where the availability of such benefits precludes a remedy under section 1346(b) or 2672 of such title 28, for damages for personal injury, including death, allegedly arising from malpractice or negligence of a physician, dentist, podiatrist, optometrist, nurse, physician assistant, expanded-function dental auxiliary, pharmacist, or paramedical (for example, medical and dental technicians, nursing assistants, and therapists) or other supporting personnel in furnishing medical care or treatment while in the exercise of such person's duties as a volunteer enrolled under title I of this Act shall hereafter be exclusive of any other civil action or proceeding by reason of the same subject matter against such person (or such person's estate) whose action or omission gave rise to such claim.

"(2) The Attorney General shall defend any civil action or proceeding brought in any court against any person referred to in paragraph (1) of this subsection (or such person's estate) for any such damage or injury. Any such person against whom such civil action or proceeding is brought shall deliver, within such time after date of service or knowledge of service as determined by the Attorney General, all process served upon such person or an attested true copy thereof to such person's immediate supervisor or to whomever is designated by the Director to receive such papers, and such person shall promptly furnish copies of the pleading and process therein to the United States attorney for the district embracing the place wherein the proceeding is brought and to the Attorney General.

"(3) Upon a certification by the Attorney General that the defendant was acting in the scope of such person's volunteer assignment at the time of the incident out of which the suit arose, any such civil action or proceeding commenced in a State court shall be removed without bond at any time before trial by the Attorney General to the district court of the United States of the district and division embracing the place wherein it is pending and the proceeding deemed a tort action brought against the United States under the provisions of title 28, United States Code, and all references thereto. After removal the United States shall have available all defenses to which it would have been entitled if the action had originally been commenced against the United States. Should a United States district court determine on a hearing on a motion to remand held before a trial on the merits that the volunteer whose act or omission gave rise to the suit was not acting within the scope of such person's volunteer assignment, the case shall be remanded to the State court.

"(4) The Attorney General may compromise or settle any claim asserted in such civil action or proceeding in the manner provided in section 2677 of title 28, United States Code, and with the same effect.".

SEC. 12. Section 414 of the Act is amended by inserting "among various regions of the country and" after "equitably".

SEC. 13. Section 417 of the Act is amended by—

(1) inserting at the end of subsection (a) the following new sentence: "For the purposes of this subsection, title VI of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000d), section 504 of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 794), and the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (Public Law 94–135, title III; 42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.), any project or activity to which volunteers are assigned under this Act shall be deemed to be receiving Federal financial assistance."; and

(2) inserting at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(c) The Director shall apply the nondiscrimination policies and authorities set forth in section 717 of the Civil Rights Act of 1974 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–16) in title V of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. ch. 16, subch. V), and in the Age Discrimination Act of 1975 (Public Law 94–135, title III; 42 U.S.C. 6101 et seq.) to applicants for enrollment for service as volunteers and to volunteers serving under this Act and the Peace Corps Act (22 U.S.C. 2501 et seq.), and any remedies under such laws shall be available to aggrieved such applicants or volunteers Not later than ninety days after the date of the enactment of this Act. the Director, after consultation with the Equal Employment Opportunity Coordinating Council (established by section 715 of the Civil Rights Act of 1964 (42 U.S.C. 2000e–14)) with regard to the application of the policies set forth in section 717 of such Civil Rights Act and with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare and the Interagency Committee on Handicapped Employees (established by section 501(a) of the Rehabilitation Act of 1973 (29 U.S.C. 791(a)) with regard to the application of the policies set forth in title V of such Rehabilitation Act, and not later than ninety days after the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare publishes final general regulations to carry out such Age Discrimination Act, the Director, after consultation with the Secretary with regard to the application of the policies set forth in such Act, shall prescribe regulations establishing the procedures for the application of such policies so as to promote the enrollment and service of persons as such volunteers without regard to the discriminatory factors proscribed in such laws.".

SEC. 14. (a) Title IV of the Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"REDUCTION OF PAPERWORK

"SEC. 423. In order to reduce unnecessary, duplicative, or disruptive demands for information, the Director, in consultation with other appropriate agencies and organizations, shall continually review and evaluate all requests for information made under this Act and take such action as may be necessary to reduce the paperwork required under this Act. The Director shall request only such information as the Director deems essential to carry out the purposes and provisions of this Act.".

(b) The table of contents of the Act is amended by inserting below the heading for section 422 the following:

"SEC. 423. Reduction of paperwork.".

SEC. 15. Title V of the Act is amended by—

(1) amending section 501 by—

(A) striking out "(a)" and striking out "and" after "September 30, 1977," in the first sentence, and inserting "September 30, 1979, September 30, 1980, and September 30, 1981," after "September 30, 1978," in such sentence;

(B) striking out "$29,600,000" in the second sentence of subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "80 per centum,"; and striking out "this" and inserting in lieu thereof "such", and inserting before the period a comma and "and, of the sums so appropriated, not more than $25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, not more than $275,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, and not more than $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981, shall be available for the purpose of carrying out part D of such title: Provided, That, notwithstanding any other provision of law, no sums appropriated for such purpose shall be obligated or expended (except insofar as is necessary in order to comply with clause (2) of this section) unless (1) not less than a total of $72,600,000 has been appropriated and made available under section 502 of this Act, and (2) not less than $8,100,000 of the sums appropriated for the purpose of carrying out such part D has been obligated for carrying out the programs authorized by section 134 (1) and (2) of this Act".

(C) striking out the last sentence of subsection (a) and all of subsection (b).

(2) amending section 502 by—

(A) striking out in subsection (a) "and" after "September 30, 1976,", and inserting "$25,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $30,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, and $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981," after "September 30, 1978,"; and

(4) amending section 504 by striking out "and" after "September 30, 1977,", and inserting "September 30, 1979, September 30, 1980, and September 30, 1981," after "September 30, 1978,".

SEC. 16. Not later than February 1, 1979, the Director of the ACTION Agency shall submit to the appropriate Committees of the Congress a report specifying the special needs and circumstances to be addressed in designing programs under the Domestic Volunteer Service Act of 1973 for implementation in rural areas, and a strategy and timetable for meeting such needs and circumstances.

Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. CRANSTON. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATION ACT AMENDMENTS OF 1978

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will proceed to the consideration of S. 2534, which will be stated by title.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 2534) to revise and extend the provisions of title XIII of the Public Health Service Act relating to health maintenance organizations.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Committee on Human Resources with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Health Maintenance Organization Act Amendments of 1978".

(b) Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Public Health Service Act.

REQUIREMENTS FOR HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1301(b)(3) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The services of physicians which are provided as basic health services shall be provided through physicians or health professionals who are members of the staff of the health maintenance organization, through a medical group (or groups), through an individual practice association (or associations), through physicians or health professionals who have contracted with the health maintenance organization for the provision of such services, or through any combination of such staff, medical group (or groups), individual practice association (or associations), or physicians or health professionals under contract with the organization, except that this paragraph shall not apply in the case of (A) physician services which the organization determines, in conformity with regulations of the Secretary, are unusual or infrequently used, or (B) any physician service provided a member of the health maintenance organization other than by such a physician because of an emergency which made it medically necessary that the service be provided to the member before he could have it provided by such a physician. A health maintenance organization may also, during the thirty-six-month period beginning with the month following the month in which the organization becomes a qualified health maintenance organization (within the meaning of section 1310(d)), provide physician services through an entity which but for the requirement of section 1302(4)(C)(i) would be a medical group for the purposes of this title. After the expiration of such period, the organization may provide physician services through such an entity only if authorized by the Secretary in accordance with regulations which take into consideration the unusual circumstances of such entity. A health maintenance organization may not, in any of its fiscal years after the end of its fourth fiscal year of its operation, enter into contracts with physicians other than members of staff, medical groups, or individual practice associations if the amounts paid under such contracts for basic and supplemental health services provided by physicians exceed 15 per centum of the total estimated amount to be paid in such fiscal year by the health maintenance organization to physicians for the provision of basic and supplemental health services by physicians, or, if the health maintenance organization principally serves a rural area, 30 per centum of such amount, except that this sentence does not apply to the entering into of contracts for the purchase of physician services through an entity which but for the requirements of section 1302(4)(C)(i) would be a medical group for the purposes of this title. Contracts between a health maintenance organization and health professionals for the provision of basic and supplemental health services shall include such provisions as the Secretary may require (including provisions requiring appropriate continuing education). For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'health professional' means physicians, dentists, nurses, podiatrists, optometrists, and such other individuals engaged in the delivery of health services as the Secretary may by regulation designate.".

DEVELOPMENT GRANTS AND INITIAL OPERATING LOANS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1304(f)(2)(A) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) $2,000,000, or".

(b) Section 1305(b)(1) is amended by—

(1) striking "$2,500,000" and substituting "$5,000,000"; and

(2) striking "$1,000,000" and substituting "$2,00,000".

AMBULATORY CARE FACILITIES

SEC. 4. (a)(1) Section 1305(a) is amended by striking "and" after paragraph (2); striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and susbtituting a semicolon, and adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) make loans to, and guarantee to non-Federal lenders payment of principal of and interest on loans made to—

"(A) public or nonprofit private entities which have submitted and had approved an application for assistance under section 1304 in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, or

"(B) public or nonprofit private health maintenance organizations which have demonstrated to the Secretary the capability of maintaning continued fiscal soundness in accordance with the requirements of section 1301(c)(1), or

"(C) other private health maintenance organizations (which have submitted and had approved an application for assistance under this subsection in accordance with regulations of the Secretary and which have demonstrated to the Secretary the capability of maintaining continued fiscal soundness in accordance with the requirements of section 1301(c)(1)) but only if the health maintenance organization will serve a medically underserved population, to assist them in meeting the costs of equiping, constructing, acquiring, or renovating ambulatory care facilities.".

(2) Section 1305(a) is further amended by striking "operating costs" in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) and substituting in each case "costs of operation".

(b) Section 1305(b) is amended by inserting after "under this section" each time it appears "(other than paragraph (4) of subsection (a))".

(c) The section heading for section 1305 is amended to read as follows:

"LOANS AND LOAN GUARANTEES FOR INITIAL COSTS OF OPERATION AND AMBULATORY CARE FACILITIES"

(d) Section 1305(d) is amended by striking "1980" and substituting "1985".

BENEFITS REQUIRED

SEC. 5. The material in section 1301(b) preceding paragraph (1) is amended by striking "other than those prescribed by or under this title" and substituting "(other than limitations and exclusions approved by the Secretary with respect to services the health maintenance organization is unable to deliver due to natural disasters, wars, or insurrection; with respect to financial liability for care for illness, injury, or conditions covered by a workmen's compensation statute; or with respect to unusual and infrequent medical services or procedures not necessary to protect the health of the member; and other than a limitation otherwise prescribed by or under this title)".

EMPLOYEES' DEDUCTIONS FOR HEALTH BENEFIT PLANS

SEC. 6. (a) Section 1310 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) Each employer, with a demonstrated capability to provide payroll deductions for health benefits, which is required by subsection (a) to offer to his employees the option of membership in a qualified health maintenance organization shall, with the consent of the employee who exercises such option, arrange for the employee contribution for such membership to be deducted from such employee's wages and salaries and forwarded on his behalf to the qualified health maintenance organization.".

(b) Section 1310(b)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) one or more of such organizations provides physician services through physicians who are members of the staff of the organization or a medical group (or groups), and".

(c) Section 1310(b)(2) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) one or more of such organizations provides physician services through (A) an individual practice association (or associations), or (B) a combination of such association (or associations), medical group or groups, staff, and individual nonstaff physicians under contract with the organization, then of the qualified health maintenance organizations included in a health benefits plan of such employer pursuant to subsection (a) at least one shall be an organization which provides basic health services as described in clause (1) and at least one shall be an organization which provides basic health services as described in clause (2).".

CONTINUING DEVELOPMENT

SEC. 7. (a) Section 1304(b)(2) is amended by inserting "improvement of services, or" after "subsection includes".

(b) Section 1304 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l)(1) A grant or loan guarantee made under this section for the improvement of services may be made only to an entity which demonstrates the capability of maintaining continued fiscal soundness in accordance with the requirements of section 1301(c)(1).

"(2) Grants or loan guarantees made to a single entity under this section for the improvement of services may not in the aggregate exceed an amount equal to the maximum sums which the applicant would have been eligible to receive under section 1303 and this section less any amounts actually received under such section. The provisions of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) shall not apply to a grant made for the improvement of services.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 8. Section 1309(a) is amended by—

(1) striking "and" after "1977," the first time it appears; and

(2) striking everything after the semicolon and substituting the following: "$50,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $70,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, $90,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981, $95,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and $95,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983; and for the purpose of making payments under grants and contracts under section 1304(b) for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1984 there is authorized to be appropriated $95,000,000.".

TRAINING FOR HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATION ADMINISTRATORS

SEC. 9. Title XII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"MANAGERIAL TRAINING

"SEC. 1317. (a) The Secretary shall establish a National Health Maintenance Organization Intern Program (hereinafter referred to as the 'Program') for the purpose of training qualified health maintenance organization administrators and other managerial personnel.

"(b) Payments for internships or for the costs of internships administered under this section may be awarded by the Secretary either—

"(1) to individuals whose application for such position has been approved by the Secretary; or

"(2) to a health maintenance organization or other entity which has submitted and had approved an application for a grant under this section.

"(c) Payments under this section may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement, and at such intervals and on such conditions, as the Secretary finds necessary. Such payments to health maintenance organizations or other entities may be used only for the costs of such internships, and payments under this section with respect to any internship shall be limited to such amounts as the Secretary finds necessary to cover the costs incurred by the health maintenance organization or other entity under this section.

"(d) Payments to individuals receiving training under this section shall not exceed the sum of $2,000 per month per individual, excluding relocation costs, nor shall the term of such payments exceed twelve months.

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981, $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983.".

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

SEC. 10. Title XIII as amended by this Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

"SEC. 1318. (a) Each health maintenance organization shall file annually with the Secretary financial information in such form as the Secretary may require (which in the case of an organization which is related to the health maintenance organization by common ownership or control, shall be a consolidated financial statement), which shall include:

"(1) Such information as the Secretary may require, demonstrating that the health maintenance organization has a fiscally sound operation.

"(2) A description of transactions, as specified by the Secretary, between the health maintenance organization and a party in interest. Such transactions shall include—

"(A) any sale or exchange, or leasing of any property between the health maintenance organization and a party in interest;

"(B) any furnishing for consideration of goods, services (including management services, but excluding health services provided to members by staff, medical group (or groups), individual practice associations (or associations), of any combination thereof), or facilities between the health maintenance organization and a party in interest; and

"(C) any lending of money or other extension of credit between a health maintenance organization and a party in interest.

"(b) For the purposes of this section the term 'party in interest' means:

"(1) any director, officer, employee, partner, person who is directly or indirectly the beneficial owner of more than 5 per centum of the equity, or person who is the beneficial owner of a mortgage, deed of trust, note, or other interest secured by, and valuing more than 5 per centum of the assets (and in the case of a health maintenance organization organized as a nonprofit corporation, an incorporator or member of such corporation under the applicable State corporation law) of the health maintenance organization;

"(2) any entity in which any director, officer, employee, partner, person who is directly or indirectly the beneficial owner of more than 5 per centum of the equity, or person who is the beneficial owner of a mortgage, deed of trust, note or other interest secured by, and valuing more than 5 per centum of the assets (and in the case of a health maintenance organization organized as a nonprofit membership corporation, an incorporator or member of such corporation under the applicable State corporation law) of the health maintenance organization:

"(A) is an officer or director;

"(B) is a partner (if such entity is organized as a partnership);

"(C) has directly or indirectly a beneficial interest of more than 5 per centum of the equity; or

"(D) has a mortgage, deed of trust, note, or other interest valuing more than 5 per centum of the assets of such entity;

"(3) any person directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with the health maintenance organization.

"(c) Each health maintenance organization shall make the contents of the annual statement described in subsection (a) available to its enrollees upon reasonable request.

"(d) The Secretary shall, as he deems necessary, conduct an evaluation of transactions reported to the Secretary under subsection (a)(2) for the purpose of determining their adverse impact, if any, on the fiscal soundness and reasonableness of charges to the health maintenance organization with respect to which they transpired. The Secretary shall evaluate the reported transactions of not less than five, or if there are more than twenty health maintenance organizations reporting such transactions, not less than one-fourth of the health maintenance organizations reporting any such transactions under subsection (a)(2).

"(e) The Secretary shall file an annual report with the Congress on the operation of this section. Such report shall include—

"(1) an enumeration of standards and norms utilized to make the evaluations required under subsection (d);

"(2) an assessment of the degree of conformity or noncomformity of each health maintenance organization evaluated by the Secretary under subsection (d) with each such standards and norms;

"(3) what action, if any, the Secretary considers necessary under section 1312 with respect to health maintenance organizations evaluated under subsection (d).

"(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed to confer upon the Secretary any authority to approve or disapprove the rates charged by any health maintenance organization.

"(g) Any health maintenance organization failing to file with the Secretary the annual financial statement required in subsection (a) shall be ineligible for any Federal assistance under this title until such time as such statement is received by the Secretary.".

HEALTH PLANNING AMENDMENTS

SEC. 11. (a) Section 1531(5) is amended to read as follows:

"(5)(A) The term 'institutional health services' means (i) the health services provided through health care facilities (but excluding health care facilities of health maintenance organizations other than hospitals) as defined in regulations of the Secretary including, but not limited to, private and public hospitals and nursing homes if such services entail annual operating costs of $50,000 or more; and (ii) diagnostic or therapeutic equipment, acquired through purchase, rental, lease, or gift, valued at the time of acquisition in excess of $150,000, used in the delivery of health care services by any person, institution, or other entity.

"(B) In determining whether diagnostic or therapeutic equipment has a value in excess of $150,000 for purposes of subparagraph (A), the value of studies, surveys, designs, plans, working drawings, specifications, and other activities essential to the acquisition of such equipment shall be included.".

(b) Section 1531 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(6)(A) Except as provided in paragraph (B), the term 'health maintenance organization' means a public or private organization, organized under the laws of any State, which has had approved an application for assistance under section 1304 or which (i) provides or otherwise makes available to enrolled participants health care services, including at least the following basic health care services: usual physician services, hospitalization, laboratory, X-ray, emergency and preventive services, and out of area coverage; (ii) is compensated (except for copayments) for the provision of the basic health care services listed in clause (i) to enrolled participants on a predetermined periodic rate basis; and (iii) provides physicians' services primarily (I) directly through physicians who are either employees or partners of such organization, or (II) through arrangements with individual physicians or one or more groups of physicians (organized on a group practice or individual practice basis)

"(B) For the purposes of section 1532(d), the term 'health maintenance organization' means an entity which has been determined by the Secretary to be qualified health maintenance organization pursuant to section 1310(d).".

(c) Section 1523(a)(4) is amended by (1) striking "services, facilities, and organizations" each place it occurs and inserting in lieu thereof "services and facilities" and (2) inserting before the last sentence thereof the following: "No such program shall have provisions for the review and determination of need of the services, facilities, equipment, and organization of health maintenance organizations that are in addition to provisions for the review and determination of need of the services, facilities, equipment, and organization of other providers of ambulatory health care".

(d) Section 1532 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) Notwithstanding subsection (c), an application for a health maintenance organization (as defined in section 1531(6)(B)) for a certificate of need for new institutional health services shall be approved by the State Agency if the State Agency finds (in accordance with criteria prescribed by the Secretary) that—

"(1) approval of such application is required to meet the needs of the members of the health maintenance organization and of the new members which such organization can reasonably be expected to enroll, and

"(2) the health maintenance organization is unable to provide, through services or facilities which can reasonably be expected to be available to the organization, its institutional health services in a reasonable and cost-effective manner which is consistent with the basic method of operation of the organization and which makes such services available on a long-term basis through physicians and other health professionals associated with it.".

PROGRAMS ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 12. (a)(1) Section 1306(b)(2) is repealed.

(2) Paragraphs (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), and (8) of section 1306(b) are redesignated as paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), and (7), respectively.

(b) Section 1037 is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(f) The Secretary may make grants to public or nonprofit private entities and enter into contracts with private entities for activities to assist in the provision of technical assistance to projects and health maintenance organizations, and in making determinations within the meaning of sections 1308, 1310, and 1312 of the Act.".

(c) Subsection (h) of section 1310 is repealed.

(d) Subsection (c) of section 1312 is repealed.

Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Susan Brannigan and Robin Paquin of my staff may have the privilege of the floor throughout the day today for any votes and any debates on any bills.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I make the same request for Sherri Kramer and Robert Hunter of my staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. On whose time?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that during the consideration of S. 2534, Marcia Stanhope, Tom Delbanco and Sheila Burke have the privilege of the floor during consideration and vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Ray Jones be granted the privilege of the floor.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I yield myself so much time as I may require.

(Mr. BUMPERS assumed the chair).

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, as the ranking Republican on the Senate Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research, I am delighted to join our distinguished chairman (Mr. KENNEDY) in presenting S. 2534 for Senate approval.

The Schweiker-Kennedy Health Maintenance Organization Act Amendments of 1978 are the product of commendable bipartisan cooperation involving the administration and many dedicated Members of the House and Senate. This joint effort reflects a growing belief that health maintenance organizations can become a major asset for meeting the health care needs of our Nation.

As my colleagues are aware, health maintenance organizations are prepaid health plans in which members make fixed regular payments entitling them to the variety of services provided by the organizations. Since payments are made in advance, there is an economic incentive for HMO s to maintain the health of their members and also to avoid costly and unnecessary treatment. Traditionally, the emphasis of physicians and other providers of health care has been on the treatment of chronic or crisis illness; in an HMO system, the emphasis is more on preventive care.

One of the most pressing issues facing this Nation today is the skyrocketing cost of health care. Congress has now spent many months attempting to sort out and resolve a host of complex problems stemming from proposals that the Federal Government directly regulate hospital revenues. Health maintenance organizations are a promising method for driving down health care costs, and, at the same time, improving access and quality of care through the operation of internal incentives rather than direct Government regulation.

While HMO's are not the final answer to the health care cost problem, they do provide an attractive alternative and create much needed competition for the health care dollar. HMO's have now had time to prove their cost-saving abilities. We know that HMO's can achieve overall cost savings of from 10 to 40 percent. According to a new HMO census, inpatient hospital utilization under health maintenance organizations is only 488 days per 1,000 per year—compared to a national average of over 900 days under the traditional fee-for-service system. The more information we get on HMO performance, the more we know about their cost-saving potential.

Since 1971, Federal HMO policy has been both confusing and unpredictable. The Health Maintenance Organization Act of 1973 was designed to encourage the devlopment of HMO's through Federal grants and loans, and through a number of devices to help HMO's compete with more traditional health systems in the health insurance marketplace. However, it became apparent that the 1973 act contained too many restrictions which kept HMO's from being financially viable. A long implementation process, regulations that made the original law unworkable, and years of inattention by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare all kept the HMO movement from getting off the ground as it should have. This inconsistent pattern of Federal HMO policy failed to attract new enterprises to the program and also damaged HMO's efforts to raise private capital.

But, thanks to the perseverance of all who are dedicated to this innovative prepayment concept, a very difficult beginning has become a constructive educational foundation. I was pleased to introduce and support the 1976 HMO amendments, which went a long way toward freeing health maintenance organizations from excessive Federal requirements and putting them on an equal footing with the fee-for-service system. They also attacked some distressing instances of HMO fraud and abuse by requiring Federal qualification of any HMO receiving medicare or medicaid moneys.

We now have many reasons to be encouraged about the future of HMO's in the United States. HMO's are growing in popularity and the movement is working hard to resolve the technical and operational difficulties any new industry experiences. In addition, the administration has announced that HMO development is one of its highest health priorities. It has undertaken steps to reorganize and greatly improve the operation of the HMO program at HEW. HMO activities have now been consolidated under a newly appointed director of the Office of Health Maintenance Organizations. HEW is also moving ahead with plans to promote public awareness of the HMO concept, implement stringent qualification, compliance, and quality of care monitoring mechanisms, and eliminate unnecessary delays in processing applications for Federal assistance.

However, it is also clear that HMO's will not be able to achieve their full potential under existing law. Only about 6 million Americans now belong to HMO's. There has only been a 5.2 percent increase in HMO enrollment over the last year. A number of new legislative steps are necessary to encourage HMO development, assure their financial independence, improve the capacity of HEW to administer the program effectively, and insure that HMO's will not be abused by health care profiteers. It is for this reason that Senator KENNEDY and I introduced S. 2534, which will couple an extension of HMO program authorizations with a number of new provisions necessary to improve the HMO program and allow HMO's to enter a new stage of development.

Specifically, S. 2534, as amended and reported unanimously by the Human Resources Committee, would do the following:

First. Extend the authorizations of appropriations for HMO feasibility, planning, and initial development grants and contracts.

Second. Increase the maximum dollar limit for initial development project grants, contracts, and loan guarantees from $1 to $2 million.

Third. Increase the aggregate dollar limit for HMO initial operating loans and guarantees from $2.5 to $5 million and increase the amount of operating loans which could be disbursed to an HMO in any 1 year from $1 to $2 million.

Fourth. Add a new authority for loans and loan guarantees to assist in the costs of equipping, consulting, acquiring, or renovating ambulatory care facilities for HMO's and entities intending to become HMO's.

Fifth. Extend the authority for initial operating loans and loan guarantees.

Sixth. Expand the purposes for which assistance for initial development projects may be made to include improvement of services.

Seventh. Authorize narrow limitations and exclusions with respect to benefits required to be provided by HMO's in order to obtain Federal qualification. Such limitations and exclusions would have to be approved by the Secretary and could apply only to: first, services that the HMO cannot deliver because of natural disasters, war, or insurrection; second, financial liability for care for illness, injury, or conditions covered by a workmen's compensation statute; or third, unusual and infrequent medical services or procedures not necessary to protect the health of the member.

Eighth. Clarify provisions in existing law with regard to limitations on contracting for health services outside the HMO. As amended, these limitations would apply only to physicians' services and not to all health professional services.

Ninth. Clarify provisions in existing law with regard to reimbursement for emergency medical services. As amended, these provisions would specify that HMO members will be reimbursed by the HMO for expenses incurred in securing emergency health services not provided by the HMO only if it was medically necessary that these services be provided before the member could secure them through the HMO.

Tenth. Require each employer subject to the dual choice provisions of section 1310 to arrange for the deduction of HMO membership payments from an employee's salary, provided the employee consents.

Eleventh. Establish a national health maintenance organization intern program for the purpose of training qualified HMO administrators and managerial personnel. The Secretary would be authorized to award payments for individuals receiving training in the internship program in amounts up to $2,000 a month, per individual, for a maximum of 1 year of training, and also to reimburse HMO's or other entities for costs incurred in training interns.

Twelfth. Add reporting and disclosure requirements with regard to financial information concerning HMO's so as to trigger HEW monitoring of self-dealing situations. The Secretary would conduct an evaluation of reported transactions between HMO's and parties-in-interest for the purpose of determining their adverse impact, if any, on the fiscal soundness and reasonableness of charges to the HMO.

Thirteenth. Repeal provisions of existing law which require that the qualification and compliance activities of the HMO program be administered in the Office of the Assistant Secretary for Health.

Fourteenth. Authorize the Secretary to make grants and contracts for the provision of technical assistance to HMO's.

Fifteenth. Amend the health planning law to require that State certificate-of-need laws cover services, facilities, equipment, and organization of HMO's no more restrictively than fee-for-service providers. Certain specified criteria would be applied to evaluation of CON applications for the purchase of expensive equipment and acquisition of inpatient hospital facilities by qualified HMO's.

Mr. President, certain features of our bill warrant special mention. One of the primary considerations we had in the development of S. 2534 was the perplexing matter of isolated incidents of abuse in medicaid-related prepaid health plans. These incidents were brought to light in 1975 by the Investigations Subcommittee on the Government Affairs Committee. The authors of S. 2534 were seriously concerned that these occurrences could jeopardize the viability of the HMO concept. While the 1976 HMO amendments responded to these problems by requiring that any HMO receiving medicare or medicaid moneys be federally qualified, we attempted to draft even stronger financial disclosure provisions to insure that such problems would not recur. Section 10 of S. 2534, containing detailed reporting requirements, as well as mandates on HEW to review the information collected, is the result of these efforts. We think it will be an important and effective tool for preventing further abuse.

In addition, the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research has devoted a considerable amount of time, particularly in its hearings on March 3, 1978, toward assuring itself that HEW is moving ahead steadily with plans for improved compliance procedures.

I have communicated with Secretary Califano on this matter and have met personally with the director of the new HMO office in order to be sure that rapid progress was being made. I can report to my colleagues that HEW's blueprint for improvements in administration of the HMO program is both impressive and promising.

Regarding S. 2534's new provisions for HMO's under the planning act, I would like to emphasize that under current law health maintenance organizations are subject to certificate-of-need requirements for virtually all phases of their operation. The activities of fee-for-service physicians, on the other hand, are seldom covered by CON laws. The thrust of section II of S. 2534 is to place HMO's on an equal footing with the fee-for-service system and to insure that past discrimination against HMO's by provider-dominated HSA's will not continue. Our committee received substantial evidence of a number of instances where legitimate HMO development was interfered with by misunderstandings of the HMO concept and apparent bias against HMO's at the HSA level.

While these changes in the Planning Act are contained in both S. 2534 and S. 2410, the Health Planning Act Amendments, Senator KENNEDY and I will propose, through an amendment at the appropriate time, that their consideration be postponed until S. 2410 is debated by the Senate in the near future. It should be emphasized that this postponement is suggested only for purposes of scheduling convenience and in no way reflects a judgment on the merits of the provisions themselves.

Mr. President, one provision of the bill I am particularly enthusiastic about is the authority for an HMO management training program in section 9. In testimony before the subcommittee, the General Accounting Office singled out a lack of qualified management personnel as a major impediment to HMO growth and as one of the most common reasons for financial difficulties among developing HMO's. To respond to this need, the bill would establish an HEW-administered training program. Under current projections this would allow the training of up to 70 candidates per year for a maximum 1 year each. In addition, HMO's could be compensated for expenses incurred in providing such training, such as salaries, administrative expenses, curriculum development, and related costs.

Mr. President, the 5-year extensions of authorizations contained in the committee bill were based on moderate estimates of future HMO expansion. The committee was impressed by the cost saving potential of HMO's and believes authorizations for HMO's is money well spent. In this regard, it should be noted that the $26 million in Government money that went into HMO's in 1978 will save the health care system $32 million in that year alone.

While committee testimony and other contact with the HMO Office convinced us that HEW intends to implement an effective program with appropriate safeguards, we recognize that past difficulties in the HMO program may require additional progress before longer and higher authorizations for this money-saving program are enacted. At the appropriate time, therefore, Senators KENNEDY, NUNN, and I will offer an amendment to the bill extending the program for 3 years at levels of $35 million in 1979, $65 million in 1980, and $70 million in 1981. These levels are the product of fruitful discussions with Senator NUNN and other colleagues, in which Senator KENNEDY and I renewed our pledge to maintain our vigilance over progress made by this important health care program. We will also offer amendments to:

First, penalize the making of false statements pursuant to the bill's new disclosure provisions;

Second, prohibit enrollment of HMO membership in an enrollee's home;

Third, condition higher loan amounts during fiscal 1979 on a specific finding by the Secretary that new assistance will preserve an HMO's fiscal solvency; and Fourth, require a GAO evaluation of the HMO program at HEW within 1 year.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to commend Senator KENNEDY for his invaluable contributions to the HMO movement and to this particular piece of legislation. I would also like to thank Senator JAVITS for his help and support and also our 10 cosponsors for their contributions and support during the development of this legislation. Senator NUNN also deserves both credit and praise for his diligent efforts to improve the administration of the HMO program and eliminate abuse of this promising health care reform. I look forward to his continued cooperation in this regard.

Finally, Mr. President, I would like to express renewed enthusiasm for the great contribution HMO's can make to the future of health care in this country. I urge my colleagues to join with us in the support of this promising cost-saving reform.

Mr. President, I retain the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. RIEGLE). The Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. If the Senator will yield, Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that David Main and Robert Rubin of my staff, Barbara Green and Spencer Johnson of Senator JAVITS' staff, Fran Paris of Senator CHAFEE's staff, Ginny Eby of Senator HAYAKAWA's staff, Bob Hunter of Senator HATCH's staff, and Mary Block of Senator STAFFORD's staff, be granted privilege of the floor during consideration and voting on this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the following persons have the privilege of the floor: Dr. Larry Horowitz, Dr. David Blumenthal, Dr. Stuart Shapiro, Sister Rosemary Donnelly, Mr. Peter Harris, Becky Beauregard, and Mr. Robert Wenger.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield myself such time as I may require.

Mr. President, I urge the Senate to give favorable consideration to S. 2534, the Health Maintenance Organization Act Amendments of 1978. This legislation would extend programs which support and monitor the development of Health Maintenance Organizations throughout the United States. The legislation was reported unanimously by the Committee on Human Resources. It is supported by the administration, by the Group Health Association of America, by the Blue Cross/Blue Shield organizations, by the Health Insurance Association of America, by organized labor, and by a number of other groups. It was drafted in close cooperation with the General Accounting Office and the administration. I think S. 2534 deserves the overwhelming support of this body.

Mr. President, few health programs in recent times hold more promise for improving the quality of health care in this country or for controlling costs of our medical care system. The virtues of HMO's are well-known to many of my colleagues, but let me just summarize some of the more salient illustrations of the achievements of HMO's.

First, HMO's have time and time again demonstrated their ability to reduce the cost of delivering health care. On average, it costs 10 to 40 percent less to care for the members of HMO's than it does for patients in the fee-for-service system. HMO's achieve these cost savings primarily by cutting hospital utilization by anywhere from 30 to 60 percent.

Second, health maintenance organizations deliver health care of superior quality. All federally qualified HMO's are required to have quality assurance mechanisms. These quality assurance systems are at least as good as, and usually superior to, quality assurance mechanisms in the fee-for-service sector.

Third, health maintenance organizations offer ideal settings for experimentation with innovative methods of health care delivery. They have built-in peer review, they have experimented with the use of allied health personnel, the use of physician extenders, nurse practitioners, and medexes. They have an impressive record of substituting outpatient care for more expensive inpatient care.

Fourth, and perhaps most important, by offering care of good quality at lower cost, HMO's inject an essential element of competition into the traditional fee-for-service sector. They, thus, offer the promise of containing costs through the free working of the marketplace, rather than through regulation. As a matter of fact, there is already preliminary evidence of the competitive effect of HMO's. A recent report by the Federal Trade Commission points out that in communities with HMO's insurance companies are sometimes forced to expand benefits or reduce premiums in order to stay competitive with health maintenance organizations.

When the HMO Act was passed in 1973, many observers still considered the HMO concept experimental. Since that time, almost 60 HMO's have been qualified under the Federal HMO program. Total HMO membership has grown from 3.5 million to 6.2 million. Total HMO membership in qualified HMO's is now 4.1 million. A total of 165 HMO projects are now funded annually by the Federal Government.

With the added experience of the last 6 years, I think, Mr. President, that the advantages and virtues of HMO's have been proven. I think it is also clear that HMO's have earned a permanent place in our health care system as alternatives to the prevailing fee-for-service system.

Last year, Mr. President, the 3,500,000 enrollees in federally qualified HMO's saved $262 to $315 million in health care costs. If 25 percent of the Nation were enrolled in HMO's, as they are in some areas, hospital expenditures would be reduced by $4 to $6 billion per year. Perhaps the most telling statistic on potential HMO cost-saving, Mr. President, is the fact that the Nation saves more money by subsidizing HMO's than it expends for those subsidies. In fiscal 1978, for example, patients enrolled in federally subsidized health maintenance organizations saved $6 million more in health care costs than the HMO budget of the Federal Government.

The Health Maintenance Organization Act Amendments of 1978, S. 2534, would continue and reinforce the positive aspects of our Federal HMO program while providing authority to correct documented deficiencies. Before proceeding to describe these amendments in detail, Mr. President, I would like to make a few comments to set my forthcoming discussion in perspective.

First, I think there are widespread misperceptions of the management of the Federal HMO program. It is true that GAO has been critical of the administration of the Federal HMO effort, and I want to make it clear that I, as chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research, have repeatedly taken the Department to task for administrative failings.

Nevertheless, HEW has now launched an aggressive and promising effort to meet criticisms of their management of the HMO program. Taking note of this administrative reform, the GAO commented in its June 30 reports:

HEW has fomulated plans for, and is taking steps to, implement the changes the GAO believes are needed.

Some of these steps include the following:

First, HEW has reorganized the HMO office into six administrative subunits and hired a new Director and Deputy Director.

Second, the Department has obtained from Congress 37 new positions for the HMO program, 23 of which will be used for monitoring HMO compliance with the requirements for qualification.

Third, for the first time in the program's history, HEW has notified four HMO's that their qualifications status is in jeopardy, because of noncompliance with qualification requirements.

Finally, HEW has published in the Federal Register a detailed new program for monitoring the financial status of federally subsidized HMO's and the quality of care they provide. The hearings on this proposed program have already been held.

We believe these initiatives are evidence that the Department is moving to deal with past inadequacies in program administration. The success of the administration's new program is critical to the growth of the HMO movement.

As chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research, I want to make it clear that we will continue to monitor with the utmost vigilance the management of the HMO program.

Mr. President, I also want to make several points on the question of fraud and abuse in prepaid health plans on HMO's. I fully support an open and thorough airing of any charges of fraud and abuse in the HMO program. As chairman of the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research, my concern about fraud and abuse in the HMO movement goes back to the inception of the Federal program. We began investigations as far back as 1972 on abuses in the prepaid health program in California.

For example, the subcommittee staff conducted a case study of certain prepaid health care organizations in California. We examined the effectiveness of quality controls in these organizations. As part of that study, we made a detailed inquiry into medical and financial aspects of a number of hospitals and clinics operated by a Los Angeles physician.

In that inquiry, we discovered that the physician opened his first clinic in 1964 and subsequently expanded his operation to the point where he had an interest in nine medical clinics and six hospitals. This expansion increased his gross annual income from $187,000 in 1965 to $18 million in 1970.

We found that two of the six hospitals had not been accredited by the joint commission on the accreditation of hospitals and only one had been approved by the California Medical Association's medical staff survey. The others were found by the survey team to have serious deficiencies, including unjustified and prolonged hospitalization of patients, unnecessary X-rays and lab tests, inadequate medical records, the use of unlicensed doctors, and generally substandard medical care.

Our investigation also indicated that these institutions engaged in widespread double billing resulting in overpayments by insurers of $250.000 and substantial questionable payments to individuals and organizations, some of which were inappropriately reimbursed by insuring institutions.

The results of this staff study, which was subsequently turned over to the Department of Justice for consideration of possible prosecution, demonstrated graphically the kind of abuses that can and have occurred in connection with prepaid health care programs.

The subcommitee has approached the potential abuses of prepaid plans from another tack as well. In our early hearings about health maintenance organizations, their advantages and disadvantages, we were alerted to the importance of monitoring the quality of care provided by prepaid plans. While the fee-for-service system provides incentives to abuse patients through overutilizing health care services the HMO may offer incentives to underutilize care. We saw the need to make sure that the quality of care in HMO's was monitored.

As a result of these hearings, we tried to build strong quality controls into our initial HMO legislation. Our original legislation, which passed the Senate in May 1973, contained provisions for a National Commission on Quality Health Care Assurance. This Commission would have provided guidance for HMO's and the fee-for-service on appropriate methods for caring for various medical conditions.

With respect to that panel, we were interested in developing the kind of information and data for inputs and outputs in terms of lab tests, hospitalization, surgical procedures. We would be able to collect that information. It would be available, within the medical profession, to find out what particular services are being overutilized, what particular hospitals are keeping patients in for a longer period of time.

The purpose of that amendment was to be able to collect that information. It was strongly opposed by the American Medical Association and by a number of Members of the Senate, and it was opposed strongly by the House of Representatives.

It is a tragedy, Mr. President. We want to try to get information with respect to abuses, with respect to overutilization. Whether you are talking about drugs or medical procedures or time in hospitals.

This provision was dropped in conference and alternative quality controls were adopted. These required that every qualified HMO have a program for quality assurance. The law specified that this program stress health outcomes, and that it provide for reviews of the HMO's medical care processes. The law also required that every HMO have a grievance procedure. In addition, the Health Maintenance Organization Act of 1973 contained provisions for a major study aimed at perfecting mechanisms for assuring the quality of health care provided by HMO's and other entities. Despite repeated prodding from our subcommittee, this study was never undertaken by the previous administration.

In addition to our own investigations, and in addition to these protections in law, we went a step further in trying to safeguard the HMO program against fraud and abuse. We asked the GAO to follow in the closest possible fashion the implementation of the HMO law and the progress of individual HMO's funded by the Federal Government. We asked the GAO to look at the effectiveness of HEW's administration, and we asked them to evaluate individually one-half of all HMO's qualified by December 1976. The GAO has delivered to our committee major assessments of the HMO program in May 1974, September 1976, and most recently, June 30, 1978. The GAO has worked with us day in and day out on the problems raised in their investigations.

As a matter of fact their input was essential in crafting the very comprehensive fraud and abuse provisions contained in S. 2534 as reported from committee. Those provisions, in our opinion, and the opinion of the GAO will go a long way toward preventing among federally qualified HMO's the kind of abuses which occurred among prepaid health plans in California.

Section 10 of S. 2534 requires qualified HMO's to disclose any transactions that may have an adverse effect on the fiscal soundness of the HMO or the reasonableness of rates, when such transactions occur between an HMO and a party in interest. This disclosure requirement will bring immediately to light any self-dealing relationships which may work to the detriment of the HMO or its patients. Abusive self-dealing has been a central concern of GAO and of other investigations of the California situation. We require the Secretary to evaluate any potentially suspect transactions, and to report to Congress on his disposition of these cases, including any actions with respect to dequalifying the HMO's in question.

With the cooperation of Senator NUNN, we are moving to strengthen these provisions even further, in ways I will shortly describe.

Mr. President, I want to repeat my assurances that the subcommittee has been vigilant on the question of fraud and abuse, that we have taken action to prevent it, and that we will remain vigilant in the future. We take a back seat to no one on this issue. If there is evidence of abuses, that evidence must be sifted, analysed, and weighed. We must not hastily tar the entire HMO movement with a broad brush because of abuses which may be confined to a few programs. At the same time, we must move firmly and decisively to root out any documented fraud and abuse.

Let me proceed now, Mr. President, to describe the provisions of S. 2534 and of certain amendments which are being proposed to the legislation as reported from committee.

First, Mr. President, I would like to note that since the subcommittee completed its legislative work on S. 2534, some important new information about the HMO program has come to light. I refer to the General Accounting Office's report of June 30, 1978 and the report of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations of the Governmental Affairs Committee.

I think both Senator NUNN and the Comptroller deserve a great deal of credit for the diligent and thorough work they have done in preparing these documents. They have been of great help to the committee in refining S. 2534.

Mr. President, the provisions of S. 2534 and on-going administrative reforms in HEW will go a long way toward redressing the real and important problems noted in the reports to which I have just referred. Nevertheless, these documents cite difficulties in the management of the HMO program that indicate the need for Congress to continue to close and careful oversight of the Federal HMO program. To facilitate that oversight, Senator NUNN proposes certain amendments to S. 2534 as reported from committee.

These proposals will add significantly to the committee bill, and at this point, I would like particularly to express to Senator NUNN my gratitude for the help and the leadership he has provided crafting these proposals. I am pleased to cosponsor them.

First, these amendments propose to reduce the extension of current funding authorities from the 5 years contained in S. 2534 as reported to 3 years. This will encourage an early, full-scale review of the HMO program and HEW's attempts to address program problems.

Second, Senator NUNN proposes reducing the grant authorities in S. 2534 as reported from $400 million to $170 million. This is the minimum amount needed over the next 3 years to maintain the program at its current pace, and to prevent HEW from defaulting on existing commitments to infant HMO's.

Third, we are asking GAO to report to the Committee on Human Resources within 1 year on the administration's progress in implementing recommendations in their report and the report of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations.

Fourth, the amendments provide additional steps to tighten the fraud and abuse controls already contained in S. 2534. These added provisions would incorporate some recommendations of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations not already contained in S. 2534.

In particular, we are adding certain restrictions on the use of door-to-door solicitation by HMO's for new members, and certain penalties for failure to accurately disclose financial transactions where such disclosures are required by law.

In addition, we propose a few additional changes in S. 2534 as reported. The most important of these is a provision which would delay until 1980 the effective date of new maximum limits on grants and loans available to HMO's. S. 2534 raises maximum loans from $2.5 million to $5 million for a single HMO, and maximum grants for initial and continuing development from $1 to $2 million. However, to give HEW time to work out administrative problems relevant to the management of their grant and loan programs, we are postponing the effective date of these increases for 1 year. This is consistent with GAO's criticisms of the loan program as currently administered by HEW.

We recognize that some HMO's desperately need additional funds to maintain their fiscal soundness and to prevent fiscal insolvency. To provide for that problem, we allow the Secretary to waive current maximum loan limits in 1979. We do not want any potentially viable HMO's to go bankrupt in 1979 because additional and deserved funds are not available.

Mr. President, I would like to go on now to describe in some detail the provisions of S. 2534 as amended.

First, as I have noted, sections 4(b) and 8 of the bill would extend existing authorizations for the Federal HMO program for 3 years. Feasibility and planning grant authorizations would then expire in 198—, development grant authorizations in 198—, and initial operating loan authorities in 198—. Maximum allowable grants to an HMO for initial development would be raised from $1 million to $2 million. For initial operating loans the limit would be raised from $2.5 million per HMO to $5 million per HMO. Total authorizations for the HMO program as a whole would be $35 million in 1979 and be raised to $65 million in 1980 and $70 million in 1981.

A second important new provision of S. 2534 would establish a National HMO Management Intern program. Testimony before the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research confirmed that a lack of qualified management personnel has been a major impediment to HMO growth. The General Accounting Office singled out this shortcoming as one of the most common reasons for financial difficulties among developing HMO's.

To respond to this need, the bill would establish a 3 year authorization for an HEW-administered HMO management training program. Under current projections, this would allow the training of up to 70 candidates per year for a maximum 1 year each.

Another key provision of S. 2534 are financial disclosure provisions contained in section 10 of the legislation. We devoted a great deal of time and effort to developing antifraud and abuse provisions which, in concert with those contained in the 1976 amendments, would be aimed at preventing abuses of the program without stifling the development of a promising health care reform. Section 10 of S. 2534 was drafted in close cooperation with the General Accounting Office and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and was supported by GAO witnesses in testimony before the Subcommittee on Health and Scientific Research. Rather than simply prohibit certain classes of transactions, section 10 requires disclosure of suspect, or potentially abusive, transactions and evaluation of those transactions by HEW. Despite extensive study, the committee was unable to isolate clearly definable categories of transactions which were so consistently abusive or fraudulent as to warrant outright prohibition. Indeed, transactions with related organizations may, in certain situations, result in economic efficiencies that are beneficial to the HMO and its enrollees, rather than fraudulent or abusive. The committee believes that the nature of the fraud and abuse problem in the highly variable and still-experimental HMO arena requires a careful screening of potential conflicts of interest for their adverse affect on HMO's, rather than categorical prohibitions or detailed requirements for HMO management.

S. 2534 also provides for certain limited secretarial discretion in determining benefit packages HMO's must offer. Under current law, HMO's must provide basic and supplemental health services "without limitations as to time or cost" in order to obtain Federal qualification. (Section 1301(b)). This language has resulted in extremely narrow qualification rulings that have restricted HMO development. The committee feels that a limited amount of secretarial discretion in the areas identified in section 5 of the bill would not jeopardize the original act's mandate to provide basic and supplemental health services.

Another key provision of S. 2534 provides for the first time for construction loans and loan guarantees to HMO's for ambulatory care facilities. Existing law does not allow Federal assistance to be used for construction of facilities. The bill would allow HMO's to receive loans or loan guarantees of up to $2.5 million, out of the existing loan fund established under section 1308 of the act, for the construction of ambulatory care facilities.

One of the most important cost saving features of health maintenance organizations is their emphasis on the use of ambulatory, rather than inpatient facilities. In addition, developing HMO's must make timely plans to accommodate membership increases. However, even the more successful new and developing HMO's are frequently unable to obtain the funding necessary to acquire such facilities because they often lack the equity base and financial history to attract capital from the private financial community. We believe that additional Federal loans in this area would enhance the cost saving potential of many new HMO's, thus strengthening their long-range financial viability.

In order to insure efficient use of these Federal funds, however, the bill contains strict criteria for their allocation. In order to obtain assistance under this section, an HMO would have to demonstrate continued fiscal soundness in accordance with previously established development schedules. Under existing law, HEW has developed detailed criteria for measuring fiscal soundness and should utilize such criteria in the administration of the provision.

S. 2534 has additional provisions which allow HMO's to receive grant support for continuing development activities. Under existing law, HMO's cannot receive grant money once they become operational, except for "significant expansion." Qualified HMO's are eligible only for initial operating loans or guarantees. The bill would allow HMO's to receive grant and loan money for continued development after they become operational and qualified, but only to the extent that they had not used all of the feasibility, development, and planning grant funds to which they were entitled prior to qualification.

Existing law presupposes that HMO "development" ceases when an HMO becomes operational and qualified and thus terminates development fund eligibility at that point (except for "significant expansion"). However, experience has shown that many HMO's must continue the development process after they become operational and qualified—for example, to acquire facilities to improve services and enhance financial viability.

Under existing law, an HMO may be denied needed assistance where its membership has increased in a manner which necessitates improvement of existing services. A typical example would be where the HMO is initially so small that it is economically more feasible to contract out for services which it would prefer to provide in-house and which, if developed prior to qualification, would be a legitimate initial development expense. In such cases, the developing, qualified HMO is faced with two unreasonable alternatives. It can either postpone qualification or overdevelop a service prior to qualification. Either course is unnecessary and counterproductive. HMO's should qualify when they can meet the qualification requirements but should not be penalized by losing entitlement to the full developmental amount. Their initial developmental needs grow with their initial membership and they should have the initial development assistance available when needed.

S. 2534 also contains proposed amendments to the health planning law—amendments also contained in S. 2410—designed to reduce discrimination against HMO's under the planning act.

Under existing provisions of the Health Planning Act, health maintenance organizations are subject to certificate-of-need requirements for virtually all phases of their operation. The activities of fee-for-service physicians, on the other hand, are seldom covered by CON laws.

The committee views with great concern a growing body of evidence that the planning process has seriously handicapped HMO development. Among the original purposes of the Health Planning Act was the encouragement of cost containment in the fee-for-service system through more efficient allocation and management of health care resources. In contrast to the fee-for-service system, health maintenance organizations contain internal cost containment incentives and have proved their ability to reduce health care costs. Despite this exceptional capacity to serve the overall goals of the planning process when allowed to operate properly, testimony before the committee revealed repeated instances of misunderstanding of the HMO concept and discrimination against HMO certificate-of-need applications at the HSA and State Agency levels. This evidence indicates that HMO's, because they compete with the fee-for-service system, are frequently given unobjective appraisals of CON applications by provider-dominated HSA's. This situation is particularly serious since HMO's are usually new entrants into an area and do not enjoy the presumptions benefiting the status quo under the planning process.

While it was clear to the committee that this situation required remedy, the members were concerned that the exemptions from CON contained in the original version of S. 2534 might intrude upon legitimate State prerogatives and give HMO's too great an advantage over fee-for-service physicians. Section 11 of the committee amendments represents a carefully tailored balance of these competing considerations.

Section 11 requires that State certificate-of-need laws cover HMO's no more restrictively than fee-for-service providers. States would also be required to cover the inpatient hospital facilities of both qualified and nonqualified HMO's. In order to insure fair appraisal of HMO certificate-of-need applications, however. the bill sets forth certain limited criteria that must be used in processing qualified HMO's applications for the purchase of equipment costing more than $150,000 and for new inpatient hospital facilities. It should be emphasized that these criteria are to be the sole criteria utilized in processing such applications.

Mr. President, S. 2534 contains a number of other provisions, both substantive and technical in nature, on which I will not now elaborate in order to facilitate consideration of the legislation.

I recognize the very special interest that my colleague and friend, Senator SCHWEIKER, has shown in this particular program. We passed a good bill here in the Senate. The HMO concept was strongly and warmly endorsed by President Nixon's administration, by the then Secretary of HEW, Elliot Richardson, but we faced very, very strong opposition to the program and the initiation of the program.

We were eventually able to get the House of Representatives to move on what they considered to be a pilot program for the development of HMO's.

We have seen some areas where there have been abuses, and we welcome working closely with Senator NUNN and members of his committee in trying to insure that the provisions of this bill will deal effectively with fraud and abuse. Unless we are going to be serious about rooting out, as we should be, any abuses, HMOs will never really be able to serve as an alternative delivery system for the fee-for-service system. The benefits of HMO's can improve the quality of health care for the American people and do it in a way that provides a sense of competition which will be an important factor in moderating the dramatic increase in health care costs.

The Senator from Pennsylvania has been tireless in the pursuit of these goals and his work in the fashioning of this legislation is well recognized by all of us on the Labor Committee, and I think all of us are very grateful for the leadership that he has provided in bringing this legislation to where we are today.

Before concluding, the President, I want also to thank staffs for their efforts in perfecting S. 2534. In particular, I want to single out Mr. David Main of Senator SCHWEIKER's staff, Mr. David Vienna and Ms. Cheryl Davis of the Permanent Investigations Committee staff, and Mr. David Blumenthal, of my staff.

● Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I am pleased to be able to join with Senators KENNEDY, SCHWEIKER, NUNN, and others in cosponsoring this amendment to S. 2534, the Health Maintenance Organization Amendments of 1978.

As unanimously reported by the Committee in Human Resources, the provisions of S. 2534 were designed to strengthen the existing Federal HMO law and to assure the careful expansion of the Federal program. Essential provisions were included to improve program management and prevent fraud and abuse.

Since our committee completed its deliberations on S. 2534, additional information regarding Federal HMO activities has been presented to the Congress. And while I am confident that the administrative reforms now being initiated by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare will address the problems recently raised by the General Accounting Office and others, the Congress must continue its close oversight over the program. To facilitate that oversight, I am supporting the four modifications to S. 2534 contained in this amendment.

First, the extension of the current funding authorities in S. 2534 would be reduced from 5 to 3 years.

Second, in corresponding to this reduction in the number of years for which the program would be authorized, the total grant authority would be reduced from $400 million to $170 million.

Third, new provisions would be added to make the bill's disclosure provisions more consistent with our medicare and medicaid fraud and abuse laws.

And finally, the General Accounting Office would be required to conduct for the Congress an evaluation of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare's administration of the HMO program within 1 year.

These modifications to S. 2534 are intended to guarantee the stimulation of HMO development. They respond to the concern of many Members of the Senate that careful monitoring of HMO growth is needed to assure steady acceptance of the HMO concept as an alternative to fee-for-service health care. Though often criticized, the fee-for-service approach to health care delivery and financing is well established. Certainly the stimulation of alternative approaches should be considered at the Federal level.

Those of us who have long believed in the HMO concept have every reason to be encouraged. The debate on cost containment has convinced many people that structual reform in the health care delivery system must come through positive incentives. HMO's are one type of incentive-based reform that will make the system more self-regulating with a minimum of Government oversight. We know that they can cut the costs of health care by 10 to 40 percent. We know that all federally qualified HMO's have quality assurance systems that are at least as good as, and usually better than, those in the fee-for-service sector.

We know that they offer real hope for badly needed competition in the health care industry. The amendment we are offering is to make the HMO concept stronger than ever. I urge my colleagues to vote for this important measure as amended.●

(Purpose: To strike section relating to Health Planning Amendments)

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) for himself and Mr. SCHWEIKER proposes unprinted amendment numbered 1456.

On page 30, beginning with line 18 strike all through page 33, line 16.

On page 33, line 18, strike "12" and insert in lieu thereof "11".

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, this amendment is offered in behalf of myself and Senator SCHWEIKER.

The reason for deleting these provisions is that these provisions relate to the planning law, amend that law and are contained in their entirety in S. 2410 which the Senate will hopefully debate next week. The planning amendments are more germane to the consideration of S. 2410. Deleting them from this law will prevent the Senate from having to consider these provisions two times.

It seems to me to make sense to take this step. We have communicated with the Members of the Senate who have intended to offer amendments on those particular provisions, and it is agreeable to those Members. We will certainly have full notice for those Members to be able to address those issues in the planning act.

I believe that that procedure is acceptable to the members of the committee and to those concerned most about those provisions.

I move the adoption of the amendment.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. HATCH addressed the Chair.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. HATCH. Does the Senator yield?

Mr. KENNEDY. Could we dispose of this?

Mr. HATCH. It is on this particular point.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Utah.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Utah is recognized for 3 minutes.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor the Nunn-Dole compromise which will be offered shortly on the HMO legislation because I believe it to be a responsible plan which stimulates the development of HMO's under reasonable conditions with realistic funding levels. It is an important public policy decision we make here today to assist a health system which may well improve the delivery of medical care to our people, with cost savings and without a sacrifice of the quality of that care.

Unfortunately, the bill in its present form does not resolve my concerns as well as those of Senator HUDDLESTON and others relative to the issue of whether States will continue to be protected in exercising their options to formulate certificate of need requirements under the health planning law.

This bill, until modified by its sponsors to delete this subject matter in its entirety, which is a wise and prudent action because not germane to this bill, sought to make what I believe are improper regulatory inroads into the private ambulatory health care setting by subjecting individual physician's offices, and indeed all private care facilities, to certificate of need requirements for their major medical equipment purchases—a matter which is most disturbing if for no other reason that it is again attempting to reverse a State trend and a State option. Our proposed amendment, No. 3099, which is now made moot by the action of the floor managers, would have preserved the current State CON laws, as their individual State legislatures have so determined, to include under, or exclude from, CON requirements any providers of ambulatory health care or HMOs as they see fit—the alternative under the committee bill having been to prohibit HMO coverage unless all other licensed providers of health care were brought in also.

Our amendment is totally in keeping with the thrust of Public Law 93–641, which is to encourage and promote the design and implementation of health planning policy to the States which are best able to formulate decisions like those pertaining to CON laws.

That being the case, Senator HUDDLESTON and I would like to serve notice that we intend to offer amendment No. 3098 to S. 2410, the Health Planning amendments of 1978. We feel that S. 2410 provides us with the opportunity to deal directly with this issue in a straightforward and constructive manner. Regardless of each Senator's attitude on the relative merit or demerit of the CON concept, amendment No. 3098 offers us a chance to decide whether the rights of his respective State will be protected and the local character of our original health planning law preserved. We will have a good deal more to say on this subject when the Senate considers S. 2410.

We welcome the opportunity to strengthen the health planning bill by offering this amendment and hope that our colleagues will support us in our endeavor.

I thank the Chair.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I strongly support the statements of the Senator from Massachusetts. I am a cosponsor of the amendment, and I yield back the remainder of my time on the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time is yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Massachusetts.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, will the Senator from Massachusetts yield about 7 minutes on the bill?

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield 7 minutes on the bill.

Mr. BUMPERS. It may take as long as 10.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is recognized for 7 minutes.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield whatever time the Senator needs.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator.

Mr. President, in 1976 Americans spent nearly $140 billion on health care. That is $640 apiece or more than $2,500 for every family of four.

Health care in all of its forms increased to more than $1 in $12 of our gross national product, and by 1980, according to Government estimates, the figure will exceed $1 in $10.

If we are to reverse the structural deficiencies of the present health delivery system, then we must have a system under which consumers and providers have incentives to control health care costs. These health incentives are found in health maintenance organizations.

HMO's are technically comprehensive prepaid" plans; comprehensive because they provide care both in and out of the hospital; prepaid because the subscriber or his employer pays a flat annual fee regardless of whether he merely sees his doctor for an annual checkup or goes to the hospital for open heart surgery. For HMO's it is not a case of the more they spend the more they get, but like businesses the more they spend the less they have left.

This means, among other things, that HMO's have a powerful incentive to use hospitalization, by far the costliest form of care, as little as possible.

The advantages of this type of health delivery system have been outlined at length in the Senate during the consideration of the HMO Act of 1973 and the HMO Amendments of 1976.

The support for HMO's is based on several assumptions about their differences from the traditional fee-for-service system:

First, lower hospital utilization and, consequently lower costs; Second, continuity of health care rather than fragmentation; Third, emphasis on prevention, early detection and treatment rather than on acute care; fourth greater accessibility to primary medical care; and fifth, greater satisfaction with the medical care received.

These differences are said to result from the unique organization and financial arrangements of HMO's. Studies show that HMO's reduce hospital utilization by as much as 30 to 60 percent.

Mr. President, I want to repeat that: Studies show that HMO's utilize hospitals by 30 to 60 percent less than all other forms of hospital care.

The biggest and best known HMO, the Kaiser-Permanente care program——

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator yield at that point?

Mr. BUMPERS. I would be happy to.

Mr. KENNEDY. Are not hospital costs responsible for 40 to 60 percent of the increase in health care costs? The Senator wisely points out that if we are really serious about health care costs, this is the kind of track record we should be encouraging. Yet, as the Senator well understands, we are talking about maybe 3 percent of the American people covered by this program, and even our proposed funding is basically a drop in the bucket. I think it is important that, as the Senator mentions, that we begin to recognize the fuel potential of HMO's and where they can lead in the future both on the cost issue, which everybody is so sensitive about today and in terms of the quality issue. The results are very similar. But I welcome the point of the Senator from Arkansas.

Mr. BUMPERS. I thank the Senator. The point is certainly well taken.

The 30 to 60 percent lower hospitalization utilization by HMO's, of course, is reflected very dramatically in the Kaiser-Permanente system, by far, the biggest in the country, where actually their hospitalization utilization is 65 percent less than the national average.

Utilization data continued to show reductions in the rate of inpatient care which approach the 50-percent level.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator just yield at that point?

Mr. BUMPERS. Certainly.

Mr. KENNEDY. It is pointed out by some of the critics of those statistics that actually the Kaiser program is directed toward a special population group who are generally the healthier people in our society. But the fact remains that you get similar kinds of savings even with medicaid patients when they are included in a number of the HMO's. It is not quite as dramatic, but the experience is still well maintained. There are those who will try to take the Senator's statistics on that and try to say, "Well, it really is not applying to the general population." But the statistics, even for the poorest people who have been enrolled in the programs through various other kinds of both State, local, and Federal support, are very, very close to those.

I think these are overwhelming statistics and they need repeating here in the Senate.

Mr. BUMPERS. I am pleased the Senator pointed that out, because that is always the classic argument that you are dealing with a healthier society and that is the reason for these figures.

But the more detailed studies indicate otherwise. For example, in inpatient hospitalization the rate last year for all federally certified HMO's, that is, as of September 30, 1977, was 529 days per 1,000 members. That compares to a national yearly average of 1,022 days per 1,000 persons.

Well, the implications for public and private health expenditures are substantial. For example, for every 1 percent that hospitalization could have been reduced last year there would have been a savings of $320 million. Mr. President, I want to repeat that. For every 1 percent we could have reduced medical care costs last year we would have saved the American people—I am sorry, not medical care but hospitalization—for every 1 percent we could have reduced hospitalization costs last year we would have saved the American people $320 million.

Since the President's Council on Wage and Price Stability reported that in 1975 the Government met 55 percent of the expenditures for hospitalization in 1975, a reduction of just 1 percent in hospitalization for Federal payments alone would have saved the Treasury $176 million.

Both industry and individuals benefit from the cost-reducing effect of HMO's. As Government expenditures for health care decrease, this could be translated into lower taxes. In addition, as industry saves money on employees' health benefits, the result is lower prices to the consumer. Listen to this: Last year alone, the Ford Motor Co. reports that, with only 5 percent of its work force enrolled in HMO's, it saved almost $2 million over comparable fee-for-service costs. Think of it: If only 5 percent of the employees of the Fortune "500" employers had enrolled last year in HMO's, the savings would have amounted to approximately $150 million.

If we could have 25 percent of the national population in HMO's as they are in some areas, it would mean that hospital expenditures would be reduced by $4 to $6 billion annually because HMO enrollees use half the hospitalization as do comparable consumers in the fee-for-service sector.

Another measure of the cost-of-living implicit in lower rates of hospitalization in HMO's, is that the entire Federal investment in HMO development is recouped in national health care cost savings each year. Persons enrolled in federally certified HMO's which received grant support generate savings of $29 to $35 million during 1978. These savings exceed the entire fiscal year 1978 HMO program budget.

HMO's also effect cost savings by introducing competition into the marketplace. A recently published staff report of the Federal Trade Commission shows that where HMO's are present, competing plans increase benefits and the community's hospital utilization decreases.

HMO's can be helpful as we try to place greater emphasis in this country on preventive medicine. One of the most shocking situations in this country was the low level of immunization among children. In 1977, 19 million children under 14 years of age—36 percent—were inadequately immunized against childhood diseases. These low levels are indicative of the lack of adequate health services for our children. HMO's have the organizational capacity to insure that this problem does not exist among their membership. With an enrolled population, HMO's can aggressively pursue, and it is to their advantage to actively pursue, an active campaign to provide adequate immunization and health services coverage for children.

The HMO movement today represents little threat to traditional fee-for-service medicine. At present, a total of 181 HMO's, 63 of them federally qualified, serve about 6.5 million people in 36 States and the District of Columbia. There has only been a 5.2-percent increase in HMO enrollment over the past year. The 6.5 million now served is only 3 percent of the population. The administration's goal is to have 172 federally qualified HMO's in operation by 1982.

The HMO amendments of 1978 will:

First. Provide increased controls to prevent fraud and abuse, such as requirements for disclosure of relationships and transactions between HMO's and their affiliates to deter self-dealing activities. The scandal in California with certain prepaid health plans which enrolled only medicaid patients on a cut-rate basis cannot be repeated. To prevent a recurrence of this situation, HEW has recently expanded the compliance staff by 37.

Second. Provide for necessary increases in the limits on initial development grants and initial operating loans which take account of the inflation that has occurred since the limits were set in 1973.

Third. Authorize use of the existing loan fund for loans and loan guarantees for construction which can contribute to HMO's cost-saving potential.

Fourth. Ease strict benefit requirements for disaster coverage that have unnecessarily delayed HMO development.

Mr. President, I strongly support the efforts by the administration to foster HMO growth and improve the HMO program. After years of delay and frustration, HMO's can play an important role in this country, and S. 2534 is essential to making that possible.

Mr. President, I would like further to compliment the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) and the distinguished Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) for their untiring efforts in bringing these amendments to the floor, which I think will do a great deal to enhance competition and reduce the cost of medical care in this country.

I would just like to say there is not anything radical about an HMO. Sometimes the AMA would give us the impression that this is socialistic, or against the traditional free enterprise fee-for-service concept.

If I might take one second to relate a personal experience, when I was a child, I lived 18 miles from the town of Paris, Ark., at that time a red hot community in coal mining. Three brothers who were doctors there started their own HMO in the 1920's, and every year, for $10 per family member, or $40 for a family of four, you could join the Smith Brothers hospitalization plan, and everybody up and down the Arkansas River Valley joined it. They built their own hospital.

I never knew what kind of a system it was, and never recognized it, really, as an HMO until recently, when I was elected Governor of my State and started promoting HMO's. But that was a system that had over 10,000 enrollees in the 1930's and 1940's.

My wife was a member of it. Her family lived 20 miles from Paris. She had an appendectomy free, and I can tell you she and I both came from poor circumstances, and we would have had a tough time paying for it otherwise.

I am simply saying there is nothing new or magical about HMO's. This was done in isolated sections of the country years ago, and I think we ought to be making even more dramatic efforts to encourage the development of HMO's across this country. The statistics are actually without refutation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time of the proponents has expired.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, will the Senator from Pennsylvania yield 4 or 5 minutes?

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. I just want to commend the Senator from Arkansas for a very eloquent statement and a keen analysis.

To demonstrate the point of the Senator from Arkansas, the Georgetown HMO has 43,000 members, has a total support from the Federal Government of $3,162,000, and now saves $4.3 million in hospital costs alone per year. It recoups the original investment.

I have other examples I will include in the RECORD, but the Senator is correct from a dollars and cents point of view.

I am sure some of them are not going to make it, and some will have difficulty, but the fact is that the soundness of the concept has been demonstrated; it is cost effective, it adds competition in the system, and I think it can mean better quality health care at lower cost. I welcome the statement of the Senator from Arkansas.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1457

(Purpose to reduce the term and authorization levels; to modify grant and loan programs; and to strengthen fraud and abuse provisions)

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I have an amendment which I send to the desk, and ask that it be reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN), for himself and others, proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1457:

On page 20—

Mr. NUNN. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 20, strike line 1 and insert "(A) $1,000,000 through September 30, 1979, and $2,000,000 thereafter, or ".

On page 20, strike lines 3 through 6 and substitute the following:

(1) striking "$2,500,000" and substituting "$2,500,000 (or $5,000,000 if the Secretary makes a written determination that such loans or loan guarantees are necessary to preserve the fiscally sound operation of the health maintenance organization and to protect against the risk of insolvency of the health maintenance organization and within 30 days of the making of such loans or loan guarantees furnishes the Human Resources Committee of the Senate and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives with written notification and reasons thereof and a copy of such written determination and the reasons therefor) through September 30, 1979, and $5,000,000 thereafter"; and

(2) striking "$1,000,000" and substituting "$1,000,000 (or $2,000,000 if the Secretary makes a written determination that such disbursements are necessary to preserve the fiscally sound operation of the health maintenance organization and protect against the risk of insolvency of the health maintenance organization and within 30 days of such disbursement furnishes the Human Resources Committee of the Senate and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives with written notification thereof and a copy of such written determination and the reasons therefor) (through September 30, 1979, and $2,000,000 thereafter". On page 21, line 24, strike "1985" and substitute "1981".

(2) striking everything after "1978" and substituting the following: ", $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, and $70,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981.".

On page 30, strike line 17 and substitute the following: "ceived by the Secretary and shall not be a qualified health maintenance organization for purposes of section 1310."

On page 30, between lines 17 and 18, insert the following:

"(h) Whoever knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made any false statement or representation of a material fact in any statement filed pursuant to this section shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.".

On page 19, between lines 22 and 23, insert the following:

(c) Section 1301(c) is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (10),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (11) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(12) provide the Secretary with assurances satisfactory to him that no membership enrollment shall occur at an individual's place of residence.".

On page 34, after line 6, insert the following new section:

PROGRAM MANAGEMENT EVALUATION

SEC. 13. Section 1314 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The Comptroller General shall evaluate the adequacy and effectiveness of the policies and procedures of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the management of the grant and loan programs established by this title and the adequacy of the amounts of assistance available under such programs and shall report to the Congress the results of such evaluation not later than May 1, 1979.".

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, a number of Senators have cosponsored this amendment with me, including Senator SCHWEIKER, Senator KENNEDY, Senator BELLMON, Senator PROXMIRE, Senator DOLE, Senator BARTLETT, Senator ROTH, Senator HATCH, Senator BUMPERS, Senator WALLOP, Senator WILLIAMS, Senator

JAVITS, Senator CHAFEE, Senator PERCY, and Senator TALMADGE.

The amendment which I am offering today responds to many of the concerns over mismanagement, fraud and abuse in the health maintenance organization program.

Mr. President, from the time point of view, how much time do we have on an amendment, under the order?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Chair is advised that we have 30 minutes, equally divided.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that we have 1 hour for this amendment, equally divided, or that the time be divided with 25 minutes to the Senator from Georgia and 5 minutes to the other side.

Mr. NUNN. I believe that would be satisfactory.

Mr. KENNEDY. I ask unanimous consent that of the one-half hour, the Senator from Georgia have 25 minutes, with 5 minutes to be retained by the managers.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the request of the Senator from Massachusetts? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Senator. Mr. President, I believe that this amendment strengthens the already solid base for management improvement and curtailment of program abuse which is contained in S. 2534 as reported by the Human Resources Committee.

Many of these provisions are in direct response to the recommendations of the report of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations on prepaid health plans and health maintenance organizations.

Specifically, the Human Resources Committee bill recognizes that HMO's are frequently comprised of a nonprofit corporation whose directors either own or control for-profit entities which provide services to the nonprofit HMO.

Through this type of corporate pyramid, Government grant and loan funds can be diverted from their intended purpose. More importantly, however, the cost of health care for HMO enrollees can be artifically inflated.

S. 2534 already contains a provision for a consolidated financial statement. It would treat as one reporting entity all of the corporations that comprise the HMO. Furthermore, the bill would require disclosure of ownership interests in the various entities.

The amendment I offer today goes a step further. It would impose penalties of up to $25,000 and up to 5 years' imprisonment for filing a false statement.

I regard the requirement of a consolidated financial statement, ownership disclosure, and the criminal penalties a response to the most important finding of a 3½-year inquiry by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations into prepaid health systems.

This amendment also includes a response to door-to-door sales abuses uncovered by the Investigations Subcommittee.

All of the control measures we can write will matter little if we have a continuation of crippling mismanagement of the HMO program by the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

In 1973, the Congress enacted the HMO Act and in doing so acknowledged that the development of health maintenance organizations should be encouraged. The act was based on sound reasoning and a solid history of lower cost health care that met standards in medical communities across the Nation where private prepaid group practices had been in business for years.

HMO's can be viable alternatives to our present fragmented system of organizing, financing, and delivering health care services. Strong and viable HMO's, if properly managed, can offer competition in the health community. That competition can potentially work to the benefit of all—the patient, the health care community, and the Government.

Last year, officials of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare announced that the development of HMO's would be a priority. It was to be a major cost containment initiative, as well as an effort to restructure our health care system.

HEW's management performance has been the subject of a steady flow of highly critical reports, not only from the General Accounting Office and the Governmental Affairs Committee of the Senate, but from the HMO program managers themselves.

Mr. President, one of the reports was generated by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations. The report, released in April, warned of HMO program problems and shortcomings in the law, which we are addressing today. But the report was not taken seriously by the officials of HEW who had already begun a nationwide effort to promote the development of HMO's. In response to criticism that our report had dated information and related only to California, I presented testimony in May before the Senate Finance Subcommittee on Health which included several examples of current HMO program problems and HMO abuses.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the complete text of this testimony be printed in the RECORD at the close of my remarks.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SPARKMAN). Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NUNN. Subsequent to my testimony the Under Secretary of HEW and the Director of the HMO program met with and told me that they had confirmed the information in my testimony about current program problems and abuses. They told me of their efforts to improve the program and of a proposed new compliance program. There is no question that HEW is beginning to move in the right direction. However, the HEW officials agreed that there was a shortfall in HEW personnel competent to manage the program. Notwithstanding this and other problems, it is apparent that HEW wants to push ahead full speed with the promotion of HMO's.

HEW believes that it can repair the plane in flight. This is the crux of our difference. HEW, while acknowledging its program management failures, believes it can improve program management, while at the same time doing out many millions of dollars.

Mr. President, I disagree with this approach and a number of my colleagues concur in my view. I believe we must have HEW prove that it can manage programs efficiently and economically before we expand programs.

Any concerned father, seeing that his son could not properly manage his present allowance, would probably deny his son's request for an increase in that allowance. The father could rightfully expect that his son should prove he can manage his money before receiving an increase in his funds.

I have said many, many times over the past year that HEW should temper its zeal to promote the rapid development of HMO's until it can prove that it can manage the program well. I do not disagree with the policy to promote HMO's. I simply believe that we should not build on quicksand.

These issues are beyond politics. They are even beyond the 100 differing political philosophies represented in this Chamber. The issue is simply a matter of commonsense: We must take one step at a time.

Just a few weeks ago, the General Accounting Office recommended to the Congress that the loan element of the HMO program not be expanded until HEW develops a loan policy, procedures and a system to administer the loan program.

Senators KENNEDY and SCHWEIKER, the chairman and ranking minority member of the Health Subcommittee, also share this concern. Their commitment to improved program management is reflected by their cosponsorship of this amendment of which one of the most important elements is a $330 million cutback in the proposed authorization of $500 million and a reduction in the program extension to 3 years.

In addition, this amendment provides for a delay until fiscal year 1980 the increase in grant and loan levels proposed in S. 2534.

There is also a provision to meet the emergency loan needs of a few developing organizations in the first year of the program's extension which I believe is reasonable, but which I might add the members of my subcommittee will be watching very closely, to make certain that the Department of HEW handles with a great deal of prudence any exception to this 1-year moratorium on the increase in grants and loans.

The amendment provides that the General Accounting Office shall study and report on the validity of grant levels and on the implementation of a loan administration program.

By the adoption of this amendment, the Senate could send no clearer message to the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare that we are skeptical about their ability to manage. The reports of the General Accounting Office, the actions of the Senate Appropriations Committee, and the amendment we are considering now are in no way indications of a diminution of the Senate's advocacy of the HMO as a concept. Rather, it should be a clear signal to HEW that we will continue to watch them closely.

Mr. President, I believe I speak for many Senators when I say that we will not take lightly continued HEW program mismanagement. We will watch each grant to see whether it was a reasonable award. We will watch each loan and hold HEW to a standard that loan officers in the private sector must meet. Frivolous grants and loans and less than efficient or sloppy administration will make us all victims of our advocacy of the HMO concept.

Mr. President, I am sure no one in the Senate is more concerned with program management and HMO abuses than the members of the Human Resources Committee, particularly Senators KENNEDY and SCHWEIKER. Indeed, it has been Senators KENNEDY and SCHWEIKER who have continued to ask the GAO for reports on the HMO program.

I pledge my support of them and the other members of the Human Resources Committee in this effort to give vigilant oversight to the program.

In addition, I would like to acknowledge my personal gratitude for the cooperation of Dr. David Blumenthal and Mr. David Main of the Health Subcommittee staff. They have worked diligently toward the development of good legislation. They have been forceful advocates of program improvements and they are to be commended.

Mr. President, in closing, I recommend to my colleagues that they vote in favor of the amendment we are offering today. What we have proposed responds to two, apparently divergent, but quite consistent concerns that many of us have. First, this amendment provides for the reasonable development of the HMO program.

Second, it slows the program down for 1 year to give HEW a chance to develop efficient and economical program management. It gives to Congress the opportunity to review the program once again in 3 years, and provides for a General Accounting Office analysis. In my view, this is a reasonable and responsible approach for the Senate to take toward a program that, despite its management difficulties, has the potential for providing quality and cost-effective health care services to many of our citizens. I urge the Senate to adopt this amendment to S. 2534.

STATEMENT OF SENATOR SAM NUNN

Mr. Chairman and members of the Subcommittee. I am grateful for this opportunity to appear before you today to present to you the report by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations on its inquiry into prepaid health plans and health maintenance organizations.

I also wish to discuss certain other information the Investigations Subcommittee staff has obtained and raise a number of questions suggested by this information. This information relates to alleged current abuses in the Federal HMO program.

Most of the new information we have developed has not been given the scrutiny of a public hearing with witnesses under oath and subject to questions. Nonetheless, I will discuss a number of examples that give rise to very serious questions about the current Federal HMO effort.

First, I would like to express my appreciation for the personal interest and support of Senator Talmadge and Senator Dole in the work of our Subcommittee. Likewise, the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations has been helped in this HMO inquiry and others by your most competent staff. Specifically, I would like to thank Jay Constantine, John Kern and Bob Hoyer for their continuing help in our health inquiries.

The report on HMO's is timely. Both the Senate and the House are about to consider renewal of the Health Maintenance Organization Act with a half billion dollar authorization. This is a law that authorizes the Department of Health, Education and Welfare to give grants, loans and loan guarantees for the development and operation of HMO's.

The study of health maintenance organizations by the Investigations Subcommittee offers the Congress the opportunity to further improve the HMO Act and the Medicare and Medicaid programs to assure not only a more effective expenditure of public funds, but also to ensure the health and safety of patients entrusting themselves to HMO's.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to offer the report as an exhibit to this hearing record.

The Subcommittee's report on its investigation is full of examples of fraud and abuse of patients as well as shortcomings in present law and program administration with regard to HMO's. That does not mean that all HMO's are bad or that the program should be scrapped.

Indeed, bona fide prepaid group practice is a viable method of organizing, financing and delivering health care which should be encouraged. To label all HMO's as bad or to suggest that the concept is doomed on the basis of the Subcommittee report would be irresponsible. Likewise, simply because we find some fee-for-service physicians and hospitals overcharging, providing more services to patients than they need or being convicted of fraud does not mean that fee-for-service health care is bad.

I hope the Finance Health Subcommittee will perceive our report in this context. I come before you today to urge you to protect Medicare and Medicaid program funds from the kinds of fraud and abuse identified by the Subcommittee investigation.

Your Committee is to be commended for placing strong safeguard against HMO abuses of the Medicare program as early as 1972. I am also aware that similar safeguards were voted by the Senate for the Medicaid program in 1973 but that the House of Representatives did not take action on the Senate bill. It's too bad. House passage in 1973 of your Committee proposal to protect Medicaid programs from HMO fraud and abuse would have prevented many problems with regard to Title XIX.

Our report discusses the Subcommittee's investigation of the prepaid health plans receiving Medicaid funds in California. At the peak of the program there, some 54 plans provided health care services to more than 250,000 Medicaid beneficiaries. As you will recall, I have testified here before on issues involved in our inquiry.

There were several times more Medicaid prepaid health plans in California than in all the other States combined. The 1972 implementation on a large scale of prepaid health system contracting in California preceded by almost two full years the enactment of the Federal HMO Act at the end of 1973.

Our investigation found that most of the California HMO's sent door-to-door salesmen through the poverty neighborhoods. These salesmen offered Kentucky fried chicken dinners, free tickets to the Los Angeles Rams football games and stereo head sets to people who agreed to enroll in these HMO's.

Of course, the people didn't have to pay anything to join; the State Medicaid program was picking up the tab.

One blind lady signed an enrollment form after she was told someone would read the Bible to her every week. And a number of people signed their names to enrollment forms after they were told they were signing petitions to impeach Governor Ronald Reagan.

Once in the plans, the people ran into some very serious problems. Our investigation found a doctor who operated on two patients at the same time. One plan employed eight unlicensed foreign medical graduates who practiced medicine. Sick people were denied hospitalization. Narcotics were given to drug addicts. Medical records were a mess.

The cornerstone of the program was the State's belief that it would save money by contracting with these HMO's. The General Accounting Office said in 1974 that the program may have cost more than paying doctors' fees for their services. Almost all of the HMO's were non-profit corporations, but the officers and directors of these organizations contracted with for-profit companies they owned or controlled for services needed to fulfill State contract obligations.

We found that more than half of the Medicaid funds going to some HMO's were diverted from health care services through these for-profit firms and were accounted for as administrative costs and profits. We found that the return on invested capital in one California plan was 3,000 percent.

These facts are quite significant for they show how HMO's can be manipulated to defeat the very purpose of such organizations. HMO's offer the promise of health care services at fixed monthly costs to the persons enrolled. By selling its services to large numbers of people, the HMO is assured of a large amount of money. From this pool of funds, the HMO can finance health care to patients who need it. There is a financial disincentive to provide more services than the patients need. This is in contrast to the financial incentive in the fee-for-service financial system which pays health providers for each service rendered.

While there may be a financial disincentive in HMO's to overutilize, there was evidence in California of the financial incentive to provide less services than patients required.

Some California HMO's closed clinics on nights and weekends which were required to be open under their State contracts. One plan with nearly 100,000 enrollees, most of whom were women and children, had only one obstetrician and no pediatricians.

We found several additional examples of poor medical services. Instead of performing surgeries, pain killing drugs were given to patients. Children were not immunized. Sick patients were placed in clinic holding rooms instead of in hospitals where they belonged. Hospitalized patients were discharged too early. Some were the subjects of efforts to disenroll them when their hospital stays grew too long and expensive.

In summary, the financial disincentive to provide necessary services, combined with corporate structures enabling the easy diversion of funds, can turn the HMOs into havens of financial and patient abuse.

One of the Subcommittee's goals in its investigation of prepayment systems in California was to learn from the mistakes of that program so that the lessons could be applied to Federal HMO efforts.

According to their testimony before our Subcommittee, HMO officials have no mechanisms under the law to respond to marketing and enrollment abuses. They have no regulations preventing or controlling self dealing by HMO principals. They cannot safeguard the Federal investment in HMOs from abusive financial practices. They have neither a financial auditing program nor a method to evaluate the quality of care provided in HMO's though HEW is required under the Act to have such compliance programs.

Mr. Chairman, building upon this foundation would be building on quicksand. The Administration in its HMO bill would liberalize Medicare and Medicaid reimbursement to HMO's and increase from $1 million to $2 million the amount of grant funds and from $2.5 million to $5 million the amount of Federal loan funds an HMO can receive. Based upon experience to date it seems as though HEW is rewriting that old saying, "double or nothing" to "double and nothing!" For there is nothing—not a word—in the Administration's HMO bill that effectively responds to the evidence of HMO fraud and abuse. I would like placed into the record of this hearing Senate Bill 2676, the Administration's HMO proposal.

HEW has made the development of HMO's across the nation a major initiative. On March 10 of this year, the HEW Secretary convened a conference of labor and business leaders to encourage their participation in the development of HMO's and the enrollment of union populations in them.

Likewise in April, the Secretary sent to the White House a number of options for national health insurance. Included is a highly visible and prominent role for health maintenance organizations.

The HEW officials have made a number of speeches and have given testimony before the Congress advocating HMO's and stressing their importance as a major means toward containing health care costs.

There is little question that the development of HMO's is a major policy initiative of the HEW Administration.

I would like to place in the record, reports by the General Accounting Office and internal HEW documents evidencing problems in the HMO program. These can be made a single exhibit to include all of these reports which deal with problems ranging from self dealing in Federally qualified HMO's to problems of inferior quality of patient care. There are reports of misallocation of Federal funds by HMO's and fraud against the Government.

In the face of this overwhelming evidence, HEW presented to the Congress legislation that does not respond to HMO fraud and abuse. Instead HEW would increase funding to HMO's and repeal the present method of reimbursing HMO's for the care of Medicare beneficiaries. In its place HEW would pay HMO's 95 percent of the average per capita fee-for-service costs to Medicare. The same reimbursement would apply to Medicaid under the proposal.

The present Medicare reimbursement formula provides that the HMO's costs of provided services to Medicare beneficiaries be substracted from the program's fee-for-service costs in the geographic area. As a reward for its efficiency and as a benefit to Government, the difference between the HMO's costs and fee-for-service costs are split between the organization and Government.

The Administration contends that increased reimbursement to HMO's is necessary to encourage the development of more organizations. James Lane, Counsel to the Kaiser Foundation Health Plan, explained the position at an HMO conference held by HEW in September of last year.

The critical factor in increasing the number of Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries enrolled in HMO's is to provide sufficient incentive for them to enroll in an HMO when to do so would mean that they will have to accept less freedom of choice of physicians and hospitals than they have now.

This can be accomplished by paying the HMO's the savings resulting from their efficiency which they may pass on to their Medicare and Medicaid members in the form of added benefits or lower rates or both.

In arriving at the proposed reimbursement rate, the areawide cost of the fee-for-service program, including the Government's costs of program administration, for example, carrier and intermediary costs, would be determined. Ninety-five percent of this sum would be computed on a per-capita basis and paid to the HMO. This calculation would amount to approximately 100 percent of the fee-for-service costs for medical services. The only savings to the Government would be the administrative costs of fee-for-service.

The Administration's bill presumes that accurate fee-for-service figures for small regional areas can be identified in order to compute the percentage. HEW's experience, however, is to the contrary. Likewise, States can't precisely quantify Medicaid costs on even a county-wide basis.

This overall Administration reimbursement proposal raises a rather interesting question. Why should the Federal Government give organizations $2 million in grants and $5 million in loans to set up health maintenance organizations and then pay them an amount equal to fee-for-service for providing care to Medicare and Medicaid beneficiaries?

The DHEW proposal for HMO reimbursement belies all of the arguments that HMO's are financial alternatives to fee for service. Indeed, attaching HMO reimbursement to the fee-for-service inflationary spiral should raise the question as to whether we need HMO's at all from a simply financial standpoint.

Mr. Chairman. As you well know, your Subcommittee considered in 1972 a proposal to pay HMO's 95 percent of Medicare fee-for-service levels and you rejected it, wisely. It was resurrected in the Administration proposal which has its roots in a HEW "Conference to Review Legislation and Regulations Governing HMO Contracting with Medicare and Medicaid" on September 23, 1977. One of the advocates of the proposal is Kaiser's Mr. Lane. I offer Mr. Lane's paper for inclusion in the record.

The conference was attended by only a few, other than Mr. Lane, including Bruce Yarwood, the Chief Deputy Director for Programs of the California Health Department. Mr. Yarwood sent on December 16, 1977, a memorandum prepared by his staff for DHEW. The memorandum was prepared in response to an issue paper which included a proposal to pay HMO's 95 percent of fee-for-service levels. I'll read from a part of that memorandum:

"If the primary interest of the issue paper was to produce a proposal pleasing to the HMO industry, it undoubtedly succeeded. The concept of paying 95 percent of per capita costs should have almost universal appeal to HMO's. Since (to quote the issue paper itself), 'actual HMO costs can be expected to run typically 15 to 20 percent below that of the fee-for-service system.' The notion that the HMO's would be required to plow back the difference between the adjusted community rate and this (95) percentage . . . in the form of reduced premiums and/or increased benefits is a gesture in the direction of proper use of public funds, but would be virtually unenforceable."

Mr. Chairman, I offer for the record of the hearing, Mr. Yarwood's complete memorandum to HEW.

The Subcommittee staff recently asked the California Health Department to project the cost impact on the State Medicaid program if the Administration's proposal is adopted.

In a letter to me, California explained it is presently paying $60 million a year to 13 HMO's for health care services to 125,000 Medicaid beneficiaries. This represents a spending level equal to about 80 percent of fee-for-service costs in the State.

The California Health Department says that under the Administration's reimbursement formula, the Medicaid prepaid program costs could rise from $60 million to $71 million a year. Aggregate HMO profits from the State Medicaid program would increase 250 percent from $7.5 million to $18.8 million. In short, the State is already paying HMO's at a reasonable level for the services they provide. Any increase in the payment would be an absolute increase in HMO profits.

The California Health Department said "95 percent rates would undoubtedly be higher than the premiums most HMO's charge private members, in exception to the usual principle that Government should pay no more for goods or services than private purchasers. It is difficult to believe that legislators would accept such an arrangement."

This information was prepared by Rigby Leighton, the director of the Prepaid Health Research Evaluation and Demonstration Project, which is committed to receive $5.2 million in HEW funds. I offer his letter to me as an exhibit. The Finance Committee passed legislation specifically authorizing this project in 1975, following the first round of prepaid health hearings in the Permanent Subcommittee and the receipt by your Subcommittee of a number of reports on prepaid systems by the General Accounting Office.

Both your Subcommittee and ours were concerned that Government develop methods to determine the actual costs of delivering specific health care services in HMO's where there is a financial disincentive to provide the necessary level of care. In addition, we were concerned that Government have an appropriate and uniform method of determining rates to pay and whether care being provided to enrollees is appropriate.

Mr. Chairman, the standards and methods being developed by the California project can be important and useful to Government program administrators. I know that the staff of your Subcommittee and my Subcommittee over the past many months have continually recommended to the HMO staff at HEW to discuss with the California Demonstration project staff what they are finding.

As of yesterday, there has neither been a visit nor even a telephone call from HMO program staff to the California project. It is as if the HEW staff does not want to know. I strongly suggest that our Subcommittees continue to monitor, as we have, the work of the California Demonstration project. And when its work is concluded, you may well want to consider the possible inclusion of the HMO cost determining, rate-setting and quality evaluation methods as part of the Medicare and Medicaid programs. Perhaps HEW is ignoring the California project for the same reason the report by the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations is apparently not taken too seriously.

Mr. Chairman, we have been told by HEW officials and staff that our report deals with California prepaid health plans, not Federally qualified HMO's. HEW regards the California experience as an aberration that has been resolved.

Our Subcommittee contends in its report that the California prepaid health experience portends what can be expected in the Federal HMO effort. The report concludes that "unless remedial action is taken, the Federal Government, through its program of financing the development of HMO's faces the prospect of encountering nationwide the same kinds of scandal and abuse that have plagued the California Medicaid program."

Mr. Chairman, during the course of our continuing interest in HMO's, the Subcommittee staff has received unsolicited telephone calls from credible sources offering examples of problems in the Federal HMO program similar to those identified in the Subcommittee report.

In addition, the staff obtained information on its own. I would like to discuss some of this information. Because most of the individuals and organizations involved have not been interviewed or otherwise offered the opportunity to respond to the information and allegations we have obtained, I will not mention any names. However, each of the examples I will give is supported by materials obtained from the files of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the General Accounting Office, from interviews with employees of the HMO program and/or from interviews of Government auditors and HMO employees.

With that understanding, I would like to offer the information we have obtained as a sealed exhibit and discuss these issues.

Mr. Chairman, the first case I would like to discuss involves the certification of a former California prepaid health plan as a Federally qualified HMO. I bring this up because there is no clearer example of how the Federal HMO program may not be learning from California's mistake.

This particular HMO is a non-profit corporation which has received $437,000 in HMO loans. The medical director is the president and sole owner of a for-profit management company and a company that leases a clinic building to the HMO. The medical director's wife owns corporations which provide lab and pharmacy services to the HMO.

The organization has a history of negative medical quality and financial audits by California agencies. As late as March 8, 1978, one week before Federal qualification, the HMO was put on notice by the State that it had not been responsive to problems which had been identified.

The HMO has reported that its administrative costs are running $14 for every $39.57 per month the State Medicaid program pays for each of the 5,500 Medicaid members enrolled in the plan. This amounts to 40 percent of Medicaid program payments to the plan.

The Subcommittee's concern in its inquiry and report is that through complicated corporate structures which can artificially increase HMO costs, monies can be diverted from health care.

The utilization records of this newly qualified HMO either bear out the Subcommittee's concern for diversion of funds or they indicate that this organization has enrolled some of the healthiest poor people in the State.

For example, the Medicaid beneficiaries in the 13 qualified HMO's in California are hospitalized at a rate of 319 days per thousand enrollees per year. This average, in itself, is below the 400 to 500 a day average in most HMO's. But for the newly qualified HMO the rate is 95 days, less than a third the statewide rate.

The statewide rate for hospital outpatient visits is 143 per thousand enrollees per year. But the rate of this newly qualified HMO is one-seventh that, at 20 visits. Dental visits statewide are running at a rate of 747 visits per thousand enrollees per year. But the newly qualified HMO's rate is 204 such visits.

The qualification of this HMO raises a number of questions:

First, to what extent does the Federal HMO qualification process take into account the possibility of diversion of funds through complicated corporate structures?

Second, what weight is given during the qualification process to patient utilization rates in HMO's? and Third, now that this HMO is qualified, what can HEW do to assure a reasonable standard of care for the enrollees?

Mr. Chairman, another matter of concern to the Investigations Subcommittee was the slippage of Federal grant and loan funds from the non-profit HMO to related for-profit entities.

In a mid-Atlantic State, a non-profit corporation was created to take over a for-profit HMO, which had been created by a nursing home chain. The purpose according to sources was to take advantage of Federal grants and loans.

Immediately prior to qualification, the non-profit board created by resolution a $500,000 indebtedness to the nursing home chain. According to reliable sources interviewed, satisfactory documentation was not provided to support the contention that such a debt was owed. At first, HEW staff won an agreement from the nursing home chain that it would subordinate its interest in the indebtedness to the Government's $2.5 million loan. But in December, 1977, the staff allowed the non-profit HMO to use Federal loan funds to pay off the debt.

This incident raises a question about whether HMO loans should be used in such a way. The primary purpose of the loan program is to assist developing HMO's make it through the difficult first years. Should Federal loan funds be used to buy out proprietary interests?

Mr. Chairman, there are other examples of possible diversion of funds. For some time, HEW has known first hand of a problem with an HMO now in financial trouble in a southern State. In this case, the GAO reported that Federal grant and loan funds were being diverted through the non-profit corporation to a for-profit entity, which in turn used part of the funds to purchase equipment. Once again, in turn, the equipment was leased back to the non-profit HMO. The GAO found that among the items leased were disposable test tubes and syringes.

The HMO office was recently advised by the HEW regional office that a Federally qualified HMO in the Pacific Northwest is using part of its $2.5 million loan to build a building in direct violation of the terms of the loan and HEW regulations.

In addition to diversion of funds, there are examples of questionable HEW management decisions. The GAO will soon make public a report on how the Denver regional HEW office allowed, contrary to law, Federal health care funds to be used to build an HMO clinic. Title to that building is now vested in an HMO.

Mr. Chairman, there are other examples that I will list briefly. Each is indicative of HMO program problems. The Investigations Subcommittee and the General Accounting Office recently referred to the HEW Inspector General allegations that the executive director of a western HMO received a kickback from a firm providing services to his plan. In addition, the plan paid for the executive director's round trip first class air fare to St. Louis. Likewise, the HMO paid for an "emergency out of area service." The man allegedly flew to St. Louis where surgeons reversed his vasectomy.

In an east coast HMO which has received more than $3 million in grants and loans, the $65,000 a year executive director told the staff that his plan provides him with a $300 a month car allowance and all maintenance costs for the car. The car is a new Mercedes Benz, which the executive director said is used exclusively to drive between the administrative office of the plan and its two clinics. He said he lives a block away from his office and has a car of his own for his personal use.

While this is not scandalous, it raises a broad question about how grant and loan recipients are spending their funds.

Mr. Chairman, my staff has obtained internal HEW documents indicating 4 HMO's are in serious financial trouble. These 4 plans have borrowed over $12 million which the Government may lose if these plans fail.

Mr. Chairman, these kinds of examples, and those investigated and documented in the Subcommittee's report raise some fundamental questions that must be addressed prior to any enactment of the Administration's proposed legislation or even the extension of the present program:

1. Once surfaced, does the internal HMO management mechanism have the capability to take decisive action to stop the abuses?

2. Will adequate safeguards be developed to minimize the frequency of these kinds of problems? and

3. Finally, is Congress discharging its oversight responsibilities adequately? Are we going to be able to ensure that this megabuck program can be controlled? Can we ensure it will not become just another give-away program?

The information staff has obtained on abuses suggests that there is a need for an expanded number of competent staff involved in the HMO qualification and compliance elements of the programs.

The Administration acknowledged the need for more staff. In February, HEW asked for and received from the Appropriations Committee an increase of 37 positions for the programs. HEW officials promised the Appropriations Committee that of the new positions, 13 would be added to the 12 persons now responsible for qualification. Some 23 persons would be added to the group of 9 persons responsible for compliance.

The Director-Designate of the HMO program now intends to have 10 persons in qualifications, 15 short of the number promised to the Appropriations Committee and 25 persons in compliance, 7 less than what the Appropriations Committee expects.

When I learned of this plan last week, I directed the staff of the Permanent Subcommittee to bring it to the attention of the Appropriations Committee staff and suggested that Senator Warren Magnuson, the Chairman, be advised.

The Appropriations staff told us that they had not been advised of this planned cutback by HEW. Senator Magnuson provided us with an exchange of letters between his Committee and HEW on the 37 new positions and the planned use of them. With Senator Magnuson's consent, I offer this correspondence for the record of this hearing.

In addition, I offer as an exhibit, a May 9, 1978, memorandum of the HMO program Director-Designate on re-organization of the program staff. Attached is a chart showing the planned cutback in qualification and compliance staff. There is also a memorandum discussing the commitment to Senator Magnuson and the intended reversal.

Subcommittee staff discussed this matter with the HMO Program Director. He said that the commitment was made prior to his taking over the job. Based on his review, too many slots had been allocated to the compliance and qualification functions.

Following approval of his reorganization plan by superiors, he said he intends to discuss it with Appropriations staff. He insisted that there are appropriate numbers of staff to maintain their responsibilities at this time.

Nevertheless, the question remains: Does this cutback in compliance and qualification staff reflect a change in HEW's announced commitment to improve program management?

Mr. Chairman, in spite of the facts I have presented and the concerns I have raised, I don't believe we should overreact or react harshly to the officials of HEW and the director of the HMO program. There are very, very few people in the nation who understand prepayment systems and only a handful who have a broad enough background to appreciate the benefit of HMO's, and at the same time recognize their potentials for abuse.

The Department of Health, Education, and Welfare has selected HMO development as its major cost containment and health delivery system reform effort. The Administration made this choice because there is evidence of financial and quality of care benefits resulting from some prepaid health organizations of long standing around the country.

But the organizations that form the basis of this policy initiative were founded, and developed for the most part, on their own, without Federal or State Government support. They were the creations, frequently, of consumer groups, as is the case with the Group Health Cooperative of Puget Sound, an HMO with an excellent reputation.

When the Government announces that it will finance the devolpment of anything, it creates instantly a new industry, a financial constituency and a host of problems, because some of the people inevitably attracted to the Federal trough are those interested in a fast buck. Their success is directly relative to the quality of program administration. The poorer the program management, the greater the potential for actual ripoff.

HEW should be given a chance to advance its policy initiative and expand the development of health maintenance organizations. However, HEW should temper its fervor with an understanding of what can happen to taxpayer funds and patients and manage the program accordingly.

We have only to look at what happened to us when we got into the Medicare and Medicaid programs. When Government dollars were placed into the medical marketplace, we created instantly a political and financial constituency, clothed in human needs and standing in a medical-commercial complex that includes huge professional and trade associations and millions of elderly and poor. The older the programs become, the more difficult and complex become our efforts at reform.

Indeed, it is the very problems with Medicare and Medicaid that provide us with reasons that such systems as health maintenance organizations should be given an opportunity to succeed.

But let us not build another uncontrollable, unmanageable, inflationary program in the process. It would be the height of irresponsibility to do so, given what we know now.

Let's not legislate on the basis of the promises of those offering easy answers to complex problems. Let's try new methods—but let's try them cautiously and carefully before we open the gates of the Federal Treasury.

Therefore, we ask that HEW listen. Listen to facts. Take a historical view, not only of HMO's, but also of what can happen when a major Government initiative is begun without serious regard for good law, and effective regulations, and proper management.

Mr. Chairman, in closing, I would like to invite your attention to what may be a growing problem. As you may know, the Subcommittee is taking a fresh look at the Federal law enforcement efforts to deal with what many perceive to be a growing organized crime problem in this country. One thing is clear, organized crime is becoming very sophisticated in its financial activities—and, of course, it is always attracted to vast dollars without much regard to whether they are tax dollars or gambling dollars.

There are preliminary indications that there may be a move on the part of organized crime figures into the health care services industry. This makes efficient Government program administration all the more important.

Just to give you an example, the Subcommittee staff a few years ago received information that a west coast prepaid health plan operator was the subject of a contract to kill him. The reason was that he had failed to withdraw a lawsuit he had filed against a chain of hospitals and clinics allegedly owned by Chicago organized crime figures.

Staff informally developed information that tended to confirm the threat, which was allegedly never carried out because the man who was to pull the trigger died of a heart attack the day before the planned execution. As for the HMO operator, he has recently been convicted of bribing union officials to contract with his plan.

The Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations has been watching another corporation which plans to franchise HMO's. The franchise plan raises a question as to whether it is good public policy to provide health care through outlets similar to the way McDonald's sells hamburgers.

This particular corporation has been the recipient of HEW funds related to, but not provided directly by the HMO program. I would prefer not to name this firm because of our ongoing interest in it, but I have a sealed exhibit of materials on this corporation.

The Subcommittee staff, through the cooperation of midwestern law enforcement officials, has established a relationship between one director of this corporation and organized crime figures in Detroit.

I am by no means suggesting that the HMO industry has been or is about to be taken over by organized crime. However, I don't believe we can mix the mafia and medicine and expect to provide good health care to the people. Any identification of organized crime figures in the health care services industry should be a lesson to us all that there is a need for more vigilant and efficient government and private sector health program administration.

I am sure you will agree with me that the large majority of health professionals and those who operate and work in health facilities are decent, conscientious and dedicated men and women.

Our concern should be those who make a mockery of that dedication and decency by taking advantage of them with schemes and scams. We should be especially concerned with sloppy and careless government program administrators which are easy marks and government officials who refuse to respond to compelling records of fraud and abuse.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Will the Senator from Georgia yield?

Mr. NUNN. I am glad to yield to my colleague from Virginia.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, I commend my colleague from Georgia (Mr. NUNN) for the amendment which has been presented. I shall support it. I think it materially and significantly improves the legislation now pending before the Senate.

Also, I associate myself with the remarks which the Senator from Georgia just made in regard to the importance of HEW managing the various programs in an efficient way. I have been greatly disturbed by the report of the Inspector General of HEW that in this past year, HEW misspent, through waste, mismanagement, and fraud, between $6.3 billion and $7.4 billion. It is important, if the HMO concept is to be successful, and I should certainly like to see it succeed, that HEW be vigilant in this area.

I should like to ask the Senator from Georgia whether he feels it would be desirable to require a report from HEW, either from the Inspector General or from the Secretary of HEW, an annual report with regard to this program, or does he think the GAO audit would be sufficient?

Mr. NUNN. I certainly do not think there would be any harm in having a reporting requirement of HEW. I say to the Senator from Virginia that the General Accounting Office, by reason of this amendment and our overall scrutiny of this program for the last 3½ years, and also at Senator SCHWEIKER's and Senator KENNEDY's requests, has been monitoring this program. I think they will continue to monitor it very closely.

Frankly, I should think we might get a more objective analysis of the program from the General Accounting Office than we would from HEW. I should think the Inspector General certainly would have a role to play here with regard to fraud and abuse in the program. But I defer to Senator SCHWEIKER and Senator KENNEDY as to the final desirability of such an amendment. It would certainly do no harm and perhaps would lead to the overall emphasis the Senate would give to HEW to let the Secretary know we are going to be watching this program very, very carefully.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the Senator from Georgia.

(Mr. NELSON assumed the chair.)

Mr. KENNEDY. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Yes.

Mr. KENNEDY. In the amendment, under program management evaluation, there is a requirement for the General Accounting Office to do an annual report.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Yes, but I was wondering if it would be helpful or necessary to include the Secretary of HEW.

Mr. KENNEDY. In the legislation, the HEW does an annual report. That is in the legislation.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. That is in the pending legislation?

Mr. KENNEDY. Yes.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I thank the Senator from Massachusetts.

Mr. NUNN. I say to the Senator from Virginia, just to elaborate, in my amendment we have a program management evaluation section. Basically, it states in section 13(d):

(d) The Comptroller General shall evaluate the adequacy and effectiveness of the policies and procedures of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the management of the grant and loan programs established by this title and the adequacy of the amounts of assistance available under such programs and shall report to the Congress the results of such evaluation not later than May 1, 1979.

The purpose of that date is to get in front of the appropriation bills next year on this subject. Overall, I believe this would give us a good analysis.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Cheryl Davis of my staff, David Vienna of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations and Barry Kinsey of the Committee on the Budget be granted the privilege of the floor during all debates and votes on S. 2534, as well as Larry Patton of Senator PROXMIRE's staff.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, do I have control of the time and if so, how much time do I have left?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Georgia has 7 minutes.

Mr. NUNN. I yield 3 minutes to the Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join my colleagues in offering this amendment to the Health Maintenance Organization Act. With this amendment I believe we have sought and achieved a balance at a time when we are all so justly concerned about wasteful Federal expenditures and are trying to devise rational ways to control costs, while improving our health care delivery system.

SUCCESS OF SOME HMO'S

There is now good evidence that some health maintenance organizations deliver high quality care to our citizens, while also beginning to approach control of costs. All of us need to support techniques which help improve our Nation's health care while avoiding the frightening inflationary spiral in which we are caught, and I view the experiments in developing health maintenance organizations as important efforts along those lines.

FRAUD AND ABUSE

On the other hand, it is only fair to point out that many of the initial claims, most of the promised cost saving, much of the widely heralded benefits, have yet to appear. A recent GAO report tells us that several well established health maintenance organizations remain on shaky financial ground and may well not survive without continued, open-ended, perhaps unending Federal support. The distinguished Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN) and his colleagues on the permanent Subcommittee on Investigations have pointed graphically to examples of fraud and abuse in the system. Today, as we discuss these programs, opportunities persist for illicit self-dealing, a potential for huge profits at the expense of our citizens' health.

Testimony before the Senate Finance Committee, of which I am a member, indicated further that unless we monitor much more closely what we have been doing, we may be supporting a program which, in the future, could prove to rival the nursing home and medicaid mill scandals about which we have heard all too much in the past.

I should like to give full credit to my distinguished colleagues, Senators SCHWEIKER and KENNEDY, for making every effort to identify problem areas and propose changes which should certainly lead to solutions.

While I believe present regulatory authority afforded a fine opportunity for the HEW administration to guard against and take measures to avoid fraud and abuse, I support the measures in the bill as originally introduced. These proposals will help to address these issues and serve to protect against the conflicts of interest and instances of harmful self-dealing that have characterized the past.

I believe our amendment furthers these efforts by strengthening sanctions aginst those who might persist in defrauding our citizens and abusing their trust.

PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

The administration acknowledges inadequacy in past program management. The report submitted by my distinguished colleagues on the Committee on Human Resources states clearly that administration of this program has been lackluster at best. The GAO points to concrete examples of inefficiency and inability to follow the timetable specified by statute. To this day, regulations implementing several statutory requirements are lacking. To this day, Federal loan policies for individual HMO's remain unclear. To this day, the elderly and poor have few opportunities to join and benefit from even the most fully established programs.

But I believe there is reason for hope. HEW has appointed new leadership. We know more today about the strengths and weaknesses of many of the individual programs. The new leadership now has a golden opportunity to clearly define responsible approaches to maximizing that which is good about these programs, while abolishing deficiencies which should have disappeared long ago.

SUPPORT FOR THE AMENDMENT

This amendment sets authorizing levels which provide ample opportunity to further develop, refine, and monitor the progress of the HMO efforts that are under way. In agreeing upon these levels, we believed that this was not the time to rush ahead with a virtually open-ended, 5-year commitment; this was not the time to quickly expand the loan program, expand the grant program, double the authorizing levels. Our citizens tell us daily that this is the time to step slowly and support leadership which understands that we must move with proper caution.

Let us give the administration a chance to do something really well. Let us not burden new leadership with a mandate to double a program which to this point has been poorly managed and has not lived up to even its most modest potential. It seems to me that by supporting this amendment, we would act responsively, we would endorse the hopes of those who are developing such programs for the future, and we would act in a way that our citizens can view as responsible and accountable to their needs.

CONCLUSION

In conclusion, I offer my thanks to my distinguished colleagues, particularly Senators NUNN, BELLMON, PROXMIRE, SCHWEIKER and KENNEDY for working out a compromise which addresses these difficult issues successfully. My special thanks go also to Senator NUNN and the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, whose efforts brought to light so many of the problems we must address.

I am pleased to join in sponsoring this amendment, and I urge its support and adoption.

I yield back whatever time I have remaining.

Mr. NUNN. Mr President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I yield 1 minute to myself.

As I indicated before, I am glad to have the opportunity to support this amendment and I appreciate the constructive attitude of the Senator from Georgia and the others who cosponsored it. I do think that we ought to keep the types of abuses that we have seen in this program in some perspective.

Clearly, the advantages of this program to the American people far outweigh some of the abuses that we have seen alleged. We have taken strong steps and I want to indicate to the membership that there will be no committee or no member who will suggest stronger action than the members of our committee have. As a member of the Committee on the Judiciary, I know we had actually requested additional resources for the Department of Justice for the investigation of fraud, not only in HEW but in a variety of other programs. As one who is strongly committed to health care programs, I realize at the outset that, unless they are going to be virtually free from fraud and abuse to the extent that we can make possible legislatively, there is no hope for them.

I do think if many of our other programs got the kind of review that this one got, we might find other similar problems in other areas.

The tragedy of this program is that it was administered by people, from 1973 up to a year ago, that were completely and totally opposed to an effective program, and we can document that, chapter and verse.

There is no sense making excuses about it. We are interested in the future.

I think the amendment of the Senator from Georgia, which we have welcomed the opportunity to join, should deal with some of the problem areas. I am hopeful we will be able to get a clean bill of health. I think the continued review by the General Accounting Office and by HEW and by our committee will attempt to assure that.

So I thank the Senator from Georgia for his constructive comments and the contribution he has made to this legislation.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I yield myself 2 minutes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Pennsylvania.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I want to join with the chairman of the Health Subcommittee in thanking the distinguished Senator from Georgia for his diligence and vigilance in the areas of fraud and abuse and HEW program management. I share his concerns and support his efforts in this area. I have supported many of his suggestions to avoid problems in the future. I also have registered this concern and pursued our oversight efforts in the Appropriations Committee, on which I serve. I intend to continue those oversight efforts as the Appropriations Committee, as well as the Human Resources Committee, oversees this program.

I think there is a renewed dedication by all of us to monitor HEW's performance, and a renewed dedication on HEW's part, too, to perform more efficiently in the HMO area.

So I think we have the target in sight. I think it is achievable.

I commend the Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN), the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), and others, for their work in this area, and for their very valuable, constructive contributions to this bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I want to thank my colleague from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) and my colleague from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) for their cooperative attitude in bringing this program, which has so much potential in terms of providing health care services for our citizens, and also a potential for saving a great deal of money for our taxpayers, under close scrutiny, and for making sure we do everything possible to see that we take a step-by-step approach and build a health maintenance organization program on a very solid foundation.

I believe this amendment and the provisions they already had in the bill dealing with fraud and abuse will go a long way in that direction.

I might say in summary that this amendment would cut $50 million from the program over the first 3 years. Then, of course, it would limit the program to a 3-year authorization, thereby saving another $185 million, the following 3 years, for a total savings of $335 million.

I am hopeful that we will find this works so well there will be an expanded effort. Hopefully, it really can save money. I do think and agree it has a great potential for that.

I thank my colleague from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) not only for cosponsoring this amendment, but for the very diligent efforts he gives us in the overall area of health care, and also for the opportunity I had to appear before the Finance Subcommittee on Health before Senator DOLE and Senator TALMADGE to present some of the problems we had uncovered in the investigations.

Mr. President, unless there are further Senators who desire to speak, I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time on the amendment. I do not anticipate we would need a rollcall vote, unless the Senator from Massachusetts would think otherwise.

● Mr. PERCY. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with Senators NUNN, KENNEDY, and SCHWEIKER in sponsoring this amendment to S. 2534, the Health Maintenance Organization Act Amendments of 1978. I am a firm believer in Health Maintenance Organizations. They seek to promote preventive medicine and have financial incentives to keep their members healthy. They are not new to the health field but their importance is just beginning to be felt on a large scale. In view of the astronomical rise in health care costs in the past decade it is important that competition be encouraged in this field. HMO's have provided this competition and have proven themselves to be a viable means of containing health care costs. We have 7 federally qualified HMO's in Illinois, 5 located in the Chicago area, which are doing an excellent job of providing for the health care needs of the people in Illinois.

I see HMO's as part of the foundation on which any future national health care programs will be built. However, I am concerned about the establishment of financially secure HMO's. They must earn good reputations to insure public support. As ranking minority member of the Permanent Subcommittee on Investigations, I have participated in many hearings on Prepaid Health Plans and HMO's. Witness after witness cited the numerous cases of fraud and abuse in the HMO industry. This testimony sensitized me to the need for stringent fraud and abuse provisions.

The fraud and abuse provisions present in this amendment are the result, in large part, of this report. These provisions will aid in protecting the reputations of legitimate and successful HMO's from being tarnished by the unscrupulous dealings of a few.

The other provisions in this amendment follow the philosophy of promoting the growth of HMO's while scrutinizing the expenditure of public funds used for this purpose. Regulations which insure that tax dollars furnished to this program will not be misspent are not only requested, but loudly demanded by the taxpayers. This amendment responds to that demand.

I strongly support this amendment. It addresses the issue of fraud and abuse, but does not stifle HMO development. I urge my colleagues to vote for this amendment.●

● Mr. BELLMON. Mr. President, I support the amendment to S. 2534 offered by Senator NUNN of Georgia. I emphasize that although I support this amendment, I believe that expansion of HMO's is desirable and will help to create competition and greater efficiency in the health care delivery system. I am greatly disturbed, however, at the prospect of greatly expanding authorization levels for the HMO program in light of the rather dismal record established to date. If authorizations are fully appropriated, CBO estimates that outlays for this program would increase from $19 million in fiscal year 1978 to $48.8 million in fiscal year 1979; $70.5 million in fiscal year 1980; $91.3 million in fiscal year 1981; $97.9 million in fiscal year 1982; and $98.5 million in fiscal year 1983.

Mr. President, it is difficult to justify increases of this magnitude in light of clear evidence of widespread abuse and mismanagement. The problem of fraud and exploitation of citizens by many California prepaid health plans has been well documented. More recently, GAO completed a study of 14 federally supported HMO's and reported that only 3 had a good chance of achieving financial independence at the end of 5 years. Five have a fair chance, but at least six will almost certainly not achieve financial viability.

It is true, Mr. President, that there is some risk in the development of any new health financing program. However, there is evidence that many of the past failures can be attributed to poor management and inadequate administrative control by HEW. I call attention, for example, to the following administrative problems reported by GAO in its analysis of HMO programs:

HEW has not developed specific standards or guidelines for the community rating requirements of the act. Thus, at least some HMO's do not conform to required community rating standards.

HMO's have not enrolled persons broadly representative of their service area, especially the elderly and indigent.

HMO's have failed to develop adequate quality assurance programs.

HEW's implementation of the HMO Act has been fragmented, uncoordinated, and understaffed, and there have been long delays in issuance of regulations and guidelines.

I am encouraged, Mr. President, by the fact that the administration has given HMO's high priority and has taken important steps to improve the management of these programs. Most of these changes have not been fully implemented, however, and we have no solid evidence that HEW can effectively monitor programs at this time. This inability to administer HMO programs becomes an important issue because the Congress is being asked to greatly expand the grant and loan program. Under the current provisions of S. 2534 (the HMO Extension Act) total loans and grants would be increased from $4.65 million to $10.65 million. Mr. President, I have a table prepared by GAO which summarizes the impact of the proposed bill on the grant and loans programs and I shall include it at the end of these remarks.

The Nunn amendment offers a reasonable solution to the grant and loan problem. It keeps current levels through fiscal 1979 but allows for increases to the recommended levels in S. 2534 for fiscal year 1980 and fiscal year 1981. Exceptions may be made in very unusual situations to protect a viable HMO, which might require some increase in loan levels. This gives HEW a year to develop the structure necessary to properly administer the program and addresses many of the problems raised by GAO.

Mr. President, there has been a great deal of criticism of HEW because of widespread abuse, waste and mismanagement. Thus, we must be very reluctant to approve large increases in authorizations and to more than double grant and loan levels, at least until all necessary administrative improvements are in place and effective. It appears that we would be best advised to continue with a more modest program until we have assurances that the potential for fraud and abuse has been minimized.

Mr. President, the provisions in this amendment provide for continued, orderly development of HMO's and help to reduce opportunities for fraud and abuse. It is consistent with my view that we should continue to promote alternative methods for providing for the health care of our citizens. The development of alternative delivery systems and expansion of consumer choices offers an attractive alternative to greater Federal regulation as a means for containing health care costs. We must be certain, however, that HMO's are properly administered both to protect the public from exploitation and to reduce the risk of abuses which undermine public confidence in the HMO concept. This amendment will allow the HMO initiative to to move forward and at the same time protect the American public against unwise and premature expenditure of scarce resources. I congratulate the distinguished Senator from Georgia for his efforts to develop an amendment which will, in the long-run, help to insure the viability of the HMO program. I also express appreciation to the distinguished Senators from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) and Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) who have worked diligently to develop responsible solutions to many of the problems in this bill.

The table follows:

COMPARISON OF CURRENT AND PROPOSED FUNDING UNDER THE HMO ACT

| Type of assistance | HMO Act (as amended) | | | | | Proposed HMO amendments of 1978 (S. 2534), total maximum amount |
|---|---|---|---|---|---|---|
| | Total maximum number allowed | Maximum period per award (months) | Maximum amount per award | Total maximum period (months) | Total maximum amount [1] | |
| Developmental grants: | | | | | | |
| Feasibility | 2 | 12 | $75,000 | 24 | $150,000 | $150,000 |
| Planning | 2 | 12 | 200,000 | 24 | 400,000 | 400,000 |
| Initial development | 3 | 12 | 1,000,000 | 36 | 1,000,000 | 2,000,000 |
| Initial development (expension grant) | (2) | (2) | (2) | (2) | 600,000 | 600,000 |
| Subtotal | 7 | 36 | 1,275,000 | 84 | 2,150,000 | 3,150,000 |
| Qualified HMO's: Loans | | | | | [3] 2,500,000 | [4] 7,500,000 |
| Total | 7 | 36 | 1,275,000 | 84 | 4,650,000 | 10,650,000 |

[1] Feasibility, planning and initial development expansion grants can be awarded to a federally assisted project provided (1) it is seeking to become a federally qualified HMO; (2) the total maximum number of grants allowed and total maximum grant period have not been exhausted; and (3) individual awards do not exceed $75,000 for feasibility, $200,000 for planning, and $1,000,000 for initial development.

[2] A maximum initial development expansion grant can be awarded (in addition to the $1,000 initial development grant) provided (1) the total maximum number of grants allowed and the total maximum period have not been exhausted, and (2) the project expands its service area.

[3] Disbursements in any 12-mo period cannot exceed $1,000,000.

[4] Maximum operating loan assistance would increase to $5,000,000 and a maximum loan of $2,500,000 would be made available for construction of ambulatory care facilities.●

● Mr. ROTH. Mr. President, I am pleased to cosponsor this amendment and I want to commend Senators NUNN, KENNEDY, and SCHWEIKER for their efforts in developing this fair and realistic legislation.

Since passage of the HMO Act of 1973, the program has had a history of fraud and abuse at the local level as well as gross mismanagement on the part of HEW. Criticisms of these administrative problems have been the subject of testimony by Senator NUNN to the Senate Finance Committee, Subcommittee on Health and of reports from the General Accounting Office and the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, Subcommittee on Health and of reports from the General Accounting Office and the Senate Governmental Affairs Committee, Subcommittee on Investigations. This amendment is a result of careful scrutiny of the concerns expressed in these reports and an attempt to remedy the problems identified in them.

I believe the approach this amendment takes regarding the grant and loan component of the program is a sound one. To date, HEW has exhibited an inability to effectively establish a uniform loan policy and monitor HMO financial performance. Their response to these criticisms is we need more money for grants and loans. My response is HEW needs more time to learn how to manage the money they have before they get more of our taxpayers' dollars. This is precisely what this amendment provides—time first, money later, when HEW proves it can effectively administer the program. Funding levels for grants and loans will remain constant for 1 year. During that year HEW is expected to develop and implement proper financial policies. GAO will continue to study the HMO program to assure this goal is accomplished.

Provisions are also included to insure proper financial accounting in the HMO's themselves. Imposing a penalty of up to $25,000 and up to 5 years imprisonment for filing a false financial statement insures the provisions already contained in the bill relating to financial statements will be something more than "paper tigers."

When Congress enacted the HMO Act it did so with the belief that HMO's could eventually provide a low-cost alternative for health care coverage. HEW's inefficiency and mismanagement of the program has made light of Congress intent to encourage a service that could be of benefit to those who choose to participate.

I believe this bill is a reaffirmation of the Congress' faith in the potential of the HMO concept and this amendment is a clear statement to HEW that such bureaucratic bungling cannot and will not be tolerated.

I urge that the Senate adopt this amendment to S. 2534.●

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment (UP No. 1457) was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1458

(Purpose: To provide for compliance with the Budget Act)

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Pennsylvania (Mr. SCHWEIKER) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1458.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 20, line 12, insert "beginning October 1, 1978," after "(4)".

On page 33, line 24, strike "The" and substitute "Beginning October 1, 1978, the".

On page 34, line 4, insert "Any contracts entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be limited to amounts provided in appropriation Acts." after "Act.".

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, these are technical amendments to insure that the bill is in compliance with the Budget Act.

I am prepared to yield back the remainder of my time on the technical amendments.

Mr. KENNEDY. I yield back our time.

The amendment (UP No. 1458) was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, S. 2534 represents a bipartisan effort to make significant improvements in the Health Maintenance Organization Act of 1973. The bill is the product of careful review of the Human Resources Committee of the problems and the promise of the HMO program during the last 5 years.

I would like to commend Senator KENNEDY, chairman of the Health and Science Research Subcommittee; Senator SCHWEIKER, its ranking minority member; and the other members of the subcommittee who have dealt with the need to provide quality health care to all Americans at affordable prices. These Senators have grappled with some of the most troublesome and pressing issues to come before Congress.

While health care issues have become more complex, health care costs have been rapidly escalating. In the United States today, nearly 9 percent of our GNP is spent on health care, and that proportion increases every year.

The concept of health maintenance organizations is a proven method of health care delivery. A prepaid group practice provides health care at significantly lower costs than the traditional fee-for-service system. Health care providers operating on a prepaid basis have a built-in economic incentive to maximize preventive care and to minimize unnecessary and duplicative tests. It is only logical that U.S. business, organized labor, the administration, and Members of Congress are focusing more attention on the development of HMO's.

As of February 1978, about 6 million Americans were being served by some 167 health maintenance organizations. More people might choose to participate if given the opportunity.

S. 2534 addresses the problems which have been identified in administering the program. Clarifying and strengthening the existing laws will further the development of health maintenance organizations. The measure would promote more cost-effective management of HMO's through an administrative training program and through strong reporting and disclosure requirements designed to detect fraud and abuse. It would provide existing HMO's with loans and loan guarantees for construction of ambulatory care facilities. Their emphasis on the use of ambulatory care accounts in part for the HMO's success in holding down health care costs.

In recent weeks, the Senate has acted favorably on three pieces of health care legislation. We have made major progress in the advancement of local mental health centers, major progress in important biomedical and technical research programs.

The Health and Science Research Subcommittee has examined our health care system in its entirety. Its members have studied and tried to balance the need for long-term health research—which is crucial to the future health of all Americans—with the immediate need for quality health care delivery. Through their efforts, much attention has been given to the planning and integration of the many services needed to protect the health of every American.

The dramatic human and economic cost of illness in this country mandates detailed review of every Federal health care dollar. We have before us today a bill which would promote a cost-effective system of health care delivery. I congratulate Senator KENNEDY, Senator SCHWEIKER, and all members of the subcommittee for their endeavors.

● Mr. JAVITS. Mr. President, I support S. 2534, the Health Maintenance Organization Amendments of 1978, of which I am a cosponsor.

As a longtime proponent of the prepaid health care concept, and having played an active role in the fashioning of the original Health Maintenance Organization Act, Public Law 93–222, I remain strongly committed to continued Federal support for the development of health maintenance organizations.

In my judgment, the HMO concept embodies many of the very goals which health policymakers in both the public and private sectors are currently seeking to achieve. HMO's stress prevention and early detection; HMO's employ a reimbursement scheme which discourages unnecessary hospitalizations, unnecessary lab tests, the purchase and construction of unnecessary equipment and facilities, and utilize other practices which lead to greater demonstrated cost efficiency; furthermore, HMO's inject in the health care system a much-needed element of competition—that is, an alternative to the fee-for-service system which now dominates health care. Taken together, these characteristics build a solid foundation for health care services delivery reform. The need for such reform is paramount and undeniable; consequently I believe that continued Federal support of the HMO program is warranted and justified.

I recognize that implementation of the HMO Act has not been without its problems. During the years immediately following passage of the act, HEW, for example, was inexcusably slow in issuing regulations. More recently the Department has allowed applications for HMO qualification to accumulate, causing undesirable backlogs in the qualification process. In addition, many HMO's have experienced serious difficulties in becoming financially viable entities. Despite these short-term problems, however, I am convinced that HMO's hold great promise for the provision of reasonably priced, accessible health care services.

In the recent years of Federal experience with HMO's, legislative improvements have been identified which, if enacted, would better stimulate the growth and development of HMO's. The amendments before us today by and large represent the Human Resources Committee's efforts to modify and thus strengthen the provisions of the HMO Act in order to achieve this objective.

I believe that the committee bill as amended by the proposal to be offered by Senator NUNN, of which I am a cosponsor, is an excellent compromise which will strengthen the HMO program. I urge my colleagues to support favorably both the Nunn amendment and the amended committee bill.●

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I am pleased to be a cosponsor of S. 2534, the proposed Health Maintenance Organization Act Amendments of 1978, and urge my colleagues to support this legislation.

Although there have been reports recently of abuses which have occurred in HMO's, and they were indeed serious offenses, major steps have been taken to correct the conditions which led to those abuses. The State and Federal Governments have learned a great deal from those unfortunate cases and have now developed the capacity to avoid their reoccurrence.

Mr. President, when the Health Maintenance Organization Act was amended 2 years ago by Public Law 94–460, several amendments to title XIX of the Social Security Act were enacted which were directed at insuring that medical care provided to medicaid beneficiaries through HMO's would be of high quality. This action was taken in response to serious abuses which had occurred prior to 1974 in California where a concerted effort had been made by the State to provide medical care to medicaid beneficiaries through prepaid health programs. Unfortunately, at that time, there were no measures taken to assure quality of care or to assure cost-effective financial management free of fraud and abuse.

Since 1974, under the leadership of Gov. Jerry Brown, California has completely overhauled the medicaid program of contracts with HMO's. State laws have been enacted to correct the abuses which had occurred prior to 1974.

I think it is fair to say that the new California law has provided a model for other States to follow in providing their medicaid beneficiaries with an opportunity to belong to an HMO.

In fact, the State is developing an annotated version of that law so that States can avoid repeating the mistakes made in 1971 when California first began the contract program with prepaid health care.

S. 2534 addresses these issues as well by requiring each HMO to file financial disclosure statements annually with the Secretary of HEW. These provisions were drafted in cooperation with the General Accounting Office as well as with the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare. I would like to point out, Mr. President, that the committee report expresses the committee's expectation that HEW, in carrying out this program, will make every effort to limit paperwork burdens to the extent effective administration of the program will allow.

Mr. President, HEW has also taken steps to insure that the quality of the services provided members of HMO's meet high standards and that the programs are financially sound and of high integrity. A draft plan for implementing the Department's regulatory responsibilities for HMO compliance was published in the Federal Register last month with the expectation of implementation in the near future.

With the adoption of an effective compliance program, the quality of HMO's participating in the Federal program can be assured.

HEW has also taken steps internally to provide stronger administration of the HMO program. With the new organization and management that has been instituted, many of the problems of the past can be avoided.

Although I began my remarks by emphasizing steps which are being taken to prevent abuse by HMO's, I do not want to give the impression that abuse has been common among HMO's. Indeed, HMO's have shown that they provide valuable options in our health care system.

They have been cost effective, they have provided a high quality of health care, and they provide the kind of health care which is directed towards preventing illness, rather than only providing care after illness has struck. They are built on the premise of promoting health and are truly primary health care programs.

A basic component of many HMO's is a strong patient education program which teaches the patient to follow good health habits, and to take necessary precautions such as making sure that the children in the family are immunized against childhood diseases.

Data submitted to the committee by HEW show that the number of hospital days used by members of HMO's is approximately one-half the number used by Americans generally. An HMO has a financial incentive to detect an illness early, and to care for the patient in an ambulatory setting. There is no advantage to an HMO to refer a patient to a hospital unnecessarily or to order unnecessary tests. HMO's must provide high-quality responsive care to remain competitive with other health insurance options. The growing enrollment in HMO's is evidence they are doing so and that patients are satisfied with the care they are receiving.

In addition, HMO's provide a setting where a number of physicians are in close association with each other daily. Their shared experiences and constant exchange of information expands their capacity to care for patients.

Mr. President, S. 2534 as reported would make several revisions in existing law designed to encourage the development of HMO's and to clarify certain provisions which will permit better administration of the program.

The modifications made by the amendments agreed to today would make further changes to reduce opportunities for abuse. The bill as amended would not make major changes in the HMO law. For the most part, it corrects problems that have been identified in existing law. I believe its enactment will result in an improved program which, with HEW's new organizational structure, can make this concept of health care a real option for many more Americans.

I urge adoption of the committee bill by the Members of the Senate.●

Mr. KENNEDY. Third reading.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. I yield back all my time on the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendments to be proposed, the question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment and the third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second? There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill having been read the third time, the question is, Shall it pass? The yeas and nays have been ordered and the clerk will call the roll.

The legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama (Mrs. ALLEN), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HASKELL), the Senator from Montana (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON), the Senator from Hawaii (Mr. MATSUNAGA), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF) are necessarily absent.

So the bill (S. 2534) was passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) this Act may be cited as the "Health Maintenance Organization Act Amendments of 1978".

(b) Except as otherwise specifically provided, whenever in this Act an amendment or repeal is expressed in terms of an amendment to, or repeal of, a section or other provision, the reference shall be considered to be made to a section or other provision of the Public Health Service Act.

REQUIREMENTS FOR HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATIONS

SEC. 2. (a) Section 1301(b)(3) is amended to read as follows:

"(3) The services of physicians which are provided as basic health services shall be provided through physicians or health professionals who are members of the staff of the health maintenance organizations, through a medical group (or groups), through an individual practice association (or associations), through physicians or health professionals who have contracted with the health maintenance organization for the provision of such services, or through any combination of such staff, medical group (or groups), individual practice association (or associations), or physicians or health professionals under contract with the organization, except that this paragraph shall not apply in the case of (A) physician services which the organization determines, in conformity with regulations of the Secretary, are unusual or infrequently used, or (B) any physician service provided a member of the health maintenance organization other than by such a physician because of an emergency which made it medically necessary that the service be provided to the member before he could have it provided by such a physician. A health maintenance organization may also, during the thirty-six-month period beginning with the month following the month in which the organization becomes a qualified health maintenance organization (within the meaning of section 1310(d)), provide physician services through an entity which but for the requirement of section 1302(4)(C)(i) would be a medical group for the purposes of this title. After the expiration of such period, the organization may provide physician services through such an entity only if authorized by the Secretary in accordance with regulations which take into consideration the unusual circumstances of such entity. A health maintenance organization may not, in any of its fiscal years after the end of its fourth fiscal year of its operation, enter into contracts with physicians other than members of staff, medical groups, or individuals practice associations if the amounts paid under such contracts for basic and supplemental health services provided by physicians exceed 15 per centum of the total estimated amount to be paid in such fiscal year by the health maintenance organization to physicians for the provision of basic and supplemental health services by physicians, or, if the health maintenance organization principally serves a rural area, 30 per centum of such amount, except that this sentence does not apply to the entering into of contracts for the purchase of physician services through an entity which but for the requirements of section 1302(4)(C)(i) would be a medical group for the purposes of this title. Contracts between a health maintenance organization and health professionals for the provision of basic and supplemental health services shall include such provisions as the Secretary may require (including provisions requiring appropriate continuing education). For purposes of this paragraph, the term 'health professional' means physicians, dentists, nurses, podiatrists, optometrists, and such other individuals engaged in the delivery of health services as the Secretary may by regulation designate.".

(b) The second sentence of section 1301(b)(4) is amended to read as follows: "A member of a health maintenance organization shall be reimbursed by the organization for his expenses in securing emergency health services other than through the organization if it was medically necessary that the services be provided before he could secure them through the organization.".

(c) Section 1301(c) is amend—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of paragraph (10),

(2) by striking out the period at the end of paragraph (11) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and", and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(12) provide the Secretary with assurances satisfactory to him that no membership enrollment shall occur at an individual's place of residence.".

DEVELOPMENT OF GRANTS AND INITIAL OPERATING LOANS

SEC. 3. (a) Section 1304(f)(2)(A) is amended to read as follows:

"(A) $1,000,000 through September 30, 1979 and $2,000,000 thereafter, or".

(b) Section 1305(b)(1) is amended by—

(2) striking "$1,000,000" and substituting "$1,000,000 (or $2,000,000 if the Secretary makes a written determination that such disbursements are necessary to preserve the fiscally sound operation of the health maintenance organization and protect against the risk of insolvency of the health maintenance organization and within 30 days of such disbursement furnishes the Human Resources Committee of the Senate and the Interstate and Foreign Commerce Committee of the House of Representatives with written notification thereof and a copy of such written determination and the reasons therefor) through September 30, 1979, and $2,000,000 thereafter".

AMBULATORY CARE FACILITIES

SEC. 4. (a)(1) Section 1305(a) is amended by striking "and" after paragraph (2); striking the period at the end of paragraph (3) and substituting a semicolon, and adding at the end thereof the following new paragraph:

"(4) beginning October 1, 1978, make loans to, and guarantee to non-Federal lenders payment of principal of and interest on loans made to—

"(A) public or nonprofit private entities which have submitted and had approved an application for assistance under section 1304 in accordance with regulations promulgated by the Secretary, or

"(B) public or nonprofit private health maintenance organizations which have demonstrated to the Secretary the capability of maintaining continued fiscal soundness in accordance with the requirements of section 1301(c)(1), or

"(C) other private health maintenance organizations (which have submitted and had approved an application for assistance under this subsection in accordance with regulations of the Secretary and which have demonstrated to the Secretary the capability of maintaining continued fiscal soundness in accordance with the requirements of section 1301(c)(1)) but only if the health maintenance organization will serve a medically underserved population, to assist them in meeting the costs of equipping, constructing, acquiring, or renovating ambulatory care facilities.".

(2) Section 1305(a) is further amended by striking "operating costs" in paragraphs (1), (2), and (3) and substituting in each case "costs of operation".

(b) Section 1305(b) is amended by inserting after "under this section" each time it appears "(other than paragraph (4) of subsection (a))".

(c) The section heading for section 1305 is amended to read as follows:

"LOANS AND LOAN GUARANTEES FOR INITIAL COSTS OF OPERATION AND AMBULATORY CARE FACILITIES"

(d) Section 1305(d) is amended by striking "1980" and substituting "1981".

BENEFITS REQUIRED

SEC. 5. The material in section 1301(b) preceding paragraph (1) is amended by striking "other than those prescribed by or under this title" and substituting "(other than limitations and exclusions approved by the Secretary with respect to services the health maintenance organization is unable to deliver due to natural disasters, wars, or insurrection; with respect to financial liability for care for illness, injury, or conditions covered by a workmen's compensation statute; or with respect to unusual and infrequent medical services or procedures not necessary to protect the health of the member; and other than a limitation otherwise prescribed by or under this title)".

EMPLOYEES' DEDUCTIONS FOR HEALTH BENEFIT PLAN

SEC. 6. (a) Section 1310 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i) Each employer, with a demonstrated capability to provide payroll deductions for health benefits, which is required by subsection (a) to offer to his employees the option of membership in a qualified health maintenance organization shall, with the consent of the employee who exercises such option, arrange for the employee contribution for such membership to be deducted from such employee's wages and salaries and forwarded on his behalf to the qualified health maintenance organization.".

(b) Section 1310(b)(1) is amended to read as follows:

"(1) one or more of such organizations provides physician services through physicians who are members of the staff of the organization or a medical group (or groups), and".

(c) Section 1310(b)(2) is amended to read as follows:

"(2) one or more of such organizations provides physician services through (A) an individual practice association (or associations), or (B) a combination of such association (or associations), medical group or groups, staff, and individual nonstaff physicians under contract with the organization, then of the qualified health maintenance organizations included in a health benefits plan of such employer pursuant to subsection (a) at least one shall be an organization which provides basic health services as described in clause (1) and at least one shall be an organization which provides basic health servics as described in clause (2).".

CONTINUING DEVELOPMENT

SEC. 7. (a) Section 1304(b)(2) is amended by inserting "improvement of services, or" after "subsection includes".

(b) Section 1304 is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(l)(1) A grant or loan guarantee made under this section for the imppovement of services may be made only to an entity which demonstrates the capability of maintaining continued fiscal soundness in accordance with the requirements of section 1301(c)(1).

"(2) Grants or loan guarantees made to a single entity under this section for the improvement of services may not in the aggregate exceed an amount equal to the maximum sums which the applicant would have been eligible to receive under section 1303 and this section less any amounts actually received under such section. The provisions of paragraph (3) of subsection (b) shall not apply to a grant made for the improvement of services.".

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 8. Section 1309(a) is amended by—

(1) striking "and" after "1977," the first time it appears; and

(2) striking everything after "1978" and substituting the following: ", $35,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $65,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, and $70,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981.".

TRAINING FOR HEALTH MAINTENANCE ORGANIZATION ADMINISTRATORS

SEC. 9. Title XIII is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"MANAGERIAL TRAINING

"SEC. 1317. (a) The Secretary shall establish a National Health Maintenance Organization Intern Program (hereinafter referred to as the 'Program') for the purpose of training qualified health maintenance organization administrators and other managerial personnel.

"(b) Payments for internships or for the costs of internships administered under this section may be awarded by the Secretary either—

"(1) to individuals whose application for such position has been approved by the Secretary; or

"(2) to a health maintenance organization or other entity which has submitted and had approved an application for a grant under this section.

"(c) Payments under this section may be made in advance or by way of reimbursement, and at such intervals and on such conditions, as the Secretary finds necessary. Such payments to health maintenance organizations or other entities may be used only for the costs of such internships, and payments under this section with respect to any internship shall be limited to such amounts as the Secretary finds necessary to cover the cost incurred by the health maintenance organization or other entity under this section.

"(d) Payments to individuals receiving training under this section shall not exceed the sum of $2,000 per month per individual, excluding relocation costs, nor shall the term of such payments exceed twelve months.

"(e) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purposes of this section $2.000.000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, $3,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981, $4.-000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, and $4,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1983.".

FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

SEC. 10. Title XIII as amended by this Act is further amended by adding at the end thereof the following new section:

"FINANCIAL DISCLOSURE

"SEC. 1318. (a) Each health maintenance organization shall file annually with the Secretary financial information in such form as the Secretary may require (which in the case of an organization which is related to the health maintenance organization by common ownership or control, shall be a consolidated financial statement), which shall include:

"(1) Such information as the Secretary may require, demonstrating that the health maintenance organization has a fiscally sound operation.

"(2) A description of transactions, as specified by the Secretary, between the health maintenance organization and a party in interest. Such transactions shall include—

"(A) any sale or exchange, or leasing of any property between the health maintenance organization and a party in interest;

"(B) any furnishing for consideration of goods, services (including management services, but excluding health services provided to members by staff, medical group (or groups), individual practice assoication (or associations), or any combination thereof), or facilities between the health maintenance organization and a party in interest; and

(C) any lending of money or other extension of credit between a health maintenance organization and a party in interest.

"(b) For the purposes of this section the term 'party in interest' means:

"(1) any director, officer, employee, partner, person who is directly or indirectly the beneficial owner of more than 5 per centum of the equity, or person who is the beneficial owner of a mortgage, deed of trust, note, or other interest secured by, and valuing more than 5 per centum of the assets (and in the case of a health maintenance organization organized as a nonprofit corporation, an incorporator or member of such corporation under the applicable State corporation law) of the health maintenance organization;

"(2) any entity in which any director, officer, employee, partner, person who is directly or indirectly the beneficial owner of more than 5 per centum of the equity, or person who is the beneficial owner of a mortgage, deed of trust, note, or other interest secured by, and valuing more than 5 per centum of the assets (and in the case of a health maintenance organization organized as a nonprofit membership corporation, an incorporator or member of such corporation under the applicable State corporation law) of the health maintenance organization:

"(A) is an officer or director;

"(B) is a partner (if such entity is organized as a partnership);

"(C) has directly or indirectly a beneficial interest of more than 5 per centum of the equity; or

"(D) has a mortgage, deed of trust, note, or other interest valuing more than 5 per centum of the assets of such entity;

"(3) any person directly or indirectly controlling, controlled by, or under common control with the health maintenance organization.

"(c) Each health maintenance organization shall make the contents of the annual statement described in subsection (a) available to its enrollees upon reasonable request.

"(d) The Secretary shall, as he deems necessary, conduct an evaluation of transactions reported to the Secretary under subsection (a)(2) for the purpose of determining their adverse impact, if any, on the fiscal soundness and reasonableness of charges to the health maintenance organization with respect to which they transpired. The Secretary shall evaluate the reported transactions of not less than five, or if there are more than twenty health maintenance organizations reporting such transactions, not less than one-fourth of the health maintenance organizations reporting any such transactions under subsection (a)(2).

"(e) The Secretary shall file an annual report with the Congress on the operation of this section. Such report shall include—

"(1) an enumeration of standards and norms utilized to make the evaluations required under subsection (d);

"(2) an assessment of the degree of conformity or nonconformity of each health maintenance organization evaluated by the Secretary under subsection (d) with such standards and norms;

"(3) what action, if any, the Secretary considers necessary under section 1312 with respect to health maintenance organizations evaluated under subsection (d).

"(f) Nothing in this section shall be construed to confer upon the Secretary any authority to approve or disapprove the rates charged by any health maintenance organization.

"(g) Any health maintenance organization failing to file with the Secretary the annual financial statement required in subsection (a) shall be ineligible for any Federal assistance under this title until such time as such statement is received by the Secretary and shall not be a qualified health maintenance organization for purposes of section 1310.

"(h) Whoever knowingly and willfully makes or causes to be made any false statement or representation of a material fact in any statement filed pursuant to this section shall be guilty of a felony and upon conviction thereof shall be fined not more than $25,000 or imprisoned for not more than five years, or both.".

PROGRAM ADMINISTRATION

SEC. 11. (a)(1) Section 1306(b)(2) is repealed.

(2) Paragraphs (3), (4), (5), (6), (7), and (8) of section 1306(b) are designated as paragraphs (2), (3), (4), (5), (6), and (7), respectively.

(b) Section 1307 is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(f) Beginning October 1, 1978, the Secretary may make grants to public or nonprofit private entities and enter into contracts with private entities for activities to assist in the provision of technical assistance to projects and health maintenance organizations, and in making determinations within the meaning of sections 1308, 1310, and 1312 of the Act. Any contracts entered into pursuant to the provisions of this section shall be limited to amounts provided in appropriations Acts.".

(c) Subsection (h) of section 1310 is repealed.

(d) Subsection (c) of section 1312 is repealed.

PROGRAM MANAGEMENT EVALUATION

SEC. 12. Section 1314 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(d) The Comptroller General shall evaluate the adequacy and effectiveness of the policies and procedures of the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for the management of the grant and loan programs established by this title and the adequacy of the amounts of assistance available under such programs and shall report to the Congress the results of such evaluation not later than May 1, 1979.".

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. KENNEDY. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. SCHWEIKER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make any necessary technical and clerical corrections in the bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHILD NUTRITION AMENDMENTS OF 1978

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of S. 3085, which the clerk will state by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3085) to extend and amend the special supplemental food program and the child care food program, and for other purposes.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to the consideration of the bill, which has been reported from the Committee on Appropriations with amendments as follows:

On page 28, line 4, after "section" insert "for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1979, and September 30, 1980, and subject to amounts appropriated for this program for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1971, and September 30, 1982";

On page 36, line 25, strike "$600,000,000" and insert "$550,000,000";

On page 39, line 6, strike "specified level of funding authorized to be appropriated" and insert "funds provided in accordance with this section".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Debate on this bill is limited to 2 hours, to be equally divided and controlled by the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN), and the Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE), with 30 minutes on any amendment and with 15 minutes on any debatable motion, appeal, or point of order.

The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I wish to preface my remarks on this bill, the child nutrition amendments of 1978, with a commendation to the chairman of our committee, Senator TALMADGE of Georgia, and the ranking member of that committee, Senator DOLE of Kansas, and also the other members of the committee who have worked especially on this legislation, Senator LEAHY, Senator BELLMON, and other members of the committee, for their efforts to improve our child nutrition programs.

One of the things that I have been proudest of during the years I have worked in this nutritional field is that whether those efforts involved the work of the Select Committee on Nutrition or the full standing Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry, they have without exception always been bipartisan in character. Frequently the Senator from Kansas and I have teamed up in efforts to improve our nutrition programs, and maybe this is as good a time as any to express my appreciation to him for the leadership he has provided in this field and also to congratulate him on his birthday which falls on today.

Several bills were introduced in the Senate in this Congress relating to the child nutrition programs: S. 2630, that was introduced by Senator HUMPHREY, would extend and amend the program for women, infants, and children which is one of the best social programs on the statute books today.

S. 2809, introduced by Senator DOLE, would extend and amend the child care food program. There were also two other bills before the committee: S. 2824, introduced by Senator LEAHY, and the administration's bill, which were comprehensive bills to consolidate the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

The Subcommittee on Nutrition held 6 days of hearings on child nutrition legislation: Four in Washington (April 6, April 10, April 11, and April 12), one in Vermont chaired by Senator LEAHY (April 22), and one in Oklahoma chaired by Senator BELLMON (May 8).

On May 3, 1978, the subcommittee, after careful consideration, voted to report to the full committee a bill that was not comprehensive in nature, but rather a bill that was in the form of a series of amendments to the current law. With the press of business facing the committee and the Senate this year, the committee believed that it would be more prudent to proceed in this manner and to postpone any comprehensive rewrite of the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

The subcommittee bill represented a consensus of views regarding needed changes in the child nutrition programs, and was based, in part, on the provisions of the various bills before the committee.

The Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry, unanimously voted to report to the Senate the subcommittee bill, with several changes, as a clean committee bill.

The Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978 amends the National School Lunch Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966. The major provisions of the bill would:

First. Extend and make permanent the child care food program;

Second. Extend the WIC program for 4 years with guaranteed funding for local WIC agencies up to the authorized amounts of $600 million for fiscal year 1979, $800 million for fiscal year 1980, $900 million for fiscal year 1981, and $950 million for fiscal year 1982;

Mr. President, I realize that these are large figures we are talking about, approaching ultimately $1 billion. But I think every member of the committee who sat through the hearings on this legislation and who had an opportunity to look at the program would contend that this is a program that, in the long run, will save this country money by heading off disease and the handicapping of children in the early formative months and years in such a way as to avoid much more costly results to our society later on.

The more I deal with nutritional issues, the more I am convinced that one way to reduce the Nation's medical bill, that is now approaching some $200 billion is by sound preventive health measures to keep ourselves from becoming ill in the first place. It is enormously expensive to deal with the results of disease and illness and handicap once it strikes. But these programs are designed to provide assistance, good nutrition to nursing mothers, to mothers during the pregnancy period, to infants in the early years of life, in the most vulnerable stages, and to do it in such a way as to not only respond in a humane way to the needs of our people, but actually to head off much greater costs that would otherwise result later on in life.

Third. Expand the nutrition education authority in the WIC program and provide that a minimum of one-fifth of WIC program administrative funds shall be used for nutrition education.

I would like to underscore here again, Mr. President, the importance of this investment in the nutrition education. Congress cannot legislate sound diets, we all know that. But we can provide some of the modest funding that will be required to bring education to our children and to the American people as a whole as to what nutritional habits are more likely to contribute to their health and well-being.

Fourth. Retain the requirement that eligibility in the WIC program be based on "nutritional risk;"

Fifth. Require local WIC agencies to be State approved;

Sixth. Establish an income eligibility standard, for the first time, at the reduced price lunch guideline of the National School Lunch Act (195 percent of the poverty level);

Seventh. Authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase commodities for the WIC program;

Eighth. Reduce by 10 cents the Federal reimbursement rate for the reduced price lunch program;

Ninth. Increase the level of funding for State administrative expenses for the child nutrition program; and Tenth. Encourage, but not mandate, expansion of the school breakfast program by: First, making such schools eligible for "reserved" equipment funds; second, increasing the portion of equipment funds that are "reserved" from 33⅓ percent to 50 percent; and third, increasing the authorization for equipment funds from $40 to $75 million.

During the past decade or so, I, along with many of my distinguished colleagues, have attempted to bring a special focus to the problems of hunger and malnutrition in this country. The Agriculture Committee and the Congress have responded. We have established several food programs designed to reach the most vulnerable groups with special problems. We have also made significant steps toward combining the food aspects of our food assistance programs with an emphasis on the health and preventive health aspects of a nutritionally adequate diet. I believe the WIC program is an excellent example, providing health support as well as food to those in need of nutritional supplements.

The WIC program has earned a special place in the hearts and minds of all of us who have been associated with it. Its purpose is simple, yet sound: providing a supplemental food package to women, infants, and young children who have been shown to be at nutritional risk will encourage mental and physical development, maximize human potential, and minimize remedial costs.

I am pleased to report that the studies to date indicate that the WIC program does, in fact, work.

Since 1973 the Center for Disease Control (CDC) in Atlanta, Ga., has cooperated with a number of State health departments in an ongoing nutrition surveillance system. Participating States systematically collect data on standard indices of the nutritional status of infants and children during their visits to public health clinics. These statistics, including data gathered during WIC certifications, are sent to CDC. Several States report data from clinics authorized to prescribe WIC supplemental foods that can be compared with data from clinics that do not participate in WIC. These records (released by the Department of Agriculture in June; Document No. FNS–176) have provided evidence of the positive effect of the WIC program on individual and aggregate nutritional status.

In addition, the city of Waterbury, Conn., in cooperation with the department of epidemiology and public health at the Yale University School of Medicine has recently forwarded to me a copy of its evaluation of the WIC program. Like the Center for Disease Control study, this study vividly portrays the societal benefits of the WIC program.

I ask unanimous consent that the highlights of the CDC study as well as the letter of transmittal of the Yale study be printed in the RECORD at this point.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

HIGHLIGHTS OF FINDINGS

1. Children entering the WIC Program have a high prevalence of anemia, presumably caused by iron deficiency.

2. Children entering the WIC Program have a high prevalence of linear growth retardation.

3. Children entering the WIC Program have a high prevalence of overweight.

4. Children enrolled in the WIC Program for 1 year experience considerable improvement in their hemoglobin and hematocrit values.

5. Children entering the WIC Program with low weight-for-length or stature show marked increases in this parameter during the first 6 months of their participation. It appears that much of this improvement is due to correction of gross measurement errors made at the time of the initial examination.

6. A very slight degree of improvement in linear growth is achieved overall by children enrolled in the WIC Program for 1 year. Children at the lowest end of the length or stature-for-age spectrum achieve considerable improvement, some of which may be caused by technical measurement variability and errors at time of initial examination.

7. Children remaining in the WIC Program for 1 year maintain a prevalence of inappropriately high weight for their length or stature. Despite this, children entering the program who are overweight do experience some loss in weight, although some of this improvement may also be the result of measurement variability and errors.

8. The proportion of low birthweight infants born to WIC mothers is similar to that in the general population, which probably represents a considerable improvement over the proportion of low birthweight babies which would have been born to these mothers had they not had the advantages of the WIC Program.

9. Many children entering the WIC Program are both stunted in growth and concomitantly overweight. Provision of food alone, without nutritional supervision and nutrition education, cannot adequately address all of the nutritional problems of these children.

WATERBURY, CONN., June 1, 1978.

Senator GEORGE STANLEY MCGOVERN,
Senate Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR: I take the liberty to send you a copy of the attached study which has some very amazing results with important implications for the improvement of Public Health.

As you know infant mortality is a measuring staff for determining whether health delivery is good in a group or nation or whether it is not. There is a possibility that adequate food as given by the WIC program is the key to raise up our national infant mortality to the top.

May I put your attention, especially to the infant mortality chart on page 5 Section II which indicates that 1975, 1976 and 1977 combined WIC participants have only an infant mortality of 8.4 and non-participants 22.7. During 1977 nearly 50% of the pregnant women were participants in the WIC program for whom the infant mortality was only 4.6, and for non-participants 19.1.

It seems that further studies are indicated on a State wide basis, especially to pin point from what non-participant infants died. Unfortunately, our sample is not statistically large enough for such a study as explained in the text.

May we thank you again for all the assistance that you have given to our WIC Program.

Sincerely yours,
GERT WALLACH, M.D., M.P.H.,
Director of Health.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, will the Senator yield to me for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. MCGOVERN. Yes.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Carol Donnelly of my staff have floor privileges during the consideration of the bill and any votes thereon.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. GLENN). Is there objection? The Chair hears none, and it is so ordered.

Mr. MCGOVERN. Mr. President, perhaps before I resume my remarks, I ask unanimous consent that the following staff members of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry be granted the privilege of the floor during consideration of S. 3085, including all rollcall votes thereon: Herny Casso, Carl Rose, Marshall Matz, Steve Starch, Bill Lesher, and Lenora Moragne.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. MCGOVERN. The potential cost effectiveness of the WIC program as an adjunct to good health care cannot be overemphasized. Money spent on the WIC target population can only result in reduced Federal expenditures for these individuals in the future.

The preventive aspects of the WIC program are among its strongest virtues. The provisions of supplemental foods can make the difference between a productive life for these women and children and unborn fetuses or a life doomed to institutionalization, due to mental or physical deterioration, or an early death. In no group are these preventive aspects more critical than the small group of children suffering from phenylketonuria (PKU), an inborn error of metabolism treated solely by dietary management. The WIC program has always provided the special diets necessary for these children up to 1 year of age. Amendments have been made in the Department of Agriculture's regulations to provide these special diets for these children throughout their eligibility for the WIC program. Medical advances during the last 10 years have greatly contributed to the identification and successful early dietary treatment of these children with an estimated 1:14,000 live births suffering with this disease. Despite these advances, the ability of families to pay for the required diets has become difficult due to rising costs. Cost to a family with a PKU child is $700 per year for special formula alone. This important modification of the WIC program at a relatively low cost ($1 million per year versus $250,000 per year for each institutionalized child) can help assure that more children become productive, wage-earning, citizens rather than burdens upon family and society.

Perhaps the most controversial provision of the bill, Mr. President, will be the funding structure for the WIC program.

The bill provides that any State-approved local eligible agency that applies to conduct or expand the WIC program shall be provided with the necessary funds, up to the specified amounts authorized—$600 million in fiscal year 1979, $800 million, $900 million, and $950 million in the succeeding years.

It is my feeling that this type of capped entitlement is crucial, in the short run at least, to provide for program growth.

Unfortunately, this program, successful as it has been, and a proven success, has had administrative difficulties from the very beginning, stemming from the way the administration has handled it. It has been the subject of impoundments and numerous court battles and to this day the WIC funding structure is still governed by a court order which will finally expire at the end of this fiscal year.

The effect of all this has been to create an atmosphere of uncertainty, and make local administrators and potential administrators extremely reluctant to start or expand individual WIC sites. From year to year these administrators are concerned over whether the program will continue, and if it did continue what level of funding would be available. Entitlement is necessary in the WIC program to reassure potential local administrators that the program does have support in Washington and that they will not be abandoned if they incure startup expenses.

In short, the unique and unfortunate history associated with the WIC program demands that some exception be made from the normal appropriations process to reestablish faith on the part of local administrators and participants in the integrity of the process.

An exception is further justified based on the demonstrated results—substantial reductions in anemia, low birthweight infants, and most importantly, infant mortality. Expansion of the program is crucial in the fight to reduce the high infant mortality rate in the United States. The United States ranks a poor 16th among the nations of the world in infant mortality, with a rate almost double that of Sweden—the country with the lowest infant mortality rate.

It is time the Federal Government told participants, and those waiting to become participants, as well as local administrators, that maximizing the mental and physical development of our children is a high national priority. The funds will not be impounded. Expansion of the program will not be stiffled. The Congress is committed to the program over the life of this bill and favors whatever program growth can be effectively used and administered.

One further comment on the WIC program:

Under the committee's bill, the Secretary would determine which foods should be made available under the WIC program. The Secretary is expected to promulgate regulations setting forth the type and the quantity of such foods that should be made available to recipients of WIC benefits. In doing so, the Secretary would attempt to use the best available information concerning the foods that are most conducive to mothers' and children's good health, and that serve as good examples for proper nutrition education. Pursuant to the foods made available in the Secretary's regulations, competent professional authorities would prescribe foods for the persons they are serving. Such prescriptions would be prepared with the view in mind of providing individual WIC participants with the appropriate types of foods that they need—considering their medical and nutritional conditions and cultural eating patterns, as well as the appropriate amount of fat, sugar, and salt that they should consume.

I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a summary of the other major provisions of S. 3085.

There being no objection, the summary was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

SUMMARY OF MAJOR PROVISIONS

(1) CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM (SECTION 2)

(a) Eligible institutions

Institutions eligible for participation in the child care food program must have Federal, State, and local licensing or be complying with appropriate renewal procedures. Where Federal, State, or local licensing or approval is not available, the institution must receive referrals or funds from Federal, State, or local governmental agencies or demonstrate that it meets approval standards established by the Secretary of Agriculture after consultation with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare. (Under existing law, unlicensed institutions must satisfy the Secretary that its standards are not less comprehensive than the Federal interagency day care requirements.)

The institution must also accept final administrative and financial responsibility for its food service. If the institution has been found to be seriously deficient in operating any of the programs under the National School Lunch Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, it cannot be approved until necessary corrections have been made, and the institution must provide adequate supervisory and operational personnel for the monitoring and management of the food service.

(b) Funding

The bill makes the child care program permanent and authorizes the appropriation of such funds as may be necessary to carry out the program.

(i) All participating institutions, except family and group day care homes.—The bill simplifies the child care food program by prescribing one payment rate for each category of institution, other than family and group day care home sponsoring organizations. In institutions where at least two-thirds of the children enrolled are eligible for free or reduced-price school meals, the State will receive reimbursement for all meals at the reimbursement rates for free school meals. In institutions where between one-third and two-thirds of the children enrolled are eligible for free or reduced-price school meals, the State will receive reimbursement for all meals at the rates for reduced-price school meals. In institutions where less than one-third of the children enrolled are eligible for free or reduced-price school meals, States will be reimbursed at the rates for paid school meals. (Special rates are applicable to snacks or meal supplements.)

The bill also allows institutions to elect, in lieu of these new reimbursements procedures to continue to be reimbursed according to the income of each child as provided under existing law.

(ii) Family and group day care homes.—A separate reimbursement schedule is established for family and group day care homes. Family and group day care homes would receive a payment for food and labor costs and payments for administrative costs up to limits prescribed by the Secretary, without a requirement for documentation of these costs. This provision is designed to simplify operation of the program in these small homes, where current rules have proved difficult to administer.

The bill enacts the provision in the Department's current regulations that institutions participating in the program as a sponsoring organization for family or group day care homes, rather than the individual homes, must satisfy the requirements regarding tax-exempt status.

(e) Administrative expenses and start-up funds

Institutions that sponsor family or group day care homes will receive reimbursement for administrative expenses. Such reimbursements would include start-up payments for administrative expenses payable in accordance with procedures prescribed by the Secretary. A family or group day care home may function as its own sponsoring organization.

(f) Studies

The bill requires the Secretary to study—

(i) the administrative costs for institutions participating in the program and allows the Secretary to use the results of the study in prescribing maximum allowable levels for administrative payments;

(ii) food service operations under the program, including an evaluation of meal quality as related to costs, whether maximum reimbursement levels should be set for food service costs; and

(iii) the nature of licensing problems faced by institutions and family and group day care homes.

Up to $2 million of the fiscal year 1979 child care food program appropriations will be available to conduct these studies. The results of these studies would be reported to Congress within 18 months of the effective date of the bill.

(g) Food service equipment assistance

The bill increases from $3 million to $6 million the amount of funds available to the Secretary for food service equipment assistance for child care institutions participating in the program.

(h) Direct disbursement of food service equipment suppliers

The bill requires the Secretary to issue regulations authorizing the State to disburse funds directly to a supplier of food service equipment, prior to approval of the institution for participation, for equipment for that institution if the institution (i) meets all the requirements for program participation except for licensing and (ii) satisfies all requirements for licensing except for food service equipment.

(2) SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM (WIC) (SECTION 3)

(a) Extension of the WIC program

Section 3 of the bill extends the WIC program for four years.

(b) Eligibility

The bill enacts the current definitions in the Department's regulations for postpartum, pregnant, and breastfeeding women, and retains the current age limit for children eligible for the program at age five.

Program participation would be limited to pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, infants, and children who are at nutritional risk and whose incomes are below the standard for reduced-price lunches under the National School Lunch Act, 195 percent of the poverty level. There is currently no income cap on participation in the program.

Persons would not be eligible for program participation solely on the basis of their income.

(c) Definition of "nutritional risk"

The bill retains the concept of nutritional risk based on specific medical or nutritional conditions, but deletes specific examples of such conditions from the definition.

The definition is also amended to include conditions that predispose persons to inadequate nutritional patterns or nutritionally related medical conditions, including, but not limited to, alcoholism and drug addiction.

(d) Concurrent operation with the commodity supplemental food program

The bill allows the simultaneous operation of the commodity supplemental food program and the WIC program in the same area. The Secretary is required to issue regulations that would prevent dual receipt of benefits under these two programs. Existing law allows these programs to operate "side-by-side," which has been interpreted by USDA to preclude simultaneous operation in the same area.

The bill expands the existing authority for nutrition education in the WIC program by requiring that—

(i) the Secretary prescribe standards to ensure that adequate nutrition education services are provided and requiring that nutrition education training be provided to persons employed to provide such education;

(ii) nutrition education be provided to all pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding program participants and parents or caretakers of infant and child program participants. States may provide nutrition education to pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women and to parents or caretakers of infants or children who are enrolled at local agencies operating the program but who do not participate in the program;

(iii) the State agency evaluate annually the nutrition education component, including securing the views of participants, and provide nutrition education materials in languages other than English in areas with substantial non-English speaking low-income populations;

(iv) the Secretary, after submitting proposed nutrition education materials to the Secretary of HEW for comment, issue such materials for use in the program; and

(v) one-fifth of the funds provided for State and local agency administrative costs, except those funds used for evaluation and pilot projects, be used for nutrition education.

The bill requires—

(i) the Secretary to establish procedures to facilitate program participation of migrants as they move from State to State. The State agency is required to use bilingual program materials, where appropriate, in administering the program in areas with substantial numbers of non-English speaking low-income populations; and

(ii) the Secretary to prepare, by October 1 of each year, a report describing plans to ensure, to the maximum extent feasible, continuous WIC program benefits to migrants. The report is to be made available to the National Advisory Council on Maternal, Infant, and Fetal Nutrition.

(g) Submission on monthly financial and participation reports

The bill requires State agencies to submit to the Secretary monthly financial and participation reports.

(h) Continuing certification for participants who move

The bill allows a person's certification of eligibility to remain valid for the period for which the individual was certified as eligible, when that person moves from one program area to another. A person would not need to have a new certification of eligibility in the new area, but the availability of a WIC program opening in the new area would not be guaranteed.

(i) Food package composition

The bill requires the Secretary to prescribe the foods available in the program. Competent professional authorities have the responsibility for prescribing food, from the foods designated by the Secretary, for individual participants in the program. To the degree possible, the competent professional authority should assure that the fat, sugar, and salt content of the prescribed food is appropriate.

Commercially available products designed for pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, infants, or children will be available to participants, at the discretion of the Secretary.

(j) Authorization levels for appropriations for WIC

The bill authorizes the appropriation of $600 million for fiscal year 1979, $800 million for fiscal year 1980, $900 million for fiscal year 1981, and $950 million for fiscal year 1982.

Of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year for the program, one-half of 1 percent, not to exceed $3 million, shall be available to the Secretary for the purpose of evaluating program performance, health benefits, and the administration of pilot projects. This includes projects designed to meet the special needs of migrants, Indians, and rural populations.

(k) Program level

The bill provides, subject to the authorization levels for appropriations, that any State-approved eligible local agency that applies to operate or expand the program shall immediately be provided with the necessary funds to conduct the program.

The bill authorizes the Secretary to make 20 percent of the funds provided each fiscal year (exclusive of the funds provided for evaluation and pilot projects) available for State and local agency administrative costs. Current law authorizes not to exceed 20 percent of such funds for local agency administrative costs. The bill also allows the Secretary to exceed the 20 percent maximum level on administrative funds as a result of reallocation when necessary for proper, efficient program and effective program administration.

The bill changes the administrative costs reimbursement formula so that each State's administrative funds are not tied to the cost of the food it prescribes. Each State would, instead, receive an administrative budget at the start of the year, so that States would know how much administrative money they have for the year.

(m) National Advisory Council on Maternal, Infant, and Fetal Nutrition

The bill expands the membership of the National Advisory Council on Maternal, Infant, and Fetal Nutrition from 19 to 20 persons.

(n) Commodities

The bill authorizes the Secretary to donate for distribution under the WIC program foods (i) available under section 416 of the Agricultural Act of 1949 including, but not limited to, dry milk, or (ii) purchased under section 32 of the Act of August 24, 1935, or (iii) purchased with appropriated funds.

(3) REDUCED-PRICE LUNCHES (SECTION 4)

The bill reduces the Federal reimbursement rate to States for reduced-price lunches by 10 cents. Currently, the Federal reimbursement rate for reduced-price lunches is set 10 cents below the rate for free lunches. The bill provides, with one exception, that the Federal reimbursement rate for these lunches be set 20 cents below the free lunch rate. However, in States where all schools charge less than 20 cents for a reduced-price lunch, the reimbursement rate for these lunches would be set at a level where the average reimbursement per lunch, plus a charge paid by the student, would equal the free lunch reimbursement.

(4) CHANGES IN COMMODITY INDEXES (SECTION 5)

(a) The bill changes the basis on which the reimbursement rate for milk in the special milk program is adjusted from the "food away from home" series of the Consumer Price Index to the wholesale price of milk.

(b) The annual adjustment in the commodity donation rate for the school lunch program would be based on changes in the Department of Agriculture's Wholesale Price Index for food used in schools and institutions, rather than changes in the "food away from home" series of the Consumer Price Index.

(5) SCHOOL BREAKFAST EXPANSION (SECTION 6)

(a) Cost accounting practices

The bill eliminates the requirement in existing law for schools serving both lunches and breakfasts to allocate all costs between the two programs and account for each program separately. This change will reduce bookkeeping and paperwork burdens significantly.

(b) Equipment assistance

The bill makes equipment assistance more accessible to schools that will use equipment to institute a breakfast program by—

(i) making such schools eligible for "reserved" equipment funds;

(ii) increasing the portion of equipment funds that are "reserved" from 33⅓ percent to 50 percent; and

(iii) increasing the authorization for equipment funds from $40 million to $75 million.

(v) Additional assistance

Assistance of up to 10 cents more per free breakfast will be made available to schools if they meet the State's definition of "especially needy" schools. The State definition must include any schools that are required to serve breakfast under State law, or that meet the Federal definition of especially needy. The bill establishes (for the 1979–1980 school year) the Federal category of especially needy schools as schools in which not less than 50 percent of the lunches served under the school lunch program were served free or at a reduced price during the 1977–1978 school year. This percentage is reduced to 45 percent for the 1980–1981 school year, and to 40 percent for all succeeding school years for lunches served during the second preceding year.

(6) STATE ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES (SECTION 7)

The bill—

(a) increases funding for State administrative expenses (SAE) in operating the child nutrition programs. Presently, the total funding for SAE nationwide is set at no less than 1 percent nor more than 1½ percent of the funds spent the second previous fiscal year on school food programs, and the special milk, child care and equipment programs. The minimum funding level is increased by the bill to 1½ percent;

(b) prescribes methods for allocating funds to States and raises the minimum State allocation from $75,000 to $100,000; and

(c) provides for an increase of approximately $750,000 in State administrative expense funds for operating the summer food program. (New administrative requirements imposed by P.L. 95–166 are increasing State administrative burdens. A new GAO report concludes that more State administrative expense funds are needed to manage the summer program properly.)

(7) INCOME POVERTY GUIDELINES (SECTION 8)

The bill—

(a) provides for the use of one uniform set of poverty guidelines for all USDA food programs; and

(b) sets a uniform national income limit for free school meals at 125 percent of the poverty guidelines. Currently, the standards may be set at 100 percent to 125 percent of the poverty guidelines.

(8) STUDY ON MENU CHOICES (SECTION 9)

The bill requires the Secretary to conduct a study on the cost and feasibility of requiring schools to offer a choice of menu items within the required meal patterns.

(9) OUTLYING AREAS (SECTION 10)

The bill provides for adjustments in the reimbursement rates under the school breakfast and school lunch programs for Alaska, Guam, and American Samoa to take into account documented higher costs in food service.

(10) CRIMINAL PENALTIES (SECTION 10)

The bill provides criminal penalties for fraud or embezzlement in connection with the child nutrition programs.

Mr. McGOVERN. I urge my colleagues in joining me in supporting S. 3085, as reported by the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry. I am very hopeful that all Senators will join us in supporting the bill as reported.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from Kansas.

Mr. DOLE. First of all, Mr. President, I certainly wish to thank our distinguished colleague the chairman (Mr. McGOVERN), for his work not only on this particular piece of legislation, but over the years. I would guess that whoever eventually sits down to write an objective assessment of who has had the greatest impact on nutrition in America will find it to be the distinguished Senator from South Dakota, because his efforts started years ago as chairman of the Nutrition Committee. His work relates not just to this particular subject matter, but to other outstanding programs, including changes made in the food stamp legislation. There is no question of where the credit belongs, or where it will go.

Mr. President, over the past several months the Nutrition Subcommittee and full committee have given full attention to the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978—covering miscellaneous school meal provisions, the WIC program and the child care food program. Last March 23, I introduced the bill to extend and strengthen the child care food program in S. 3085, based on its demonstrated sucess in providing nourishing meals to children in day care settings.

Under the leadership of our distinguished chairman the Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN)—and I might add, as the Senator from South Dakota has pointed out, the leadership of the Senator from Georgia (Mr. TALMADGE) and the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON). The subcommittee has benefited greatly from public testimony and other discussions during several days of hearings—here in Washington, in Vermont, and in Oklahoma.

The bill represents the consensus of the subcommittee's views regarding the needed changes called for at this time. We are proud to say that S. 3085 has the full support of the school food service community and other individuals and groups who are associated with these Federal meal programs on a daily basis.

Mr. President, there are particular aspects of the total package, aside from child care which I feel deserve special mention at this time.

In the WIC section, the subcommittee worked hard to establish a solid education base to support the food package delivered, including setting nutrition education standards, training persons hired to each the clients, and evaluating the nutrition education component. In fact, the department secretary is required to see that nutrition instruction is given all WIC parents or caretakers.

A 20-member national advisory council on maternal, infant, and fetal nutrition is established to make a continuing study of how best to improve, strengthen and enhance WIC benefits. I would like to see competent professionals appointed to this body, and the fullest possible use made of the expertise and recommendations they bring to the council and the department.

In the school meals section, the "food choice" study deserves special attention. Here we have an assessment of the cost and feasibility of schools offering a choice of menu item within the basic pattern. My nutrition contacts tell me this may be an even better approach to lunchroom participation and plate waste than some of the other measures we have tried.

As for school breakfast expansion: Few argue the need and benefit. Most argue the cost. I have always felt that there are aspects of our federally supported food programs which should be left up to the State and school districts.

I am encouraged by the three incentives outlined in the bill which encourage breakfast outreach: Combined lunch and breakfast recordkeeping, equipment assistance funding, and special help to those severely in need.

Finally, I feel the uniform set of poverty guidelines for all USDA nutrition programs coupled with the new indexes for reimbursement rates are significant advances which deserve our special attention and support at this time.

Mr. President, I would like now to turn to the child care portions of S. 3085 which reflect major accomplishments in legislation, and summarize a few highlights just briefly.

SIMPLIFIES PAPERWORK

The bill seeks to take some of the burden out of paperwork and calls for one payment rate for institutions other than family and group day care. Yet, it gives these same institutions the option of receiving reimbursement based on income of each child as in current law.

The regulatory impact evaluation report on S. 3085 endorses the fact that the bill contains procedures which reduce accounting, recordkeeping, and other administrative requirements. I am told that the flat reimbursement rate here, free of detail calculations required in current law, also the separate payment for administrative costs should reduce regulations immensely, and few would dispute the need to reduce the tons of regulations processed annually.

Eligible institutions must have State and local licensing or be complying with licensing renewal procedures. However, where this is not available other options are offered. In spite of loosening up the rules for eligibility, let me hasten to make clear that all participating institutions are still expected to meet appropriate local health and safety standards. The flexibility is here to allow great program access to family and group day care homes who traditionally have been denied program benefit due to obstacles in the licensing procedures.

Additional eligibility safeguards which every recipient organization must abide by are, first, accept final administration and financial responsibility for management of an effective food service; second, provide adequate supervisory and operational personnel to manage the site; and, third, avoid being seriously deficient in operating any child nutrition program.

Startup funds for administrative expenses are available, in accordance with guidelines established by the Secretary, and institutions that sponsor day care homes will receive reimbursement for administrative expenses, including startup funds.

Finally, other forward-looking aspects of the bill call for studies to be conducted by the Secretary: First, studies on administrative costs for centers and homes, which would help the Secretary to establish levels for administrative payments; second, evaluations of food service operations, including meal quality as it relates to costs; and, third, assessing the nature of licensing problems. By far the section of my child care bill that stimulates the most discussion was that of eligibility. A solution to the bureaucratic licensing process that hinders many day care homes and centers programs from participating must be found.

RETAINS MEAL INTEGRITY

The nutrition goals of meals served are established through the normal research channels of the Department of Agriculture, and reimbursement rates are based on these USDA requirements. Since many young children spend 10 to 12 hours daily in day care settings the nutrition contribution of the foods served is paramount.

The fact that States have the option of receiving cash in lieu of commodities, for some or all of the commodities it is entitled to under the child care food program, will hopefully have an impact on meal quality and nutrition contribution. Under current law a State must take all cash or commodities.

I am pleased with the language providing training, technical assistance, and program monitoring. Frankly, I would like to see such assistance stress the matter of proper food habits development at an early age; because I have come to the conclusion that many of our problems associated with child nutrition programs might better be addressed if more could be done to assure more responsible food selection practices by the individual. Many children served in child care are from families where it is necessary for mothers to work and therefore are unable to care for the children during the day. This brings me to my last point, and that is the reassurance this program gives working parents.

REASSURES WORKING PARENTS

I will repeat here what I said on the floor when I introduced the child care bill: The relief it provides working parents is immeasurable. Knowing that a child is enrolled in a care facility and receiving well-prepared, well-served, and well-balanced meals must be an enormous relief for any employed mother and father.

Of late, the care of children while their parents are working has been a subject of increasing concern to many; one reason being the growth in the number of children whose mothers are in the labor force. Recent statistics of the Department of Labor show that 48 percent of the children under 18 years of age had mothers in the labor force in March 1977, up from 39 percent in 1970. Among preschool-age children, the proportion whose mothers worked or looked for work rose from 29 percent to 38 percent between 1970 and 1977.

Mr. President, before concluding these remarks—a bit of history.

The CCFP began in 1968 as part of a 3-year pilot program known as the special food service program for children. Designed originally to serve especially needy children, the pilot program provided assistance to nonresidential child care centers serving children from low-income areas or from areas with significant numbers of working mothers.

In October 1975, Public Law 94–105 expanded the program by extending eligibility to all nonprofit day care programs —those serving nonneedy as well as needy areas. It also opened participation to family and group day care homes, allowing them to join under the sponsorship of a qualified institution or organization.

During the first year of the program $2.8 million in Federal funds were spent and 39.8 thousand children were served. In fiscal year 1978 the program cost $137 million in Federal expenditures and served 676,000 children.

S. 3085 makes the program permanent and authorizes the necessary appropriations for continuing this important food and nutrition service to the Nation's child care institutions. Today the Congress demands a greater commitment of limited Federal dollars and I believe the need and benefit of Federal nutrition programs like S. 3085 become even more evident in the years to come. I hope it will have the support of my colleagues.

Finally, Mr. President, I would ask unanimous consent that Ed Twilly, of Senator THURMOND's staff, be granted the privileges of the floor during the debate and votes on the pending bill.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Florida such time as he may require.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Rick Brandon and Bob Fulton, of the Budget Committee staff, be granted the privileges of the floor.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the statement of Senator HENRY BELLMON on this bill be printed in the RECORD.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

STATEMENT BY SENATOR BELLMON

The bill now before the Senate has been considered by all three of the committees on which I serve. The Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry, has jurisdiction over Child Nutrition legislation and has reported this bill to the Senate. The Committee presented its recommendation after consideration of the progress made in current child nutrition programs, problems which have been encountered in those programs, and after receiving the recommendations of the Carter Administration.

As a result of a problem related to the Budget Act, the bill was referred to the Appropriations Committee for a recommendation. The Appropriations Committee has now reported the bill back to the Senate with an amendment which I support. That amendment would reduce the ceiling for the WIC Child Nutrition Program in FY 1979. The Appropriations Committee's amendment would also convert the WIC Program in FY 1981 and 1982 from an entitlement program to a simple authorization for appropriations.

The Budget Committee, on which I also serve, has had considerable involvement with this legislation, beginning with the recommendations in the First Budget Resolution for this year, continuing with review of the Budget Act implications of the bill, and concluding just this week with endorsement of a waiver request related to the future entitlement increases under the bill.

I endorse the recommendations of the Agriculture and Appropriations Committees, and I supported the waiver recommendation of the Budget Committee.

Nothing is more important than assuring adequate nutrition for children in low income families. The programs that are authorized under this bill, together with the on-going school lunch and school breakfast programs, are critically important to the improvement of the health of America's young people. I think we have made considerable progress in recent years in promoting better nutrition and I am very hopeful that the changes that this legislation will bring will enhance and continue that progress.

I do have some concerns about this bill: First, it provides a very rapid increase in the rate of growth of the programs to which it relates. The WIC program, for example, will double over its current level during the next four years under this legislation. Likewise, the Child Care Food program, which provides food for non-residential child care centers, will continue the rapid growth pattern which has characterized that program in recent years. I would have personally preferred a somewhat slower rate of growth in these programs. I pledge to the Senate my personal attention to the management and delivery effectiveness of these programs in the coming months and years to help assure that the money will continue to be well used.

A second concern relates to the size and the entitlement features of the WIC program. I support the compromise recommended by the Appropriations Committee which will continue the entitlement provisions in FY 1979 and FY 1980, and then switch to an authorization for appropriations in FY 1981 and FY 1982. While I would have liked a smaller entitlement level in FY 1980 than the $800 million the bill provides, I am a realist, and, on balance, I believe that the compromise struck among the three Committees on this is an acceptable one.

Thirdly, the possibilities for cost savings in the Child Nutrition programs which were identified by the Administration have not, in my view, received adequate attention in the development of this legislation. There are opportunities for achieving economies in child nutrition programs. One of them, relating to the Special Milk program, is under active consideration in the Appropriations Committee at the present time. Another possibility, to which I expect to give particular attention during the coming months, relates to the reimbursement formula for school lunches and school breakfasts for non-needy children.

In conclusion, I find this an acceptable bill which offers promise of continued progress in improving child nutrition in this country. I will be working in the committees on which I serve for more effective Congressional oversight of the implementation of this legislation, and will seek to identify and present to the Senate opportunities for achieving economies which can help hold down the rising cost of the programs.

Mr. CHILES. Mr. President, the chairman of the Appropriations Subcommittee, Rural Development and Related Agencies, Senator EAGLETON, asked me to handle this matter on behalf of the committee, since he had to be out of town today.

The bill was referred to the Appropriations Committee pursuant to section 401 (b) of the Budget Act, because it creates new entitlement authority and, as reported, exceeds the Agriculture Committee's allocation of the first concurrent budget resolution for 1979. The principal reason is the creation of new entitlement authority for the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children (WIC) mandating the spending of up to $600 million, $800 million, $900 million and $950 million in the 4 years beginning with fiscal year 1979.

In considering this bill, the Appropriations Committee examined both the spending levels and the new entitlement authority it creates. As a result of the combination of both, the Budget Committee advised the Appropriations Committee that this would cause the Agriculture Committee to exceed its allocation of the first concurrent budget resolution by $196 million.

In general, the committee noted that the creation of new entitlement programs mandates spending without full, annual congressional review through the appropriations process. This places the committee in a situation where funding becomes mandatory, regardless of the merits or particular financial needs of a program. In a time of scarce availability of funds, mandatory programs effectively squeeze out their high priority programs. The committee took note of a recent report from the General Accounting Office which pointed out the loss of congressional control that accompanies the creation of new entitlements, and recommended their adoption only after thorough study and analysis has determined that they would be in the public interest. Upon consideration of the unusual history of the women, infants and children feeding program, which includes a continuous series of impoundments, lawsuits, and court orders to spend funds that remain in effect through September, 1978, the committee decided that a special case for entitlement could be made, but only for a limited time. This will insure both administrators and recipients that the program will continue to be viable.

Accordingly, the committee is recommending an amendment that would eliminate the entitlement during 1981 and 1982, but leave it in effect during the first 2 years covered by the bill. In addition, the committee is recommending an amendment that would reduce the 1979 entitlement to $550 million to bring it in line with the President's budget and the congressional budget resolution. It is recognized that by itself this amendment will not entirely eliminate the amount by which this bill exceeds the Agriculture Committee's allocation of the first concurrent resolution. However, the committee believes that the targets in the first concurrent resolution can be achieved through adjustment in other programs within its jurisdiction. It should also be noted that the amended authorization levels will not cause the committee's program increases to exceed the assumptions of the first budget resolution. Rather, the excess reflects an inability to immediately achieve all the savings assumed in the budget resolution. The Agriculture Committee has made some program reductions in its authorization, and I expect the agriculture appropriations bill to achieve further savings. However, food prices have increased more rapidly than the Budget Committee anticipated, and other factors have limited the ability of Congress to achieve all these savings immediately. We therefore believe that reducing the authorization level to $550 million is a prudent measure that will not violate the intent of the budget resolution.

Mr. President, I strongly support child nutrition programs, which have a tremendous payoff and top priority for promoting the health of our population. Early childhood and pregnancy are the times in the life-cycle that proper nutrition is most critical for proper physical and mental development. However, we do have to keep careful watch to insure that we are spending our money most effectively. It should be noted that the WIC program, to which this amendment is addressed, is only one of several child nutrition programs authorized in this bill. In total, those programs cost well over $3 billion a year. It is therefore important for us to maintain an annual review of how each of those programs is performing and how they are relating to each other. The Appropriations Committee amendment will do just that, by ending the entitlement status for WIC in 1981.

We are providing for major growth in the program, because from all reports it is the best designed of our nutrition programs, working closely with local maternal and child health programs to reach the highest risk groups. As the program expands from $247 million this year, to $550 million in 1979, to as much as $950 million in 1982, we will want to keep careful watch on its progress. All too often, programs work well when they are small because of the dedication of a few people, but suffer growing pains when we try to expand them rapidly. I hope that the special supplemental food program (WIC) can retain its special character and quality, and that is why we will want to keep our ability to closely monitor its growth.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the committee amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I require.

I appreciate the comments of the Senator from Florida.

As he knows, it is my feeling that the WIC program should be an entitlement program during the 4-year period covered by this legislation. The Agriculture Committee reported the bill unanimously with this provision in the bill.

As I mentioned earlier in my statement I believe that there are ample reasons to make an exception from the appropriation process for the WIC program.

Nonetheless I am respectful of the opinion of the appropriations committee and I know that the staffs have been working hard to arrive at a compromise which will be acceptable to all concerned. The amendment he offers will bring the WIC program to a level of $800 million. As the chairman of this committee, Senator TALMADGE is fond of saying: "Politics is the art of the possible."

I shall, therefore, accept the amendment offered. For the record, however, I believe a point of order would lie, if I chose to make it. It is my understanding that under the Budget Act, when a bill is referred to the Appropriations Committee pursuant to section 401, the committee cannot make substantive changes in the legislation.

The Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry does not view the amendment of the Appropriations Committee as being in accord with the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 insofar as it relates to fiscal years 1981 and 1982.

S. 3085 was properly referred to the Appropriations Committee under section 401(b)(2) of the Congressional Budget Act. Section 401(b)(2) requires that any bill providing new entitlement authority—new spending authority mandated by law—be referred to the Appropriations Committee if the amount of new budget authority which would be required by such bill exceeds the allocation of new budget authority for the fiscal year in the most currently agreed to concurrent resolution.

Although the referral to the Appropriations Committee was proper, the amendment to S. 3085 offered by that committee is not. Section 401 of the Congressional Budget Act limits the scope of consideration by the Appropriations Committee to fiscal year 1979, in that it is the only fiscal year affected by S. 3085 for which a concurrent resolution has been agreed to and for which the cost of the bill would exceed the concurrent resolution. However, the Appropriations Committee amendment, in addition to lowering the level of entitlement for the special supplemental food program (WIC) for fiscal year 1979, eliminates the entitlement status of the program for fiscal years 1981 and 1982. Such action, in our opinion, is not permissible under section 401(B)(3) even for fiscal year 1979. Section 401(B)(3) authorizes the Appropriations Committee, in reference to S. 3085, to report an amendment which limits the total amount of new spending authority provided in such bill for fiscal year 1979.

I am in total agreement with Senator EAGLETON's statement before the Senate Appropriations Subcommittee on Agriculture, Rural Development, and Related Agencies on March 16, 1978, that the purpose of a section 401 referral is not for the Appropriations Committee to "tinker" with the bill referred.

However, rather than simply dealing with numbers, their amendment makes substantive changes in the bill and thereby restructures 2 years of a 4-year WIC program.

The question may appear moot in this instance, since even if a point of order is raised and sustained, any Senator could simply offer the amendment. Moreover, in this instance, I am prepared to accept the Appropriations Committee amendment on the behalf of the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry. My acceptance is based on the uniqueness of the WIC program. Our desire to insure the continued vitality of that program outweighs our concern with the procedural infirmities in the amendment. However, if it is the wish of the Senate to have the Appropriations Committee's jurisdiction under section 401 of the Budget Act expanded, the proper vehicle to express that concern would be an amendment to the Budget Act. Until that is done, the mandate and restrictions of the Budget Act should be strictly adhered to.

I think the proposal that the Senator has made in his amendment is a reasonable compromise and one that can be accepted by everyone that really believes in this program. As I understand it, the amendment results in a $50 million reduction for the fiscal year 1979 and, as the Senator has said, it is possible that we could not effectively use much more than that, in any event, in fiscal year 1979. The amendment does bring the WIC program to a level of $800 million with entitlement in fiscal year 1980, which I think is a reasonable figure.

I, therefore, will accept the amendment.

It is my best judgment that if we wanted to press the point of order against the substantive changes that have been made in the entitlement language as authorized in the legislation, that point of order would be sustained. I do not choose to make such a point of order, because I think what the Senator has proposed is reasonable; therefore, I shall be happy to accept the amendment. I hope it will be adopted.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, I yield to the Senator from Maine.

Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, S. 3085, the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978, would extend and expand the special supplemental food program for women, infants, and children, known as the WIC program, extend the child care food program, and make minor revisions to other child nutrition programs.

All of these programs are included in the nutrition programs mission of budget function 600, income security. In fiscal year 1979 the bill would cost $0.8 billion in budget authority and $0.7 billion in outlays, which represent increases of $0.4 billion in budget authority and $0.3 billion in outlays above the cost that would be incurred if expiring programs were simply extended without substantive modifications.

The bill as reported was subject to a point of order under section 303 of the Budget Act because it would provide new entitlement authority for years for which there is no budget resolution in place. Specifically, S. 3085 would extend the WIC program, which expires in September of this year, as an entitlement for 4 years, raising the entitlement spending limit to $600 million in fiscal 1979, $800 million in fiscal year 1980, $900 million in fiscal year 1981 and $950 million in fiscal 1982.

Section 303 of the Budget Act is designed to provide Congress with a tool to prevent congressional control over future-year budgets from being curtailed by advance commitments to mandatory spending increases for entitlement programs.

The Appropriations Committee, to which S. 3085 was referred under another section of the Budget Act, has reported an amendment to S. 3085. This amendment addresses the concern over future budget control that is the basis for section 303.

Largely in anticipation of this amendment, on July 20, the Senate passed Senate Resolution 522, waiving the point of order under section 303, so that S. 3085 and the Appropriations Committee amendment could be considered by the Senate.

Section 401 of the Budget Act required that S. 3085 be referred to the Appropriations Committee because it would cause allocations for entitlement programs in the Agriculture Committee's crosswalk report to be exceeded. Under section 401, the Appropriations Committee has jurisdiction to report any bill or resolution referred to it with an amendment limiting the amount of new entitlement spending authority provided in such bill or resolution.

The Appropriations Committee has reported an amendment which would limit the new entitlement spending authority provided in the bill for the WIC program. This amendment would continue the WIC program as an entitlement for only 2 years, to be capped at $550 million in fiscal 1979 and at $800 million in fiscal 1980. In addition, under the Appropriations Committee amendment, the entitlement nature of the program would be eliminated by converting it to an authorization of appropriations of $900 million in fiscal year 1981 and $950 million in fiscal year 1982. Thus, in both these years the Appropriations Committee would have the discretion to fund the WIC program according to its assessment of the program's needs, up to the authorized level.

The amendment is consistent with the President's fiscal year 1979 budget request for the WIC program. The President also recommended that the WIC program be extended as an authorization, rather than as an entitlement.

Mr. President, the Congress should exercise great restraint in the creation of entitlement programs. We should scrutinize carefully whether an entitlement funding mechanism is necessary to achieve the purposes for which a program is designed. Simply because a program is an effective one does not justify locking it in at mandatory spending levels.

I, therefore, support the Appropriations Committee amendment because it would strengthen the Congress control over spending for the WIC program, and I urge Senators to vote for it.

The Appropriations Committee's amendment would bring the cost of S. 3085 more in line with the first budget resolution targets for fiscal year 1979. However, I must caution that adoption of this amendment will not completely eliminate the amount by which this bill would cause the budget resolution targets to be exceeded, despite the fact that the budget resolution allowed for ample and responsible growth in nutrition programs. Not only would the fiscal 1979 budget be exceeded, but the targets for fiscal year 1979–82 would be exceeded as well.

In order for the cost of the bill, as amended, to be consistent with the first budget resolution targets, it will be necessary for the Appropriations Committee to accommodate the amount by which S. 3085 would exceed such targets within its own budget allocation. I have confidence that the committee, under the able and responsible leadership of Senators MAGNUSON and EAGLETON, will be able to achieve this in fiscal year 1979 as well as in future years.

I simply want to indicate that I do support the Chiles amendment and commend him on it.

On the point of order question, I must say at this point, I would not be in a position to comment on it, but I think it is a point worth exploring, because we may have to face similar questions in the future. I shall undertake to do so, I say to my good friend from South Dakota.

Mr. DOLE. Will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, I yield.

Mr. DOLE. I understand that the distinguished Senator from South Dakota has no objection to the amendment, based on the statement made by the chairman. I appreciate the efforts of the distinguished Senator from Florida and the chairman of the Budget Committee (Mr. MUSKIE).

Mr. CHILES. I thank the distinguished Senator from South Dakota and the distinguished Senator from Kansas. I think this is a reasonable compromise and I think the Subcommittee on Appropriations did recognize the value of the program and certainly wanted to emphasize that value.

I think the point raised on the point of order is an arguable point. At some stage, it is going to have to be decided, but I am pleased that the Senator from South Dakota did not raise it at this time.

I move that the amendment be adopted.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. CHILES. Do we now need to adopt the amendments? They are included in the bill reported by our committee.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The committee amendments have been agreed to.

Who yields time?

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1459

(Purpose: Reduces Reserved Equipment Funds from 50% to 40% so as to be more equitable to all states)

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I have an amendment at the desk. I ask that it be considered.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Montana (Mr. MELCHER) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1459:

On page 47, line 2, strike out "50" and insert in lieu thereof "40".

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, S. 3085 increases the portion of food service equipment funds that are reserved from 33⅓ to 50 percent of the appropriated equipment assistance funds. The 50 percent is the figure the committee prefers, but there is a valid reason to reduce it to 40 percent. This provision is linked to another provision in the bill that would make schools that will use equipment assistance funds to institute a breakfast program eligible for the "reserved" equipment assistance funds.

While it was the committee's intent to provide an incentive for program expansion through increasing the percentage of reserved funds, the American School Food Service Association has brought to our attention the fact that this provision will adversely affect many States. Reserved funds are available only to those schools without meal service facilities, whereas unreserved funds are available to all schools that enroll high percentages of economically needy children and demonstrate a need for equipment assistance to expand or maintain a food program. All States receive a proportionate share of the reserved funds and have flexibility in directing those funds to the schools with greatest need. Therefore, an increase in reserved funds will result in a reduction of the unreserved funds received by each State.

The amendment I am offering would increase the reserved equipment funds, but the increase would be to 40, rather than 50 percent. I believe this amendment will retain the incentive for schools to initiate breakfast programs and will remove any of the potential harm resulting from decreasing the unreserved equipment assistance funds.

I ask unanimous consent that there be printed in the RECORD a letter from Mrs. Gene White, president of the American School Food Service Association. This letter clearly demonstrates the past experience of several States that received increased equipment funds as a result of lowering the proportion of reserved funds.

There being no objection, the letter was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

JULY 19, 1978.

Hon. GEORGE MCGOVERN,
Chairman, Subcommittee on Nutrition, U.S. Senate, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: The American School Food Service Association is concerned about the provision of S. 3085, the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978, which changes the formula of reserved funds for Food Service Equipment Assistance from 33⅓ percent of the appropriation to 50 percent (Sec. 6 (b) (6)). We earnestly seek your assistance in securing a change in this provision to restore the unreserved allocation to no less than 60 percent of the appropriation. It is our understanding that S. 3085 provides for the allocation of reserved funds to schools which plan to initiate a breakfast or a lunch program. This provision will facilitate breakfast program expansion.

ASFSA supported the change in the Food Service Equipment Assistance formula when it was under discussion in early May only because it was linked to an authorization of $75 million, and no State under those circumstances would have received a reduced allocation. However, it has become more and more obvious that the appropriation for FY '79 will not be increased beyond the present $28 million, and the majority of the States would receive less unreserved money for Food Service Equipment Assistance with the formula proposed in S. 3085. Many States which have aggressively initiated food programs would receive little if any of the reserved funds. For example, the State of Georgia received only $1641 in reserved funds in 1977, and Alabama received only $177.

As you recall, P.L. 94–105 reduced the reserve formula from 50 percent of the appropriation to 33⅓ percent. When this provision was implemented, the following changes occurred in the amount of money received in the five States identified below. Every State, however, received additional funds. The five listed below are selected to illustrate the impact of the change:

| State | 50 percent fiscal year 1975 allocation (unreserved) | 67⅔ percent fiscal year 1977 allocation (unreserved) |
|---|---|---|
| Georgia | $531,907 | $678,642 |
| Louisiana | 429,787 | 560,706 |
| Massachusetts | 392,410 | 527,345 |
| California | 784,987 | 1,132,161 |
| New York | 851,315 | 1,183,816 |

From this brief look at the impact of the change in the formula on five States, it is obvious that most, if not all, States received additional unreserved funds in 1976. Conversely, the change proposed in S. 3085 would have the opposite effect. It would reduce the amount of unreserved funds to most States, and would provide large sums of funds to a few States.

Senator McGovern, ASFSA is committed to a child nutrition program which serves acceptable meals to all children. To do this, the 20-year-old school with obsolete, inadequate facilities needs equipment just as those schools without any food service equipment.

ASFSA seeks your support in securing the change in Section 6(b)(6) to provide a larger portion of the Food Service Equipment Assistance in unreserved funds.

We appreciate your continuing leadership to secure adequate nutrition programs for all children in America.

Sincerely yours,

GENE WHITE,
President.

Mr. MELCHER. Mr. President, I believe the amendment is acceptable to the distinguished manager of the bill and the chairman of the Nutrition Committee.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, the Senator from Montana is correct. I have looked over the amendment. I have listened to the arguments of the American School Food Service Association, and read the letter from Mrs. Gene White, the president of that association. I think the amendment does improve the bill and I move its adoption.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do all Senators yield back their time?

Mr. MELCHER. I yield back my time.

Mr. McGOVERN. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield now to the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, this bill, S. 3085, before the Senate today is vital to the health and well being of many of our Nation's citizens. The programs this bill extends and amends—the supplemental feeding program for women, infants, children (the WIC program), the child care feeding program, and the school lunch and breakfast programs—provide much needed nutritional assistance to some of our most vulnerable segments of society.

This bill extends the WIC program for 4 years. This program, created by the late Senator Hubert Humphrey, has the greatest and longest term impact on the citizens participating of any Government program. The WIC program provides nutrious foods to pregnant and postpartum mothers and to children until their fifth birthday.

Pregnancy and early childhood is critical to mental and physical development. Maternal and infant malnutrition can inflict devastating disabilities, such as birth defects, mental retardation, physical abnormalities, and sometimes even death. The WIC program has helped alleviate much maternal and infant malnutrition and, therefore, has had literally a lifetime's impact on millions of this Nation's children.

I am particularly pleased with one revision of the WIC program contained in this legislation. This bill expands the nutrition education component of the WIC program. I strongly support this provision because I feel it is absolutely necessary to provide benefits whose effects will long outlive the family's participation in the program. Nutrition education for the mother will not only have an impact upon her, but also the rest of the family.

I believe that good nutrition holds the greatest promise of controlling our $120 billion a year national health bill. Good nutrition is the key to a national preventive health policy which is long overdue. And education is necessary to the adoption of good dietary habits.

The other programs amended in this legislation are also critical in providing nutrition assistance and in teaching good dietary habits. The child care feeding program and the school lunch and breakfast program provide meals to over 25 million children in child care centers and in schools. The nutritional benefits of the program are obvious. The importance of these programs are increasing and more and more families have both parents working.

In addition to the nutrition assistance these programs provide, they provide to the children participating exposure to a variety of nutritious foods and encourages good dietary practices.

One provision of the bill I particularly support amends the school breakfast program to encourage schools through financial incentives to offer this valuable program.

Breakfast is a very important meal for all age groups, but particularly for growing children. Yet, only about 14 percent of our country's nutritionally needy children are able to participate in the school breakfast program because of lack of availability. Breakfast can make a significant positive contribution to the quality of a child's dietary intake.

In addition, several studies have shown a clear relationship between eating breakfast and the ability to learn and perform in school. A hungry child cannot perform to his full potential in the classroom. He has trouble paying attention and concentrating, diminishing his ability to learn no matter how skilled the teacher or advanced the learning aids. It is unfortunate that this meal is the one most likely to be neglected. Surveys of breakfast habits have shown that children in all socioeconomic groups omit breakfast or eat an inadequate meal. Where schools have taken advantage of the opportunity to provide their students breakfast, school personnel are impressed with the improvements in physical well-being, learning abilities, behavior, and attendance. I believe that schools should play a major role, through the breakfast program, in alleviating hunger, improving the overall nutritional status of the children, teaching good food habits, and increasing the capacity of children to learn.

Although the national school breakfast program was first established in 1966, and made permanent in 1972, expansion benefits have been disappointingly slow, and many children whose nutrition and educational development would benefit by participation do not have access to the program. Incentives, encouragement, exhortation, and past legislative requirements have not been effective in bringing about meaningful expansion.

Because of the importance of the breakfast, last spring I introduced a bill which, among other things, would have required the implementation in certain needy schools. However, because of the comprehensive nature of my bill, the committee decided to exclude this provision this year but committed itself to hold hearings on the measure next spring.

The committee did, however, include in this bill a measure of financial incentives for schools to implement the breakfast program. I support this provision as a step in the right direction of expanding the breakfast program. Yet, I hope that in the near future some stronger measure will be adopted to accomplish this goal.

Mr. President, it is for the above reasons that I urge my Senate colleagues to join me in voting for this bill.

I would like to thank Senators McGOVERN and DOLE for their leadership in the Nutrition Committee. Also thanks must go to Marshall Matz for the hard work he has put into this effort. Finally, I appreciate all the assistance of the National Child Nutrition Coalition provided me and my staff.

UP AMENDMENT 1460

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I send to the desk an unprinted amendment and ask for its consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Vermont (Mr. LEAHY) proposes unprinted amendment No. 1460.

Mr. LEAHY. I ask unanimous consent that further reading be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act is amended by adding, at the end thereof, subsection (h) which shall read as follows:

"(h) Any school, that is not offering school breakfasts or that is not committed to offering school breakfasts in the subsequent school year, and that is under the jurisdiction of a school food authority that participated in the school lunch program during the school year ending June 30, 1978 or during any subsequent school year, shall conduct an annual impartial election of the parents of pupils in that school to determine whether they do or do not favor the implementation of the school breakfast program in their school. The elections, whenever feasible, shall be conducted at the same time that local school authorities, pursuant to section 9 (b)(1) of the National School Lunch Act, publicly announce guidelines and offer applications for free and reduced-price meals, and the results of such elections shall be publicly announced. The Secretary shall promulgate regulations for the purpose of ensuring the impartiality and integrity of the election process, and local school officials shall transmit the results of the elections to state educational authorities so that these results are reflected in the annual plans of child nutrition operations pursuant to section 11(e)(1) of the National School Lunch Act. If a majority, and at least 50, of the votes cast in such an election designate a desire for school breakfast program implementation in a school, that school shall initiate the breakfast program by the beginning of the subsequent school year, commencing such breakfast program initiation the school year ending on June 30, 1980."

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, the provision that I am offering seeks to provide local parents with a voice in the operation of the school breakfast program. It does so in a manner that does not create any inconvenience to the school administrators. To underscore this point, I would like to offer the following explanation concerning how the election and implementation system will function.

The election system I propose will function only in the schools that are not currently operating the breakfast program or that are not committed to implementing the program in the upcoming year. The schools that are currently implementing the program, or that have been committed to operate the program in the following year, would not need to conduct these elections inasmuch as they would be expected to offer school breakfast services in the following school year. Thus, it would not be useful to conduct elections in those schools.

For schools that conduct these annual elections, the process would be simple. Whenever feasible, the election would be conducted at the same time that parents are notified about the eligibility guidelines for free and reduced-price lunches, and are provided with applications for such free and reduced-price meals. In addition to these notifications and applications, parents would receive a simple ballot concerning their preference about implementing a school breakfast program. Those who wish program implementation would vote in the affirmative, and those who do not wish program implementation would vote in the negative. After marking their vote on the ballot, parents would send the ballot sheet to school with their children for submission on the following day.

The Secretary would promulgate regulations to insure that the election system is conducted in a fair and impartial manner. Thus, the question on the ballot, concerning parents' preferences for school breakfast implementation, would be stated in an objective and fair manner. The Secretary's regulations, essentially, would insure that the procedures and pertinent materials offered by school officials would tilt neither in favor nor against the election proposition.

If a majority of those casting their ballots in the affirmative or negative designate that they wish to have a breakfast program in their school, and if at least 50 votes are cast favoring breakfast implementation, the school would have to initiate the program at the outset of the following school year. Of course, as in any election, in determining whether a majority of the votes cast favored the proposition, only votes indicating a "yes" or a "no" would be counted. Thus, the number of votes from which a majority could be determined would not include people who refused to vote or abstained from voting.

However, the amendment requires at least 50 ballots to designate a desire for program implementation before such elections result in a requirement for breakfast program implementation at the beginning of the next school year. The purpose of this provision is to insure that any breakfast program that is implemented as a result of the election process, is a viable program. From all the data that the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry has gathered, it appears that a school needs at least 40 to 50 children in the breakfast program to make that program economically viable. Consequently, since at least 50 votes in favor of breakfast program implementation would guarantee that at least 50 children would participate in the program, we would insure the viability of such a newly implemented school breakfast program if at least 50 votes were cast in favor of the election proposition.

The same rationale leads to the conclusion that parents should have one vote for every child in a school. For example, a family with three children in a particular school would be allowed to cast three votes in that school's election. This would permit a matching up of the number of favorable votes with the number of children likely to participate in the breakfast program. Of course, parents with more than one child in a school and who are against breakfast program implementation, would also have as many votes as they have children in a school.

It should be noted that my amendment does not, in any way, change the traditional options of local school districts to opt into the breakfast program. If school officials previously implemented the program, or if they wanted to implement the program in the next school year, they could always do so, and they could do so without subjecting their decisions to a vote in the election system envisaged by my amendment. This is the type of option that local school officials have had ever since the breakfast program was authorized in 1966, and this amendment does not change that option. If, however, they did not commit themselves to program implementation—either because they never had the program, or they currently have the program (implemented voluntarily or as a result of an election) but would like to drop it—they would have to permit parents to vote under the election system established under my amendment so that a determination could be made of the breakfast program's status in the following school year.

I believe it is important to point out that my amendment will promote the efficient and effective implementation of the program. The first school elections under my amendment would be conducted at or around the beginning of calendar year 1979, and the results of those elections would not need to bring about program implementation until the beginning of the 1979–80 school year. Thus, breakfast program implementation brought about by my amendment would not occur until September 1979, almost a year and a quarter from today. Moreover, in succeeding elections—when it would be feasible to conduct the elections through the notification and application procedure for free and reduced-price meals as envisaged under section 9(b)(1) of the National School Lunch Act—school officials would have 1 year, between the elections and the beginning of the following school year, to implement the program if parents so desired such implementation.

In summary, therefore, the school-by-school election system established by my amendment would: Allow parents a more effective voice in determining breakfast program implementation; promote increased breakfast program implementation in an efficient and effective manner; and insure that no significant burdens are placed on program administrators. At a time when people around the country are demanding a greater voice in governmental affairs, this amendment will be responsive to their democratic rights and demands.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. LEAHY. Certainly.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I appreciate the comments of the Senator.

As he knows, the bill which we reported out of subcommittee did contain a breakfast mandate. In the vote in full committee on this issue, I voted in support of the breakfast mandate. Nonetheless the provision failed by a decisive margin, and I am reluctant therefore to simply accept the amendment.

In addition I did receive this morning a letter in opposition to the proposal from the American School Food Service Association. As you know they represent the 70,000 people who are most responsible for the service of school meals. In the face of their opposition and the vote in the committee and in the absence of hearings on the current proposal of the Senator from Vermont, may I suggest to the Senator that he not push his proposal to a vote now, but that we assure the Senator of early hearings next year?

Mr. LEAHY. Mr. President, I appreciate that. I know both Senator McGOVERN and Senator DOLE, as ranking minority member of that committee, have expressed a great deal of concern about the school breakfast program.

I want to mention for the record that Senator HODGES has asked to be a cosponsor of that amendment and that it has received the support of the administration.

I also understand the committee process. I think the Senator from South Dakota raises valid points on this. With his assurances of hearings on this matter in the next Congress, hearings I certainly would join with, I would ask to withdraw my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator has the right to withdraw his amendment.

Mr. McGOVERN. I thank the Senator from Vermont.

Mr. LEAHY. I thank the Senator from South Dakota.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1461

(Purpose: To provide the Secretary of Agriculture with the authority to provide for pilot cost and feasibility programs in connection with school lunch programs)

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I call up my amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from North Carolina (Mr. MORGAN) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1461.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill insert a new section as follows:

"SEC. . Section 20 of the National School Lunch Act is amended by—

"(1) inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence of subsection (c) the following: ', except for the pilot projects conducted under subsection (d) of this section'; and

"(2) adding at the end thereof a new subsection (d) as follows:

"(d)(1) The Secretary may conduct pilot projects in up to 14 school districts (or other appropriate units), of which not more than one may be located in any administrative region of the Food and Nutrition Service of the Department of Agriculture, for the purpose of determining the feasibility, cost and other consequences of providing lunches free to all children, without regard to the income of the children's families, during the school year beginning July 1, 1979.

"(2) The Secretary shall reimbuse school food authorities participating in a pilot project under this subsection for all lunches served to children on the same basis that the Secretary normally provides for lunches served to children meeting the eligibility requirements for free lunches under section 9 of this Act.

"(3) The Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the pilot projects conducted under this subsection no later than six months after the conclusion of such projects.

"(4) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, as are necessary for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1978, for the purpose of conducting an evaluation of such pilot projects conducted under this subsection and for the purpose of making additional payments for lunches served to children (beyond what the school food authorities would otherwise be expected to receive under sections 4 and 11 of this Act) to school food authorities participating in pilot projects.".

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, today I am offering an amendment which will provide the Secretary of Agriculture direction in conducting a series of pilot projects to determine the cost and feasibility of a free school lunch program.

I would, as the majority and minority floor managers know, prefer to have a universal free school lunch program for the schoolchildren of this Nation. I personally believe that there are strong philosophical, fiscal, and social reasons for the creation of such a program. However, I concluded that under the current political realities such a program would not be possible this year. So, on April 26 of this year I introduced legislation, S. 2991, that would mandate pilot projects for free school lunches, legislation that was not accepted by the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry in its markup of the bill before the Senate today.

The amendment I offer today varies from my bill, S. 2991. Instead of mandating such a program, it provides the Secretary permissive authority. However, it does mandate standards by which such a series of pilot projects should be conducted. If this amendment is accepted, you can be assured that I will personally encourage the Secretary to exercise such authority. I understand the Secretary does not object to the amendment.

I do not want to belabor this debate with a lengthy statement. I would simply like to explain the philosophical, social, and fiscal reasons why such a program would enhance the nutrition programs of this Nation.

First, let me say that the school lunch program is currently viewed as a separate program from our educational program. The school systems, with Federal support, provide everything from school buildings to baseball bats to textbooks. However, the children are asked to come up with varying amounts of money for lunch, vital nutrition that will make a difference in their ability to take advantage of the education that they are in school to receive.

Second, the current system of free and reduced price meals is demeaning. Parents have to fill out forms which have the effect of turning this important program into another welfare program. Some parents choose not to do so, at the expense of the children. Still other parents cheat, a situation that provides a bad example for children. Currently the General Accounting Office is investigating this abuse of the program.

Third, the current program cost local and State governments untold time and dollars. In fact, these costs are so high that two counties in my home State, Hoke and Edgecombe, have decided to pay the additional costs of providing free lunches. As the distinguished majority and minority floor managers know, the current program costs local officials money and school teachers time. I suspect that there are other counties across this Nation, perhaps some in South Dakota and Kansas, that have made or are close to making a similar decision as the one made by officials in Hoke and Edgecombe Counties of North Carolina.

My amendment is quite simple. If the Secretary chooses to exercise authority provided by this amendment, the Department of Agriculture will be required to conduct pilot projects in up to 14 school districts, or other appropriate units, in representative areas of the country. This authorization would provide the Secretary authority to reimburse school districts funds that such projects would cost in addition to funds that these governmental units would normally receive under the National School Lunch Program Act. Also, it mandates that the Secretary carefully evaluate the cost and feasibility of such a program and report back, within 6 months, to the Congress.

Mr. President, I would like to ask unanimous consent that three items be printed in the RECORD which demonstrate the need for such a program. The three items include my testimony before the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry of last April 10, and editorials from the Winston-Salem Sentinel and Lenoir News-Topic.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

TESTIMONY BEFORE THE SUBCOMMITTEE ON NUTRITION, SENATE COMMITTEE ON AGRICULTURE

Mr. Chairman, it is a privilege for me to appear before this Subcommittee to discuss the merits of a Universal Free School Lunch Program. Such a program, embodied in S. 1251, enjoys wide political support. Introduced by the late Senator Hubert Humphrey, Senators MCGOVERN, CLARK, and THURMOND join me as a cosponsor. Certainly, this bill was very important to Hubert. I remember discussing this legislation with him last year and I recall the great interest that he had and his firm conviction in how this program would impact on the health and vitality of our children.

I must also say that this program enjoys the support of many in my home state of North Carolina. Furthermore, the American School Food Service Association has indicated its unequivocal support.

This Subcommittee knows of the importance of good nutrition. Indeed, you, Mr. Chairman, have offered legislation to strengthen this nation's nutrition programs. I commend you for your leadership.

The importance of proper nutrition for the health and sound development of our children is clearly established. The absence of proper or sufficient food for our children interferes with their physical health, and makes it more difficult for them to stay alert, learn, or otherwise develop their minds. It can place serious restraints on their ability to live a happy life as adults, by increasing their likelihood of having chronic or other health problems, and the possible loss in mental activity may negatively reflect on their chance to go to a college and to get a good job. It would be wrong to place handicaps on young children who are unable to fend for themselves.

A free school lunch would not be another unnecessary government handout. Government requires children to attend school. It pays for their transportation and instruction, buys bats and balls and their textbooks. But at lunch-time, children are expected to hand over varying amounts of money.

The present system already gives free lunches to some students, greatly reduced-price lunches to others, and slightly reduced-price lunches to the remainder. In effect, we have created three classes of students in our schools.

Being singled out for a free or greatly reduced-price lunch is degrading to a child. We were all children once, and most of us have children, and we know what it is like for a child to be singled out for special treatment. And here it is being done for circumstances totally beyond the child's control.

Actually, we are telling our children that some parents have been less effective in providing for their children than others. For this reason, many school children from middle and lower income families, who might otherwise benefit, do not get to take advantage of the present limited program because their parents consider it demeaning.

Meanwhile, some other parents, whose childern are not eligible, seek to submit inaccurate information so they might save a little money and, in the process, transmit their willingness to commit petty fraud to their children. Schools do not have the means, nor should they be expected, to check out the validity and accuracy of the information in the application forms.

The present system, which provides several different subsidies for the same lunch imposes a bureaucratic and administrative nightmare on our schools and teachers. The present system of sending out, processing, and evaluating applications is time-consuming, expensive, and frequently arbitrary. It is arbitrary for the reasons mentioned above: some parents whose children are eligible do not submit applications, and others submit inaccurate ones.

Even the process of distributing the tickets or tokens so that children can get their lunch, is expensive and time consuming. In some schools this is done by administrative employees, which means somebody must be hired to do the work. In other schools, the work is done by teachers, who should be spending their time teaching and planning lessons. Regardless of the method, it reduces class-time for the children, by as much as 30 minutes a day, which does not cost money, but then it does not help them to learn either.

The problems with the present system are so serious that two counties in my state, Edgecombe in the east and Hoke in the west, have gone ahead, without state or federal support, and introduced their own free school lunch programs. This, however, is so novel that there are no rules or regulations to cover the situation, so they are having some trouble dealing with the Department of Agriculture, even though the free program costs no more money than the old one. Now I do not blame the USDA. The Department requires guidance over how to deal with this situation, and the Congress should provide it. Remember, a free lunch program cannot be cost effective unless many of the existing bureaucratic requirements can be abolished or greatly reduced.

Implementing a universal school lunch program would not cost much more than what is being spent now. By the time one considers the lowering of costs due to fewer administrative requirements and the ability to reduce the price of each lunch through economies of scale, and the increase in class time available for useful purposes, the value of each dollar being spent would be greatly stretched. Some increase in cost would result because of higher participation rates, which are only about 62 percent now, and the lower contribution required from many families, but the latter would be money saved as far as he family was concerned. But we must always keep in mind the great benefit that would accrue to so many of our children.

Recognizing, however, that it might be difficult to get such a major new initiative as a universal free lunch program approved and implemented, it might be more appropriate to begin by having pilot projects in several states. With this in mind, I will be introducing legislation in the very near future which will authorize a series of pilot projects in various parts of this great nation.

Mr. Chairman, I really believe that a Universal Free Lunch Program would be a prudent and valuable program for this Congress to enact. However, in full recognition of budgetary and political realities, a middle ground must be sought. So, after considerable thought, I have decided that legislation for pilot projects would be both appropriate and acceptable.

I hope that the members of the Subcommittee on Nutrition will give this bill serious consideration when it mark-up child nutrition legislation in May. I certainly will be available to you, Mr. Chairman, to help in this effort. We must remember that it is the children of this country whose futures we are deciding and I submit we have no more precious resource.

[From the Winston-Salem (N.C.) Sentinel, May 10, 1978]

THE "FREE" LUNCH

How can any measure fail when it attracts support from senators with views as diverse as Strom Thurmond, Robert Dole, Muriel Humphrey and George McGovern? Sen. Robert Morgan has persuaded all these leaders from the Left and Right to co-sponsor his bill to set up a pilot program for blanket free school lunches.

The delay in securing federal support for a nationwide lunch program is hardly Morgan's fault. He has introduced such measures in the past, to no avail. The present proposal would set aside $10 million to establish 30 pilot lunch programs around the country. Morgan hopes the benefits of the concept will be proved, paving the way for still broader application.

Little doubt remains that adequate nutrition is essential to learning. The only debate remaining is over the degree to which the government should get involved in feeding school children.

About 39 percent of U.S. public-school students are already getting free or cut-price lunches. Morgan argues cogently that a blanket program would save enough in administrative costs to feed thousands more youngsters. Still more who now refuse to take meals to which they are entitled would eat if the stigma of "handouts" were erased. As Morgan noted, the schools supply everything else needed for education. Why do people take free books and blackboard erasers for granted, but quibble over the propriety of providing a meal?

Many school systems have already recognized the value of a proper diet. They have begun their own universal free-lunch programs. Low-cost breakfasts are also provided in many places, and have proved beneficial.

As the old saying goes, "There's no free lunch." "Free" school lunches would, of course, be paid for by the taxpayers. But they represent an investment far wiser and more productive than the education money now wasted because youngsters are handicapped by diet and nutritional deficiencies that could be corrected by one decent meal at school a day. We hope the Senate sees Morgan's lunch proposal that way.

LUNCH PROPOSAL MERITS AT LEAST A TRIAL RUN

The old saying about there being no such thing as a free lunch will have to be revised if U.S. Sen. Robert Morgan has his way. North Carolina's junior senator has introduced legislation to provide free lunches for every public school student in the country.

Technically, of course, the meals would not be free. They would be paid for by tax dollars. What Sen. Morgan is actually calling for is to shift the cost from the child to the taxpayers.

Nonetheless, he makes some persuasive points in touting this legislation. Far from constituting "another unnecessary government handout," the free lunch program would give all youngsters the opportunity to receive the proper nourishment they need to learn, Sen. Morgan has stated. There is no arguing with the fact that it is hard to concentrate on assignments on an empty stomach. Innumerable studies have shown that poor diet not only hampers a child's physical development, but his mental growth, too.

Up to a certain age, children are required by law to go to school, he noted. For those who attend public classes, the government "pays for their transportation and instruction, buys bats and balls and their textbooks. But at lunchtime, children are expected to hand over varying amounts of money," he said.

Now there are already programs under which youths from low income families may receive free or reduced price lunches, but Sen. Morgan claimed that this arrangement can prove embarrassing for some of them. When you think about how cruel youngsters can be in their teasing of each other, the senator is undoubtedly correct. If no one had to pay for lunches, then at least this distinction between affluent and poor children could be eliminated.

More important, however, Sen. Morgan contends, are the headaches the schools suffer in trying to administer the current lunch program—with some pupils paying full price, some a reduced price and some nothing.

Although the Tar Heel solon has expressed his desire to see the free lunch concept applied nationwide, this year he is simply asking for 30 pilot projects at a cost of $10 million. He has gained an impressive list of cosponsors that spans the ideological spectrum. Among these other boosters are conservative Republicans Strom Thurmond and Robert Dole and liberal Democrats George McGovern and Muriel Humphrey.

Sen. Morgan asserts that the savings in administrative costs would virtually pay for the experimental ventures. Already, two North Carolina counties, Edgecombe and Hoke, are operating free lunch programs. All told, 46 percent of this state's public school students receive free or cut price lunches (as compared with the 39 percent national average).

No one disputes the importance of a nutritious noon meal for growing youngsters. Particularly for those from low income backgrounds, it may serve as the only balanced part of their diet. It is distressing to think that some of these youngsters may be missing healthful food due to embarrassment about getting it free or at reduced cost when their classmates pay full price. In some situations, however, that is undoubtedly just what is happening.

If, as Sen. Morgan supposes, the costs of overseeing the present school lunch program are so great that they would almost pay for a free lunch for all, then the conversion to such a setup ought to be made. The test projects he is interested in launching would give a reasonable indication of just how feasible a changeover of this kind would be.

For that reason, Sen. Morgan's bill deserves passage so the proposal can be given a trial run. Should it prove unworkable, then only a limited amount of tax dollars will have been lost. On the other hand, if the first 30 projects succeed, then that would indicate that the idea of providing all schoolchildren with the opportunity for a square meal free of charge is one whose time has come.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, Senators HUMPHREY and THURMOND, along with the distinguished floor managers of this bill, cosponsored my bill, S. 2991, a range of cosponsors that reflects wide political support for such an approach in our nutrition programs. I believe that this amendment is in the best interest of the children of this country, our most precious resource, and I urge my colleagues to support this amendment.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield myself such time as I require.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator from South Dakota.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I think the Senator from North Carolina has made a reasonable presentation to the Senate on his proposal. It is one that has no budget impact, yet it does authorize the study that I think can be justified to work out the possibility of the universal school lunch.

Under those circumstances, I would have no objection to the Senator's amendment.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield briefly, I share the views expressed by the chairman. I think it is a good amendment and I support the amendment. I am happy to cosponsor it.

Mr. MORGAN. I thank my distinguished colleague. I am delighted.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I move the adoption of the amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators yield back all time?

Mr. McGOVERN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. MORGAN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from North Carolina.

The amendment (UP No. 1461) was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1462

(Purpose: Concerning the use of alternate foods in the school lunch program)

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an unprinted amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1462.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 53, between lines 14 and 15, insert the following:

(d) Section 19 of the Child Nutrition Act is amended by adding, at the end thereof, the following:

"(k) Notwithstanding any other provision in law, the Secretary is directed to review and reconsider from time to time any approvals granted for the use of alternate foods as exceptions to the basic meal pattern requirements established for the child nutrition programs pursuant to this Act and the National School Lunch Act, and, if the Secretary determines that such alternate foods no longer fulfill their original purposes, or that such foods are not an integral part of a nutritionally sound diet or contravene currently accepted nutrition education principles, the Secretary shall revoke any previous approvals of such alternate foods: Provided, that no alternate food items shall be presented to substitute for more than one foor component in the basic meal requirement."

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I submit an amendment today which directs the Secretary of Agriculture to occasionally review and consider the use of alternate foods in the child nutrition programs.

Last fall my Agriculture Committee colleagues and I introduced a $26.2 million training and education program to support school meals—the food quality and the nutritional goals.

That piece of legislation came on the heels of national publicized allegations that suggest we have serious problems in school cafeterias—excessive plate waste, stagnation participation rates, and problems of food choices.

Hearings of the Select Committee on Nutrition and recent subcommittee hearings on nutrition research have brought to our attention the findings of leading scientists on the relationships between diet, nutrition, and health.

All of this expert testimony has convinced me that we have got to do more to protect the goals of the Nation's Federal food programs—especially school meals. The Government has got to be either in these programs fully or it will be out of the business. Our investment in child feeding programs is close to $3 billion a year.

So let us make the program one for healthy living. Let us make the meal delivered not just a food, but a nutrition building block for complete preventive health care. If we can instill good food habits in our children today, we can achieve a great deal in reducing health and hospital costs.

I urge my colleagues to favorably consider this amendment which gives us greater assurance that the meals we serve our young people will lead to improved food habits and prolong good health.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD certain articles appearing in various newspapers.

There being no objection, the material was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

[From the Washington Post, Feb. 2, 1978]

SUPER DONUTS? USDA WANTS TO BAN KIDS' "BREAKFAST BARS"

(By Marian Burros)

When children in some rural areas board buses for school in the morning, they are offered not only a seat but "breakfast": a half-pint of milk plus a fortified donut, cupcake or a similar confection.

These items, termed "formulated grain-fruit products," were made eligible in 1974 for the school breakfast program, a program which will cost the federal government $200 million this year. They have been a subject of controversy ever since and now an attempt to ban them from the program has created controversy too.

Products with names like Huzzah!, Morning Break and Super Donut were conceived as alternatives to the "conventional" school breakfast, which provides a serving of fruit, bread product or cereal in addition to milk. The manufacturers say USDA asked them to develop these products for use in schools unable to supply the conventional breakfast because of a lack of facilities. Now, under a new administration, Agriculture wants to get rid of them and the manufacturers are angry.

When the Department of Agriculture originally proposed adding the fortified products to the breakfast program in which 2.6 million children participate, public comments were overwhelmingly opposed to their inclusion. Feeding children such foods runs counter to nutrition education, opponents protested, since children are unable to distinguish between fortified high-sugar, high-fat foods and their look-alikes (often called "junk" foods) which do not contain added nutrients. USDA ignored the negative comments and approved their use.

Then last August, USDA proposed banning the so-called "breakfast bars" from the school breakfast program. The explanation was that their withdrawal "will promote the development of good food habits in the furtherance of nutrition education through a well-balanced diet of conventional foods." Public comment has been overwhelmingly in favor of the proposal. Out of 154 comments USDA received, 112 support the ban.

The Grocery Manufacturers Association (GMA), at the request of Morton Foods, a division of ITT-Continental, and Keebler Baking Company—two of the big producers of these grain-fruit products—has launched a public-relations campaign to prevent USDA from going through with the ban. They have targeted for attention members of the Congressional Black Caucus, hoping to force hearings that will either prevent the ban or at least delay it.

GMA has hired a minority public relations firm, Vanguard Associates of Minneapolis, for the job. The breakfast bars are used most frequently in both rural and inner-city schools where there are large numbers of minority and disadvantaged children.

GMA has an official statement which it makes to all inquiries regarding its interest in the proposed ban and its hiring of Vanguard. "We feel our association with Vanguard is especially sound because of our mutual concern that the withdrawal of these products will have a direct effect upon feeding the minority and disadvantaged children who participate in the breakfast program in schools which do not have facilities for serving a conventional breakfast. These, of course, are the very children and schools for whom this product was developed."

Kathy Ehrman, a Vanguard representative, puts her company's interest more strongly: "We became involved with GMA because of our outrage, and that's exactly what it was, because potentially hundreds of thousands of disadvantaged children would be deprived of a nutritious breakfast. We viewed this action (USDA's) as being arbitrary and socially insensitive."

Asked if the withdrawal of the products would mean these children would go without breakfast, neither Ehrman nor a GMA spokesman, Jim May, was able to answer the question. Yet neither GMA nor the Agriculture Department is aware of any school in which these formulated products are served five days a week.

The custom is to serve them two or three times, offering other choices from the accepted list of school breakfasts on the remaining days of the school week. School food service personnel who want to keep them in the program cite convenience, speed and low cost as reasons for using them. Said one North Carolina school food service official: "I doubt that anyone would starve without them."

But the GMA-Vanguard lobbying effort implies otherwise. According to Ehrman, Vanguard is "contacting large black religious and fraternal organizations to bring the proposed ban to their attention. We are asking them to help us in getting a delay on the ban until congressional hearings can be held."

FRAC (Food Research and Action Center), a non-profit public-interest law firm which is concerned with government feeding programs for the poor, has launched its own lobbying effort. It has asked anti-hunger and low-income groups to write USDA in support of the withdrawal.

Rep. Shirley Chisholm (D-N.Y.) is one House member who has been approached by Keebler. According to Tim Hetz, a member of Chisholm's staff, the company "wanted us to endorse their idea of a breakfast bar. They allege that the nutrition bars are very useful in inner-city schools without facilities to prepare breakfast."

Chisholm disagrees. She has circulated a memo to the Black Caucus, which often relies on her on nutrition matters, endorsing USDA's planned withdrawal.

Chisholm says both USDA and FRAC can provide alternative conventional breakfasts which do not require kitchen facilities; that the government offers enough money to individual school districts for the breakfast program to cover the cost of conventional breakfasts, contrary to what many food corporations are saying.

"Feeding our youth sugar-filled cakes teaches them poor eating habits," said Chisholm. "Part of the purpose of the breakfast program is to teach children how to eat a well-balanced meal. Breakfast bars taste like dessert. A child should not get in the habit of eating a dessert-like product for breakfast."

If USDA goes ahead with its plan to ban the breakfast bars, the manufacturers have a fall-back position. They have told the department they are willing to reshape the products so they won't look like their unfortified counterparts and to reformulate them to reduce the amounts of sugar and fat.

Foreman says the department "is considering all of the comments and reviewing them in great detail."

IN THE HALLOWED HALLS OF CONGRESS, WHOSE VOICE ECHOES LOUDEST?

(By Goody Solomon)

Does agribusiness really call the shots on food laws or does Congress respond to the public interest? That question, often raised when consumer measures run into trouble, is being asked with new intensity now that consumer-supported food and nutrition regulations have been jeopardized by heavy campaigns by processors and producers.

Popular support for the proposed legislation was indicated in preliminary findings of a consumer survey, done by Yankelovich, Skelly and White, Inc., released in April at the Food Marketing Institute (FMI) convention. A full report was aired last week at a nutrition conference jointly sponsored by FMI, the Community Nutrition Institution (a Washington-based public interest group) and Family Circle magazine.

Out of a national sample of 1,188 consumers, 65 percent said they regarded government as primarily responsible for nutrition education and 77 percent said they were more interested in nutrition than they were a few years ago. Moreover, 60 percent said they supported an end to advertising aimed at children, even if the reduced ad revenue meant fewer children's programs would be available.

Another result: 63 percent of the respondents supported increased government regulations on food safety, even if the outcome was higher prices. And when asked their major concerns about food content 64 percent named sugar, 62 percent cited additives and 64 percent checked cholesterol.

Several congressional moves have been running counter to these popular views, however. Consider, as one illustration, House and Senate attempts to prevent the U.S. Department of Agriculture (USDA) from eliminating vitamin-enriched pastries from school breakfasts. Responses to a proposed ban, issued a few months ago, have been running 2-1 in favor, in the belief that cake for breakfast teaches youngsters bad eating habits.

However, food manufacturers have been telling senators and representatives that to withdraw the confections would totally deprive poor black children of a morning meal.

Angrily dubbing that message a "myth," Rep. Shirley Chisholm, D-N.Y., who heads the Black Caucus, told a press conference in March that schools can serve dry cereal and fruit as conveniently as donuts.

Enter the Senate Agriculture committee. With an amendment tacked onto a child nutrition bill, the USDA would be barred from doing anything about the breakfast items until two studies are completed. One is due in six months; another in 18 months. Therefore, no final action could be taken by Agriculture for at least two school years.

In addition, a House appropriations subcommittee has written language into another piece of legislation so as to leave the whole matter up to local authorities.

Meanwhile, a nutrition education bill has been sidetracked. Among other things, the measure would create a national nutrition education policy, coordinate federal activities, experiment with effective ways of delivering popular information about diet and health, and test an alternative nutrition labelling scheme using graphics instead of listing the nutrients in a given food by grams and percentages.

The bill was written on the basis of eight days of hearings on the nutrition education activities of government and industry. The subcommittee had found that government efforts were scattered among numerous agencies and largely proved ineffective; also that business classed as nutrition education programs were mainly advertisements and product promotions.

The bill, which has bipartisan sponsorship, was sent to the full Agriculture committee by an 8-2 vote.

However, on May 16, that panel voted 20–19 to return the measure to the subcommittee for further hearings. Rep. Margaret Heckler, R-Mass., called it "outrageous." She and other sources said the vote reflected strong lobbying by cattle and egg producers as well as the Grocery Manufacturers of America, who fear that if Uncle Sam started to teach people how to eat right, official messages would warn against too much fat, sugar and processed food.

Another anti-consumer move in Congress has been the attempt to thwart the Federal Trade Commissions proposed inquiry into advertising on children's television programs. The inquiry casts a special eye on ads for highly-sugared food items such as cereal, soda and candy.

In what one observer described as a "quick, unpublicized maneuver," a House subcommittee wrote a special prohibition into the FTC's appropriations bill: that the Commission could not limit the advertising of a food product found to be safe by the Food and Drug Administration.

While aimed most directly at the children's advertising inquiry, the restrictions also would have struck down two proposed trade rules, one regarding nutritional claims made in advertisements and the other about supplements.

The full appropriations committee received angry protests from eight congressional wives as well as consumer leaders and health professionals. One letter, signed by 22 public interest representatives and nutritionists said:

"The trade press has reported that over 45 representatives of manufacturers, advertisers and broadcasters have united to combat the FTC's inquiry and proposed rule. . . . These forces . . . reportedly have raised a $2 million war chest to finance their efforts. Such political interference in the independent regulatory process prior to the fact-finding phase sets a dangerous and reprehensible precedent."

In part, the outcries paid off. The Appropriations committee voted to keep the limitation on FTC but softened it by adding this language: "Provided that nothing herein shall be construed as prohibiting or constricting the Federal Trade Commission with respect to false or deceptive advertising."

The clause has been interpreted to mean FTC can pursue the proposed rules on nutritional claims and protein supplements as well as the inquiry into children's advertising. However, no rule on the latter can be promulgated in fiscal 1979.

The full House and the Senate have to act on the matter. Similarly, the school breakfast and nutrition education isues aren't closed.

Calling the situation "scarey," Kathleen Sheekey of Consumer Federation of America describes it this way: "We're getting legislation through appropriations; telling agencies what they can or can't do by taking away money."

GRANDMA'S NO-FRILLS SPRING TONIC

Maybe grandma knew best about spring tonics when she made them with molasses. Elaine Rose of Cornell University's Cooperative Extension Service recommends dark molasses, which usually costs less than $1 per 12-ounce bottle, as a good inexpensive source of iron.

According to Rose, many nutrition experts have found that the hundreds of dollars some people spend annually on vitamins and dietary supplements, are at best a waste of money, and at worst a potential health hazard, especially in the case of vitamins A and D, which can cause toxic reactions.

NUTRITIONISTS AND INDUSTRY: BINDING TIES?

(By Marian Burros)

In a report titled "Feeding at the Company Trough," Rep. Benjamin Rosenthal (D-N.Y.) charged that "Eminent nutritionists have traded their independence for the food industry's favors."

The study, compiled by the Center for Science in the Public interest and Rosenthal, said that many of the most prominent nutrition and food science professors at such schools as Harvard, the Universities of Wisconsin, Massachusetts and Iowa, sit on boards of directors of, act as consultants for, and testify at congressional hearings on behalf of, industry, and receive industry research grants.

Officials contacted at several universities denied any conflict of interest and said food industry grants have not influenced researchers' finders. However, a number of professors included in the study refused to divulge their industry connections when queried by the researchers.

The study includes a broad spectrum of scientists from those who see consumer activists as enemies of the food instustry, such as Dr. E. M. Foster of the Food Research Institute at the University of Wisconsin, to Dr. Jean Mayer who most consumer advocates consider a friend.

Mayer, until July a professor of nutrition at Harvard and now president of Tufts University, draws a sharp distinction between directorships and consulting work. In a recent interview Mayer, who is a paid director of Monstanto and Miles Laboratories, said: "I do not want to be a consultant to industry because that is where you are used. To be a director you are not used because you are part of the decisionmaking apparatus and you can really do something about the problem."

Mayer said that "Monsanto is just peripherally interested in food." According to the report, Monsanto "manufactures food flavorings, preservatives, pesticides, fertilizers and other food industry chemicals." The former nutrition professor said his "main interest in being on the board is because Monsanto is the single most important company planning agricultural development. If we are going to feed the world in general, we need more long-range planning and no amount of yelling at them is going to do any good."

Mayer said he is a director for Miles because he is absolutely convinced that development of a vegetable protein substitute for meat is absolutely crucial to our food supply. This is the company that has developed the best technology. I am in a position to influence the food supply of the world tomorrow."

But the study, while criticizing the cozy relationship between scientists and industry, noted that Mayer has repeatedly voiced his concern over food industry advertising and the quality of the American diet. He has assisted consumer advocacy groups as well as the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs, which deserves credit for alerting the public to nutrition matters."

E. M. Foster, on the other hand, thinks consumer activists just get in the way. Foster, who, when asked by the researchers, neglected to mention his directorship of the Stange Corporation—manufacturer of food ingredients including flavorings and colorings—has said that consumer activists have complicated and confused the decision-making process."

Prof. Fergus Clydesdale of the Nutrition and Food Science Department of the University of Massachusetts is described by the report as a frequent public defender of the food industry." He is a consultant for the National Automatic Vending Merchandising Association and told a convention of vending machine executives There is no such thing as junk food."

Clydesdale is also a consultant for the Carnation Company and says he does "informal counseling to several major food industries as well as a major (artificial) color equipment manufacturer." He would not tell the researchers what his current outside affiliations are.

Prof. Aaron Altschul of Georgetown University Medical School has been a consultant for Miles Laboratories, Thomas Lipton, J. E. Underwood and A. E. Staley, a soybean processor. Last year Altschul hosted a breakfast for the press and other interested parties which was designed to explore the advantages of soybean-based breakfast meat substitutes manufactured by Miles.

In the September issue of Family Health magazine, Mayer wrote an article about textured vegetable protein, used in dozens and dozens of food products as a substitute for meat and as the basis for non-meat products. Such products include Morningstar Farms breakfast meat substitutes, manufactured by Miles Laboratories. Following Mayer's article, which gives the history, background and future of TVP, as it is called, a collection of nine recipes calling for these meat-like breakfast foods is offered. On the facing page there is an advertisement for Morningstar Farms.

Asked if it bothered him that the advertisement and recipe story followed his article, Mayer said that it did. "It is just the sort of position I don't want to be in. I will talk to them (the magazine editors) about that. It may be completely inadvertent. I hope it is. I could see why people would think it isn't."

Other scientists included in the study are: Dr. Alfred Harper, chairman of the Department of Nutritional Sciences at Wisconsin and consultant for the drug company G.D. Searle (Searle also makes some food additives), Proctor and Gamble, Abbott Laboratories, General Mills and Pillsbury; Prof. Paul Kifer, head of the department of food science and technology at Oregon State University and consultant for Ralston Purina; Prof. Richard Barnes of the division of nutrition sciences at Cornell, who is associated with Mead Johnson Co. (Mead Johnson manufactures infants formulas); Prof. Elwood Caldwell of the department of food science and nutrition at the University of Minnesota, a director of Gerber; Dr. Lloyd Filer of the department of pediatrics at the University of Iowa and consultant to the National Automatic Merchandising Association and Carnation Co.; Dr. Samuel Foman, also at Iowa and associated with CPC International (which manufactures Skippy and Mazola products), Gerber, Mead Johnson, Nestle; Prof. Helen Guthrie, a member of the nutrition program at Penn State University and a director of Nabisco; Prof. Lavell Henderson of the department of biochemistry at the University of Minnesota and consultant for Procter and Gamble, Eli Lilly and Dupont; Prof. Gilbert Leveille of the department of food science and human nutrition at Michigan State University and listed as "consultant for a number of companies"; Dr. Charles Whitten of Children's Hospital at Wayne State University and a director at Gerber.

Also included in the study is Dr. Frederick Stare, who was chairman of the department of nutrition at Harvard until his retirement this year. He continues to work in the department. Stare refused to disclose the names of the companies which currently employ him. He is on the board of directors of Continental Can Company and has testified at Congressional and FDA hearings on behalf of Kellogg, Nabisco, Carnation Co., the Cereal Institute, the Sugar Association and the Pharmaceutical Manufacturers Association.

Several scientists refused to disclose their current outside affiliations. Prof. Theodore Labuza of the University of Minnesota department of nutrition and food science was one of them, but the study said that at some time Labuza "has sold his services to General Mills, Searle Biochemics, Pillsbury, Hunt-Wesson and Quaker Oats."

Prof. Bernard Schweigert, chairman of the department of food science and technology at the University of California, "refused to disclose any information." According to the report "he is . . . known to serve on the board of directors of Universal Foods . . ."

Prof. R. V. Lechowich, head of the department of food science and technology at Virginia Polytechnic Institute, told the research: "Since controls of conflicts of interest are excused, the request for names of firms and consulting fees are not pertinent to the question."

Of the 17 scientists included in the study, 10 are members of the prestigious National Academy of Sciences/National Research Council Food and Nutrition Board, which is influential in setting government food policy. These 10 scientists have connections with at least 19 different companies which either sell food or sell to the food industry.

The authors of the report do not suggest that it is necessary for scientists to be totally free of industry connections. They offer several alternatives. One method suggested in the governmenal decisionmaking process "for dealing wih possible biases is to counterbalance" persons with industry affiliations by including persons with consumer affiliations.

They also suggest "the establishment of a nonprofit public interest group to 'launder' contributions before they reach the university."

The report concludes: "If a policy of openness with regard to professorial conflicts of interest were adopted, the disclosures might initially shock the public and make it suspicious of every connection . . . (but) people will come to realize" directorships and consulting for companies do "not necessarily destroy a professor's sense of judgment, but could in fact lead (as Mayer suggests) to greater corporate responsibility and public control over the businesses which affect our lives."

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I have looked at the amendment offered by the Senator from Kansas. I hope the amendment will be adopted.

I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. MORGAN. Mr. President, I support the basic thrust of S. 3085, the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978. I commend Senator McGOVERN, Senator DOLE, Senator LEAHY, Senator MELCHER, Senator BELLMON, and others for the very fine work they have done in this matter.

I congratulate the distinguished floor managers of this bill for their diligence on behalf of the welfare of the children of this Nation. Senators McGOVERN and DOLE, the Senate's leaders in the area of nutrition, have clearly pledged themselves to a course that assures the nutritional well-being of our children, a strategy that will play a significant role in reducing the skyrocketing health costs faced by the citizens of this Nation.

This bill is not extravagant nor bloated, it is a lean bill that minimally recognizes what we as a country need to do in the area of nutrition.

There are two parts of this legislation that I would like to comment on: First, I applaud the committee, particularly Senator LEAHY, for its work in shaping the school breakfast provision. I assure the Members of this Chamber that such expansion of the breakfast program is highly warranted from the perspective of the people of North Carolina. North Carolina, I would like to point out, has one of the highest, if not the highest, percentage of working mothers in the Nation. Clearly, such an expansion will benefit these hard working families.

The second segment I would like to comment on relates to the special supplement food program for women, infants, and children. This program, the so-called WIC program, originally authored by the late Senator Humphrey, deserves strong support from the Members of this body. I was a cosponsor of S. 2630, introduced by Senator MURIEL HUMPHREY, which has been folded into the bill before my colleagues today. WIC has been a highly successful program in my home State, with results that are highly visible. WIC has not only been a very important nutrition program, but a very important health care program. By linking the nutritional aspects with our health care system, the poor of this Nation have, for the first time, access to the types of care that will make them socially and economically productive citizens.

Mr. President, I would again like to compliment the distinguished floor managers for their efforts on this very important legislation.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1463

(Purpose: To clarify the limitations of participation in the special supplemental food program)

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I call up my unprinted amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Utah (Mr. HATCH) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1463.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 29, strike lines 7–11, and in lieu thereof insert the following:

"(d)(1) Participation in the program under this section shall be limited to any of the following who are determined by a competent professional authority to be at nutritional risk: pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, infants, and children from low-income families.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, the bill before us entitled, the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978, extends the supplemental food program for women, infants, and children—WIC—and provides permanent authorizations for appropriations for the child care food program.

The amendment which I am offering concerns the special supplemental food program which provides specified nutritions foods to pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, and to infants and children up to their fifth birthday who are determined by competent professionals to be at "nutritional risk" because of inadequate nutrition and inadequate income.

Mr. President, as I have studied the WIC program, it has become readily apparent to me that the intent of this program is to provide nutritious meals to two types of individuals: Women and infants of low-income families and children of those low-income families who have recently suffered from the trauma of childbearing and children of those low-income families. To qualify for the program women and infants as well as the children must be determined to be at a "nutritional risk" by a competent professional qualified to make such a judgment. The first amendment I am introducing clarifies the definition of "postpartum women." As it is now written a postpartum woman is any woman up to 6 months after she has had her pregnancy terminated. There is a multiplicity of ways in which a pregnancy may be terminated including voluntary abortion used as a means of birth control. I do not believe that we should extend free food to women who voluntarily decide that they want to terminate their pregnancy prematurely to avoid the consequences of childbearing. The intent of the program is clear; that is, to provide nutritious fortified food to those who suffer from dietary deficiencies incurred by a pregnancy and subsequent lactation for the purpose of breastfeeding.

The greatest nutritional drain on a pregnant woman comes in the last trimester when the infant's weight increases threefold to fourfold and also postpartum when the mother is lactating in order to breastfeed the child. In my opinion, we should not hand out free food to a woman who becomes pregnant and then decides the 4th or 5th month of pregnancy that she wants an abortion. In such a case, a woman would receive free food for almost 1 year without having suffered any real nutritional or dietary insufficiencies due to the pregnancy. This would simply be a case of getting something for nothing and would allow a pregnant woman to live off of the Government for at least 6 months and in some cases up to a year. This would be the case even though she knew when she became pregnant or shortly thereafter that she would get an abortion.

By clarifying the definition of postpartum women to mean a woman up to 6 months after her pregnancy was terminated except for the case of a nontherapeutic abortion, the original intent of the program would be left intact.

Mr. President, this is basically a technical amendment that clarifies some of the language, and I think it will improve the bill. It is my understanding that the distinguished floor manager of the bill will accept the amendment.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I have discussed this matter with the Senator from Utah. It is really an amendment that I think clarifies and clears up some of the uncertainty in the bill as it now stands. I believe the Senator has performed a service in offering the language he has proposed, and I hope it will be accepted by the Senate.

Mr. HATCH. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. McGOVERN. I yield back the remainder of my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Who yields time?

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield to the Senator from Utah such time as he may require.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the distinguished Senator from Utah.

Mr. President, it is my understanding—and I ask the distinguished floor leader if his understanding is the same as mine—that this bill does not intend to cover nontherapeutic abortion situations.

Mr. McGOVERN. The Senator is correct. There is nothing in the legislation that affects that issue in any way.

Mr. HATCH. I had an amendment to make sure that that was put as part of the bill, but I am willing to withdraw that amendment, under the assurance of the distinguished floor manager of the bill that nontherapeutic abortions are not intended to be covered by the bill under any circumstances.

Mr. McGOVERN. I can give the Senator that assurance, without reservation.

Mr. HATCH. I thank the distinguished Senator from South Dakota.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1464

(Purpose: To authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase fish products for the commodity distribution program for school lunches)

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I have an amendment that I sent to the dask on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY). It is a noncontroversial amendment.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN), on behalf of the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY), proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1464.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the appropriate place in the bill, add two sections to read as follows:

SEC. . Section 6(e) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by inserting after the words "high protein foods, meat, and meat alternatives" the words "(which may include domestic seafood commodities and their products)".

SEC. . Section 14(a)(1) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by inserting after the words "customarily purchased under such section" the words "(which may include domestic seafood commodities and their products)".

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, this amendment is offered by the Senator from Massachusetts to clarify the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase fish products for the school lunch commodity distribution program.

I do not think there is any question at all that fish is a wholesome and nutritious food which contributes to the health of our children.

Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD a memorandum on the bill, and the remarks prepared by the Senator from Massachusetts, together with a letter to him, dated July 20, 1978, from Mr. Terry L. Leitzell, Assistant Administrator for Fisheries.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The material ordered to be printed in the RECORD follows:

MEMORANDUM

Purpose of amendment: To clarify the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase fish products for the School Lunch Commodity Distribution program.

Background: Department has been unwilling to purchase seafood commodities until the National School Lunch Act is amended to give them explict authority to do so.

Consequently, of the over $700 million expended by USDA for the commodity distribution program, nothing has been spent for fish products.

Reasons for amendment: Nutritional benefit:

Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs report ("Dietary Goals for the U.S.") calls for increased consumption of low-fat protein sources such as fish.

Reduced saturated fat intake is a national dietary goal—increased consumption of fish is one of the best ways to meet this goal.

Dietary patterns developed in childhood. Fish for school lunch should be important part of effort to promote healthy diets.

Benefit to U.S. Fishing Industry:

Since passage of 200-Mile Zone, effort to revitalize domestic fishing industry.

Currently, most new US vessels are entering traditional fisheries, thereby putting excessive pressure on stocks like cod and haddock.

Effort now is to promote fishing of "under-utilized sepcies" such as whiting which would make excellent fish portions for school lunches.

Letter to EMK from Terry Leitzell expressing support.

STATEMENT BY MR. KENNEDY

The effect of the amendment I am offering today is simply to clarify the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase fish products for the school lunch commodity distribution program.

The Secretary's basic purchasing authority was amended in 1974 to permit the purchase of seafood commodities, but the Department of Agriculture has been unwilling to do so until they receive a further clarifying amendment to the National School Lunch Act. Consequently, of the over $700 million currently expended by USDA for these purchases, nothing has been spent for fish products.

There are compelling reasons for promoting the purchase of fish. First, and foremost, are the nutritional benefits. As my colleague from South Dakota is well-aware, the Senate Select Committee on Nutrition and Human Needs in its report "dietary goals for the United States" called for increased consumption of low-fat protein sources such as fish. As a member of that select committee, my primary concern was to encourage reduced saturated fat intake as a national dietary goal. Increasing consumption of fish products is one of the best ways to meet this goal. And, as all of us know, dietary patterns are developed at an early age. The school lunch program is, therefore, a vital part of our effort to promote healthy diets.

Permitting the purchase of seafood products for the school lunch program would have another important benefit. Since the implementation of the Fishery Management and Conservation Act last year, I have been involved in an effort with the National Marine Fisheries Service to more effectively utilize vast fishery resources now available within our 200-mile zone. Currently, most new U.S. vessels entering our coastal fisheries have concentrated their efforts on the more established fisheries, thereby putting excessive fishing pressures on the traditional "fresh fish" species such as cod and haddock. As a result, we are rapidly depleting these fish stocks, and have repeatedly been faced with closures as quotas are exceeded.

Part of the answer to this dilemma is to develop markets for nontraditional species. The central reason U.S. fishermen are not going after the so-called under-utilized species is lack of a stable market at decent prices. The school lunch program, providing meals to some 25 million children, represents a major uptapped market. Under-utilized species such as whiting make excellent fish portions for school lunches. I ask unanimous consent to insert for the record a letter from Terry L. Leitzell, Assistant Administrator for Fisheries, expressing strong support for this effort.

I should emphasize that this amendment requires no new spending authority. It only permits the Secretary to use existing authorized funds to purchase fish products for the commodity distribution program.

This amendment will provide a more balanced diet for school children, and will provide a major new market for high quality seafood products. I appreciate the committee's concern for this issue, and urge passage of this amendment.

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
July 20, 1978.

Hon. EDWARD M. KENNEDY,
U.S. Senate,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR SENATOR KENNEDY: In response to a request from Jack Leslie of your office, I am very pleased to comment on the need for greater use of fish and fishery products in the School Lunch Program. As you know, members of my staff and I spent several weeks in New England reviewing the needs of the fishing industry and determining how we could assist the industry.

One of the pressing needs in fisheries is to strengthen markets for traditional and many of the nontraditional species available to U.S. fishermen. With the Fishery Conservation and Management Act we have large quantities of nontraditional species off our shores that are of high nutritional value and widely accepted in many parts of the world, and are gaining acceptance in this country. Inclusion of fishery products in the School Lunch Program will provide a more balanced diet for school children and will provide an additional market for high quality domestically produced fishery products.

The National Marine Fisheries Service is prepared to work with you and the Department of Agriculture in achieving greater use of domestic seafood in the School Lunch Program. The enclosure presents the major reasons why we believe purchases of fishery products should be made by the USDA School Lunch Program.

Sincerely,

TERRY L. LEITZELL,
Assistant Administrator for Fisheries.

● Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, I am pleased to join with the distinguished Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. KENNEDY) in offering this amendment to the Child Nutrition Act to authorize the Secretary of Agriculture to include seafood and seafood products in the school lunch program. My colleagues from Maine, BILL HATHAWAY, joins in offering this amendment which we support as an effort to improve marketing opportunity for our fishermen.

BILL deserves praise for his continued and dedicated efforts in support of Maine fishermen. He has most recently taken the lead in arguing that countervailing duties be imposed on fish imported from Canada. The hearings he chaired in the International Trade Subcommittee on that issue last week established the unfair advantage which government subsidies give Canadian fishermen and the impact of subsidized fish products on our industry. I have joined with him in that effort. I congratulate him for his leadership.

Mr. President, the amendment we are offering here today clarifies the authority of the Secretary of Agriculture to purchase fish and fish products for the school lunch program.

Because of the absence of clear authority to purchase seafood products, none of the $700 million currently expended by the U.S. Department of Agriculture for the school lunch commodity program has been expended for seafood products. This amendment will clarify his authority to include fish in the program. This broadening of the Secretary's authority will benefit the program and its recipients, and assist our efforts to strengthen the seafood industry and the marketing of underutilized species.

This new authority will give the Secretary flexibility to assure varied and nutritious diets and will provide the 25 million school children participating in the program the benefits of nutritious, high quality seafood. Fish provides an excellent source of low-fat protein. The exposure of our schoolchildren to menus including a range of fish products can play an important role in the improvement of our national diet.

Our fishermen will be able to use this program in their exploration of new markets for species and stocks available to them under the Fishery Management and Conservation Act. New markets for these underutilized species would, of course, broaden our food base and aid our domestic fishery and should relieve pressure on those fish stocks such as cod and haddock which are now subject to stiff quotas. I am pleased to join in offering this amendment and urge its acceptance.●

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time on this amendment.

Mr. DOLE. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1465

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from South Dakota (Mr. McGOVERN) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1465.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, beginning with "No" on line 15, strike out all down through "licensing" on line 17 and insert in lieu thereof the following: "The Secretary is authorized to establish separate guidelines for institutions that provide care to school children outside of school hours. For purposes of determining eligibility—

"'(1) no institution, other than a family and group day care home sponsoring organization, or family or group day care home shall be eligible to participate in the program unless it has Federal, State, or local licensing".

On page 2, line 21, strike out "Federal, State," and insert in lieu thereof "State".

On page 3, strike out line 6 and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"'(2) no institution shall be eligible to participate in the program unless it satisfies the following criteria:'.

On page 11, line 7, insert "or family or group day care home" after "institution".

On page 11, line 9, insert "or family or group day care home" after "institution".

On page 12, line 23, strike out the comma and insert in lieu thereof a semicolon.

On page 13, line 11, insert "factor" after "reimbursement".

On page 13, line 15, insert after the period the following: "The value of such payments to family or group day care homes shall not be considered to be income or resources (to the family or group day care home operation) under any Federal or State laws, including laws relating to taxation and welfare and public assistance programs.".

On page 14, line 3, strike out the comma.

On page 15, line 12, strike out "snack" and insert in lieu thereof "snacks".

On page 17, line 1, insert "and the number of family and group day care homes" after "institutions".

On page 17, line 4, insert "and the number of family and group day care homes" after "institutions".

On page 17, line 10, strike out "the use" and insert in lieu thereof "use".

On page 18, line 7, strike out "group and family" and insert in lieu thereof "family and group".

On page 18, line 8, strike out "group and family" and insert in lieu thereof "family and group".

On page 19, line 9, strike out "group and family" and insert in lieu thereof "family and group".

On page 53, line 18, strike out "sections 4 and 5" and insert in lieu thereof "section 4".

On page 53, line 19, strike out "section 8" and insert in lieu thereof "sections 5 and 8".

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, this amendment is a series of technical amendments. While they are technical in nature, I believe it would be helpful if I spent a moment describing two of the amendments.

The family and group day care homes participating in the child care food program are managed by people who are truly interested in improving the well-being of children. For their services these people are reimbursed for the actual cost of food plus their time and effort in meal preparation based on a specified reimbursement rate. Question has arisen over whether these reimbursements should be considered income or resources under any laws relating to taxation and welfare and public assistance programs. One of the amendments would clarify that these reimbursements will not be considered income or resources for purposes of those laws or programs. Without this amendment there is a strong possibility of a mass exodus of these people from the program.

Another amendment clarifies the fact that if State or local licensing or approval is not available or the other criteria of the bill are satisfied, no institution, other than a family and group day care home sponsoring organization or family or group day care home, will be eligible to participate in the child care food program.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. DOLE. I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time having been yielded back, the question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield such time as he requires to the distinguished chairman of our committee, Senator TALMADGE.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I support S. 3085, as reported by the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition and Forestry. This legislation is further evidence of our committee's continued commitment to the health and well-being of America's schoolchildren and the undernourished within our ranks.

S. 3085 is the culmination of the efforts of those parties concerned with the state of our Nation's nutrition. The committee was greatly aided by the efforts of school food service representatives, dieticians, and other scientists and medical personnel, program recipients, and public interest advocacy groups. Senator McGOVERN, the chairman of the Nutrition Subcommittee, is to be commended for his dedication and industry in bringing this bill to the floor of the Senate. Senators DOLE, LEAHY, and BELLMON made considerable contributions to the committee's deliberations. Senator HUMPHREY, following the example of her late husband, our dear friend, Hubert, aided us in our deliberations on the future of the special supplemental food program—popularly known as the WIC program.

The oversight activities of our committee regarding the child care food program and the WIC program have revealed areas for improvement. The improvements in these two programs are contained in S. 3085. These modifications will help assure the continued vitality of these programs.

The committee bill is responsible and responsive legislation. We had to deal with the issue of whether schools should be required to implement a breakfast program. Nobody was contesting the potential merit of the breakfast program. The question really came down to whether it would be best for all concerned for Washington to order schools to do something that they may be opposed to. I strongly believe that the committee made the right decision in not mandating the breakfast program. It is my belief, and one shared by a majority of the committee, that the decision to conduct a school breakfast program should be made by the local authorities who are familiar with the needs of our children. The incentives provided in S. 3085 should serve as a positive force to encourage local school authorities to implement a breakfast program.

S. 3085 is the product of the efforts of many people. It represents our best appraisal of what is needed to improve the child nutrition programs and allow them to continue to serve those in need.

I urge my colleagues to join me in supporting S. 3085.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I believe that concludes the deliberations on this bill.

I ask for the yeas and nays.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there a sufficient second?

There is a sufficient second.

The yeas and nays were ordered.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. McGOVERN. I yield.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, as I understand it, the largest dollar figure in the various programs is the special supplemental feeding program, otherwise known as WIC.

If my figures are accurate, for the fiscal year 1977, the WIC program was $277 million; and in 1978, the current fiscal year, that was increased by 30 percent, to $360 million.

Do those figures jibe with the figures of the distinguished Senator from South Dakota?

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes, I think the Senator's figures are correct.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. For fiscal 1979 the cost impact of the same program will increase to $540 million or an increase of 50 percent. And then the following year it goes up to $780 million, which is almost another 45 percent increase. Then in 1981 it goes up to $890 million, and then in 1982 it goes up to $945 million.

Mr. McGOVERN. Yes. The Senator's figures are substantially correct.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I wonder if the Senator would indicate why there should be such a tremendous increase in the cost of this program?

Mr. McGOVERN. Let me say to the Senator from Virginia that I quite understand the point he is making. It is a substantial increase. There is no question about it. I cited evidence earlier in the discussion before it was possible for the Senator to be on the floor that this program is an extremely cost-effective program in that it heads off diseases, physical handicaps, the debilitation of children in various ways, that will cost considerably more in later life either to the Government or to the families involved, in the absence of this program. While I cannot cite an exact benefit cost ratio on the program, I give the Senator my best judgment, that we have not expanded this program under the terms of the legislation beyond a reasonable level in terms of the benefits to our families, to our children and to the society as a whole. As the Senator knows we are approaching a medical bill in this country that is now close to $200 billion for the treatment of disease. The so-called WIC program that now operates across the country is frankly designed to attack that problem of rising disease and illness costs in this country by providing prevention through nutrition supplements as it provides under this program. I say to the Senator that these provisions came out of the Committee on Agriculture unanimously with the support of the Republicans and Democrats on both sides of the aisle, without a single dissent, I think partly because it was seen as an investment to actually reduce the long-range cost of medical care in this country.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. I am not questioning the program per se. I was concerned about the very sharp increase in the cost of the program. May I ask the Senator this: How is the program monitored and by whom?

Mr. McGOVERN. It is monitored, I will say to the Senator, and I think very effectively, by the Department of Agriculture. It cannot be administered anywhere at the State and local level except by authorized agencies that have to be approved by the U.S. Department of Agriculture. I think the Senator understands that the reason for the increase in cost is that it is a fairly new program that has proved to be highly successful and increasing numbers of people are being brought under its scope, and that is the chief reason for the additional costs.

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD. JR. I thank the Senator. Since this colloquy began, I have learned that an amendment has been adopted, which will scale down the figures I cited. I think that is desirable.

Mr. McGOVERN. I thank the Senator from Virginia for his inquiry.

Mr. President, I think that completes our action on this legislation.

● Mr. CRANSTON. Mr. President, I would like to express my support for S. 3085, the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978, as reported from the Committee on Agriculture. As chairman of the Child and Human Development Subcommittee of the Human Resources Committee, I have a special interest in child nutrition programs, which make vital contributions to the health and well-being of millions of needy children throughout the Nation. These nutrition programs—the WIC program serving mothers, infants, and children at "nutritional risk," the child care food program, and the school lunch and breakfast programs—have repeatedly demonstrated themselves to be of great value to children and families in need.

CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM

Mr. President, the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978 would make permanent the child care food program. This program, begun in 1968 as a 3-year pilot program, served some 676,000 preschool children in child care programs during fiscal year 1978. Although the program has expanded substantially since its inception 10 years ago, it is clear that it reaches only a fraction of the needy preschool children whose parents must work. Statistics released last year indicate that some 6.4 million children under the age of 6 have working mothers. Even with the mother's income, many of the families of these children have incomes that are below or barely above the poverty level. Many of these children in child care centers and family day care homes, may spend 10 to 12 hours a day in child care and need several meals a day in these situations. However, the statistics show that only a tiny portion of these children are participating in the child care food program.

Many individuals have felt that unnecessary paperwork and administrative barriers, as well as the lack of effective outreach and informational efforts regarding the child care food program, have contributed to this low participation. The committee bill addresses these problems, particularly as they affect small family day care homes, by attempting to reduce paperwork and simplify reimbursement procedures.

During the hearings I held this past winter on child care programs before the Child and Human Development Subcommittee of the Human Resources Committee, many individuals testified about the desire of many parents—particularly parents of very young children—to use family day care arrangements for their children. I strongly believe that we should be encouraging and supporting these arrangements. I hope that the type of support these programs can receive through increased participation in the child care food program as a result of the amendments contained in this bill will have that effect.

At the same time, Mr. President, I must add one note of caution. Although I fully support efforts to extend participation in the child care food program to as many needy children as possible, I am equally committed to the principle that the Federal Government has a responsibility to require that the child care programs that receive Federal financial support meet some reasonable standards of quality. I do not believe that the Federal Government should be encouraging—directly or indirectly—child care programs that do not provide safe and healthy environments for young children.

The bill before us today extends eligibility for participation in child care food programs to unlicensed programs in States that either do not have licensing procedures or that fail to act upon licensing applications. Under existing law, unlicensed institutions must satisfy the Secretary of Agriculture that their standards are not less comprehensive than the Federal interagency day care requirements in order to participate in the child care food program. The amendments in the reported bill would allow programs a number of alternative ways to demonstrate that they meet applicable State or local government licensing or approval standards and would authorize the Secretary of Agriculture, after consultation with the Secretary of HEW, to establish standards for approval of unlicensed programs. Some degree of flexibility is needed to insure that needy children receive the food services they are eligible for, but I hope that these new provisions will be administered in a fashion that also encourages compliance with reasonable standards of quality in all federally-assisted child care programs.

CONTRIBUTIONS OF THE WIC PROGRAM TO INFANT HEALTH

Mr. President, I also want to comment in particular upon the provisions of the committee's bill dealing with the WIC program. This program provides nutritious supplemental food to pregnant, post-partum, and breastfeeding women, and to infants and children up to their 5th birthday who are determined by health professionals to be at "nutritional risk" because of inadequate nutrition and inadequate income. This investment in prenatal and post partum nutrition has clearly paid off. Studies of the WIC program have shown such results as a reduced incidence of anemia in children participating in the program and a reduced incidence of low birthweight infants born to mothers participating in the WIC program. The relationship between low birthweight and infant mortality has repeatedly been established. Earlier this year, I chaired hearings before the Child and Human Development Subcommittee—and the Senate passed extension legislation—dealing with the tragic problem of sudden infant death syndrome, sometimes called "crib death." Studies have found a correlation between low birthweight and this devastating problem which takes the life of between 6,000 and 7,000 infants each year in the United States. Clearly, efforts such as those undertaken through the WIC program that reduce the incidence of factors, such as low birthweight, that are related to this type of infant loss are well worth the investment.

SCHOOL BREAKFAST PROGRAMS

Mr. President, the bill as reported also contains a number of provisions designed to encourage and expand participation in the school breakfast program. Initially authorized as a 2-year pilot program in 1967, the school breakfast program was made available to all schools in 1972, and made permanent in 1975 under Public Law 94–105. However, only 22,894 schools are participating in the program—a much lower rate than that for the school lunch program.

Yet, all the available data suggest an increasing need for breakfast programs, particularly in light of the increased incidence of two parent working households or single-parent households and indications that many children from low-income households do not have an adequate breakfast available to them. A number of studies have shown that the school breakfast programs help to decrease sleepiness and apathy, and increase positive attitudes, attentiveness, and performance.

The administration and a number of groups urged that participation in the breakfast program be made mandatory in schools where over half of the students enrolled have been determined eligible for free or reduced-price school meals. The committee, however, decided to provide various incentives, such as increased financial assistance for schools that desire to establish a breakfast program, to encourage increased participation in this program. While I know that a number of people are not satisfied with this decision, hopefully these incentives will result in increased participation in this program over the next few years.

CONCLUSION

Mr. President, I believe that the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978 represent responsible and beneficial steps forward in our efforts to insure that all needy children receive the nutritional opportunities that are so essential to their healthy development and future lives. Expenditures for these programs are invaluable investments in the future of our Nation—our children—and they deserve our continued support.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill is open to further amendment. If there be no further amendment to be proposed, the question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading and was read the third time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Do Senators yield back their time?

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Does the Senator from Kansas yield back his time?

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I yield back my time.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. All time has been yielded back.

The bill, having been read the third time, the question is, shall it pass? On this question the yeas and nays have been ordered, and the clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk called the roll.

Mr. CRANSTON. I announce that the Senator from Alabama (Mrs. ALLEN), the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK), the Senator from Arizona (Mr. DECONCINI), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. EAGLETON), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from Colorado (Mr. HASKELL), the Senator from Maine (Mr. HATHAWAY), the Senator from Kentucky (Mr. HUDDLESTON), the Senator from Louisiana (Mr. JOHNSTON), the Senator from New Hampshire (Mr. MCINTYRE), the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN), the Senator from Maine (Mr. MUSKIE), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. SASSER), the Senator from Alabama (Mr. SPARKMAN), the Senator from Mississippi (Mr. STENNIS), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. STEVENSON), and the Senator from Montana (Mr. HATFIELD) are necessarily absent.

I further announce that, if present and voting, the Senator from Minnesota (Mr. ANDERSON), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. GRAVEL), the Senator from New York (Mr. MOYNIHAN), the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. RIBICOFF), the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. SASSER), the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), and the Senator from Iowa (Mr. CLARK) would each vote "yea."

Mr. TOWER. I announce that the Senator from Tennessee (Mr. BAKER), the Senator from Oklahoma (Mr. BELLMON), the Senator from Massachusetts (Mr. BROOKE), the Senator from Missouri (Mr. DANFORTH), the Senator from Michigan (Mr. GRIFFIN), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), the Senator from California (Mr. HAYAKAWA), the Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT), the Senator from Illinois (Mr. PERCY), the Senator from Alaska (Mr. STEVENS), the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND), and the Senator from Connecticut (Mr. WEICKER) are necessarily absent.

I further announced that, if present and voting the Senator from Oregon (Mr. HATFIELD), and the Senator from South Carolina (Mr. THURMOND) would vote "yea."

The result was announced—yeas 68, nays 0, as follows:

So the bill (S. 3085), as amended was passed as follows:

S. 3085

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978".

CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM

SEC. 2. Section 17 of the National School Lunch Act is amended to read as follows:

"CHILD CARE FOOD PROGRAM

"SEC. 17. (a) The Secretary is authorized to carry out a program to assist States through grants-in-aid and other means to initiate, maintain, and expand nonprofit food service programs for children in institutions providing child care. For purposes of this section, the term 'institution' means any public or private nonprofit organization providing nonresidential child care, including, but not limited to, child care centers, settlement houses, recreational centers, Head Start centers, and institutions providing child care facilities for handicapped children. In addition, the term 'institution' shall include programs developed to provide day care outside school hours for schoolchildren, and public or nonprofit private organizations that sponsor family or group day care homes. The Secretary is authorized to establish separate guidelines for institutions that provide care to school children outside of school hours. For purposes of determining eligibility—

"(1) no institution, other than a family and group day care home sponsoring organization, or family or group day care home shall be eligible to participate in the program unless it has Federal, State, or local licensing or approval, or is complying with appropriate renewal procedures as prescribed by the Secretary and the State has no information indicating that the institution's license will not be renewed; or, where State or local licensing or approval is not available, receives either referrals for placement or funds (such as funds under title XX of the Social Security Act (88 Stat. 2337)) from Federal, State, or local government agencies, or otherwise demonstrates that it meets either any applicable State or local government licensing or approval standards or licensing or approval standards established by the Secretary after consultation with the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and

"(2) no institution shall be eligible to participate in the program unless it satisfies the following criteria:

"(A) accepts final administrative and financial responsibility for management of an effective food service;

"(B) has not been seriously deficient in its operation of the child care food program, or other program under this Act of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, for a period of time specified by the Secretary; and

"(C) will provide adequate supervisory and operational personnel for overall monitoring and management of the child care food program.

"Payments to States

"(b) For the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for each subsequent fiscal year, the Secretary shall provide cash assistance to States for meals served in the manner specified in subsection (c) of this section: Provided, That, in any fiscal year, the aggregate amount of assistance provided to a State by the Secretary under this section shall not exceed the sum of the Federal funds provided by the State to participating institutions within the State for that fiscal year and any funds used by the State under section 10 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966.

"(c) The Secretary shall provide assistance to each State in the following manner:

"(1) For meals served to children in institutions, other than family and group day care home sponsoring organizations, where no less than two-thirds of the children enrolled are members of families that satisfy the income standards for free and reduced-price school meals under section 9 of this Act, each State shall receive an amount equal to the sum of the products obtained by multiplying (A) the total number of breakfasts served in the State in these institutions by the sum of the national average payment rate for breakfasts and the national average payment rate for free breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (B) the total number of lunches and suppers served in the State in these institutions by the sum of the national average payment rate for lunches under section 4 of this Act and the national average payment rate for free lunches under section 11 of this Act; and (C) the total number of supplements served in the State in these institutions by the national average payment rate for supplements served in such institutions. For the six-month period ending

June 30, 1978, the national average payment rate for supplements served in these institutions shall be 23.75 cents. For supplements served in those institutions thereafter, the Secretary shall prescribe adjustments to this national average payment rate on July 1 and January 1 of each year. Such adjustments shall be computed to the nearest one-fourth cent and shall be based on changes, measured over the most recent six-month period for which data are available, in the series for food away from home of the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers.

"(2) For meals served to children in institutions, other than family and group day care home sponsoring organizations, where less than two-thirds but no less than one-third of the children enrolled are members of families that satisfy the income standards for free and reduced-price school meals under section 9 of this Act, each State shall receive an amount equal to the sum of the products obtained by multiplying (A) the total number of breakfasts served in the State in these institutions by the sum of the national average payment rate for breakfasts and the national average payment rate for reduced-price breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (B) the total number of lunches and suppers served in the State in these institutions by the sum of the national average payment rate for lunches under section 4 of this Act and the national average payment rate for reduced-price lunches under section 11 of this Act; and (C) the total number of supplements served in the State in these institutions by the national average payment rate for supplements served in such institutions. For the six-month period ending June 30, 1978, the national average payment rate for supplements served in these institutions shall be 18 cents. The Secretary shall prescribe adjustments to this national average payment rate on July 1 and January 1 of each year. Such adjustments shall be computed to the nearest one-fourth cent and shall be based on changes, measured over the most recent six-month period for which data are available, in the series for food away from home of the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers.

"(3) For meals served to children in institutions, other than family and group day care home sponsoring organizations and institutions electing to use the optional reimbursement procedures under subsection (f)(3) of this section, where less than one-third of the enrolled children are members of families that satisfy the income standards for free and reduced-price school meals under section 9 of this Act, each State shall receive an amount equal to the sum of the products obtained by multiplying (A) the total number of breakfasts served in the State in these institutions by the national average payment rate for breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (B) the total number of lunches and suppers served in the State in these institutions by the national average payment rate for lunches under section 4 of this Act; and (C) the total number of supplements served in the State in these institutions by the national average payment rate for supplements in such institutions. For the six-month period ending June 30, 1978, the national average payment rate for supplements served in these institutions shall be 6 cents. The Secretary shall prescribe adjustments to this national average payment rate on July 1 and January 1 of each year. Such adjustments shall be computed to the nearest one-fourth cent and shall be based on changes, measured over the most recent six-month period for which data are available, in the series for food away from home of the Consumer Price Index for All Urban Consumers.

"(4) For meals served to children in institutions electing to use the reimbursement procedures under subsection (f)(3) of this section, each State shall receive assistance in the following manner:

"(A) for meals served to children who are members of families that satisfy the income standards for free school meals in accordance with section 9 of this Act, each State shall receive an amount equal to the sum of the products obtained by multiplying (i) the number of breakfasts served by the sum of the national average payment rate for breakfasts and the national average payment rate for free breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (ii) the number of lunches and suppers served by the sum of the national average payment rate for lunches under section 4 of this Act and the national average payment rate for free lunches under section 11 of this Act; and (iii) the number of supplements served by the national average payment rate for supplements determined under clause (C) of subsection (c)(1) of this section;

"(B) for meals served to children who are members of families that satisfy the income standards for reduced-price school meals in accordance with section 9 of this Act, each State shall receive an amount equal to the sum of the products obtained by mutiplying (i) the number of breakfasts served by the sum of the national average payment rate for breakfasts and the national average payment rate for reduced-price breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (ii) the number of lunches and suppers served by the sum of the national average payment rate for lunches under section 4 of this Act and the national average payment rate for reduced-price lunches under section 11 of this Act; and (iii) the number of supplements served by the national average payment rate for supplements determined under clause (C) of subsection (c)(2) of this section; and

"(C) for meals served to all other children in such institutions, each State shall receive an amount equal to the sum of the products obtained by multiplying (i) the number of breakfasts served to such children by the national average payment rate for breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; (ii) the number of lunches and suppers served to such children by the national average payment rate for lunches under section 4 of this Act; and (iii) the number of supplements served to such children by the national average payment rate for supplements determined under clause (C) of subsection (c)(3) of this section.

"(5) For meals served in family and group day care homes, each State shall receive amounts sufficient to make payments for such meals in accordance with subsection (f)(4) of this section.

"Approval of Institutions

"(d) Any eligible public institution shall be approved for participation in the child care food program upon its request. Any eligible private institution shall be approved for participation if it (1) has tax exempt status under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 or, under conditions established by the Secretary, is moving toward compliance with the requirements for tax-exempt status, or (2) is currently operating a Federal program requiring nonprofit status. Family and group day care homes need not have individual tax exempt certification if they are sponsored by an institution that has tax exempt status or, under conditions established by the Secretary, is moving toward compliance with the requirements for tax-exempt status, or is currently operating a Federal program requiring nonprofit status. An institution applying for participation under this section shall be notified of approval or disapproval in writing within 30 days after the date its completed application is filed. If an institution submits an incomplete application to the State, the State shall so notify the institution within 15 days of receipt of the application, and shall provide technical assistance, if necessary, to the institution for the purpose of completing its application.

"Hearing Procedure

"(e) The State shall provide, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, a fair hearing and a prompt determination to any institution or family or group day care home aggrieved by the action of the State as it affects the participation of such institution or family or group day care home in the program authorized by this section, or its claim for reimbursement under this section.

"Payments to Institutions and Homes

"(f)(1) Funds paid to any State under this section shall be disbursed to eligible institutions by the State in accordance with agreements approved by the Secretary. Disbursements to any institution shall be made only for the purpose of assisting in financing the cost of providing meals to children attending institutions, or in family and group day-care homes. Disbursement to any institution shall not be dependent upon the collection of moneys from participating children. All valid claims from such institutions shall be paid within 45 days of receipt by the State. The State shall notify the institution within 15 days of receipt of the claim if the claim as submitted is not valid because it is incomplete or incorrect.

"(2) The Secretary shall establish maximum per meal reimbursement rates for each of the three categories of institutions specified in subsections (c)(1), (2), and (3) of this section. Such maximum reimbursement rates for lunches and suppers shall be equal to the maximum reimbursement rates established by the Secretary for lunches served under the national school lunch program. The disbursement to any institution for meals provided under this section shall not be less, for any fiscal year, than the sum of the products obtained by multiplying the total number of each type of meal (breakfast, lunch or supper, or supplement) served in such institution in that fiscal year by the applicable national average payment rates for States for each such type of meal at that category of institution, unless the resulting sum exceeds the cost of the institution of providing meals to such children.

"(3) Institutions, other than group and family day care home sponsoring organizations, may elect to receive reimbursement in accordance with the eligibility of each enrolled child for free, reduced-price, or paid meals under section 9 of this Act. Such reimbursement shall be based on the national average payment rates for lunches under section 4 of this Act; the national average payment rates for free lunches and reduced-price lunches under section 11 of this Act; the national average payment rates for breakfasts, free breakfasts, and reduced-price breakfasts under section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966; and the national average payment rates for supplements under subsection (c) of this section. Reimbursements to such institutions shall be made under the same procedures for determining such reimbursement levels as were prescribed by regulations in effect on September 30, 1978.

"(4) Institutions that participate in the program under this section as family or group day care home sponsoring organizations shall be provided, for payment to such homes, a reimbursement factor in an amount determined by the Secretary to be adequate to cover the cost of obtaining and preparing food and prescribed labor costs, involved in providing meals under this section, without a requirement for documentation of such costs. The value of such payments to family or group day care homes shall not be considered to be income or resources (to the family or group day care home operation) under any Federal or State laws, including laws relating to taxation and welfare and public assistance programs. Such institutions shall also receive reimbursement for their administrative expenses. Reimbursement for administrative expenses shall not exceed maximum allowable levels prescribed by the Secretary. Reimbursement for administrative expenses shall also include start-up funds to finance the administrative expenses for such institutions to initiate successful operation under the program. Such start-up funds shall be in addition to other reimbursement to such institutions for administrative expenses. Start-up funds shall be payable to enable institutions satisfying the criteria of subsection (d) of this section, and any other standards prescribed by the Secretary, to develop an application for participation in the program as a family or group day care sponsoring organization or to implement the program upon approval of the application. Such start-up funds shall be payable in accordance with the procedures prescribed by the Secretary. The amount of start-up funds payable to an institution shall be not less than the institution's anticipated reimbursement for administrative expenses under the program for one month and not more than the institution's anticipated reimbursement for administrative expenses under the program for two months.

"(5) By the first day of each month of operation, the State shall provide advance payments for the month to each approved institution in an amount that reflects the full level of valid claims customarily received from such institution for one month's operation. In the case of a newly participating institution, the amount of the advance shall reflect the State's best estimate of the level of valid claims such institutions will submit. If the State has reason to believe that an institution will not be able to submit a valid claim covering the period for which such an advance has been made, the subsequent month's advance payment shall be withheld until the State receives a valid claim. Payments advanced to institutions that are not subsequently deducted from a valid claim for reimbursement shall be repaid upon demand by the State. Any prior payment that is under dispute may be subtracted from an advance payment.

"Meal Service

"(g)(1) Meals served by institutions participating in the program under this section shall consist of a combination of foods and shall meet minimum nutritional requirements perscribed by the Secretary on the basis of tested nutritional research. Such meals shall be served free to needy children.

"(2) No institution may be prohibited from serving a breakfast, lunch, supper, and snacks to any eligible child each day, except in the case of institutions that provide care to schoolchildren outside of school hours.

"(3) No physical segregation or other discrimination against any child shall be made because of his or her inability to pay, nor shall there be any overt identification of any such child by special tokens or tickets, by different meals or meal service, announced or published lists of names, or other means.

"(4) Each institution shall, insofar as practicable, use in its food service foods designated from time to time by the Secretary as being in abundance, either nationally or in the food service area, or foods donated by the Secretary.

"Use of Donated Foods

"(h) The Secretary shall donate agricultural commodities produced in the United States for use in institutions participating in the child care food program under this section. The value of such commodities (or cash in lieu of commodities) donated to each school year shall be, at a minimum, the amount obtained by multiplying the number of lunches and suppers served in participating institutions in that State during that school year by the rate for commodities or cash in lieu thereof established for that school year in accordance with the provisions of section 6(e) of this Act. Any State receiving assistance under this section for institutions participating in the child care food program may, upon application to the Secretary, receive cash in lieu of some or all of the commodities to which it would otherwise be entitled under this subsection. In determining whether to request cash in lieu of commodities, the State shall base its decision on the preferences of individual participating institutions within the State, unless this proves impracticable due to the small number of institutions preferring donated commodities.

"State Plan

"(i) For the child care food program, the State plan required under section 11(e) of this Act shall provide, in addition to other information required by regulation or available from regular reporting:

"(1) the number of institutions and the number of family and group day care homes participating in the program, together with the average daily attendance in such institutions;

"(2) the number of institutions and the number of family and group day care homes in the State that are licensed, approved, or registered or that receive funds under title XX of the Social Security Act (88 Stat. 2337), and the number of such institutions that participate in the program authorized under this section;

"(3) the action program the State proposes to undertake to use the Federal funds provided under this section, including the State's plans to (A) extend the program to all eligible institutions (placing priority on reaching institutions in needy areas first), (B) assist family and group day care homes in obtaining sponsoring organizations, and (C) encourage eligible institutions to participate in the program;

"(4) a plan for the conduct of audits; and

"(5) a plan to monitor program performance and measure progress in achieving program goals.

"Audit Expenses

"(j) The Secretary shall make available for each fiscal year to States administering the child care food program, for the purpose of conducting audits of participating institutions, an amount up to 2 percent of the funds used by each State in the program under this section, during the second preceding fiscal year.

"Agreement Between Sponsoring Organizations and Homes

"(k) The Secretary is authorized to issue regulations directing States to develop and provide for the use of a standard form of agreement between each family and group day care sponsoring organization and the family and group day care homes participating in the program under such organization, for the purpose of specifying the rights and responsibilities of each party.

"Administrative Cost Study

"(l) The Secretary shall study the administrative costs of institutions participating in the program under this section, including the cost effect of such factors as the types of institutions, the number of children served, and the location of institutions in urban or rural areas. The Secretary may prescribe maximum allowable levels for administrative payments that reflect the costs of institutions participating in the program.

"Food Cost Study

"(m) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the food service operations carried out in the program under this section. Such study shall include, but not be limited to (1) an evaluation of meal quality as related to costs; and (2) a determination whether maximum reimbursement levels should be set for food service costs, including whether different reimbursement levels should be established for self-prepared meals and vendored meals, economies of scale, and differences between food service operations in institutions and family and group day care homes.

"Licensing Study

"(n) The Secretary shall conduct a study of licensing problems faced by institutions and family and group day care homes. Such study shall include, but not be limited to, an evaluation of the licensing requirements under this section.

"Report to Congress on Studies

"(o) Of the funds appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, to carry out the purposes of this section, not to exceed $2,000,000 shall be available to the Secretary for the purpose of conducting the studies required under subsections (l), (m), and (n) of this section. The Secretary shall report the results of such studies to Congress, along with any recommendations the Secretary wishes to make, not later than eighteen months after enactment of the Child Nutrition Amendments of 1978.

"Administration by the Secretary

"(p) In any State where the State is not permitted by law or is otherwise unable to disburse the funds payable to it under this section to any institution in the State, the Secretary shall withhold all funds to which such State would be entitled and shall use such funds for the same purposes and subject to the same conditions as are required of a State.

"Food Service Equipment Assistance

"(q)(1) Of the sums appropriated for each fiscal year to carry out the purposes of this section, $6,000,000 shall be available to the Secretary for the purposes of providing equipment assistance to enable institutions to establish, maintain, and expand the child care food program. The Secretary shall allocate among the States during each fiscal year the funds available under this subsection. Such allocation shall be based on the ratio of the number of children below the age of six in each State who are members of families that satisfy the income standards for free and reduced-price school meals under section 9 of this Act to the number of such children in all States. In making such allocation, the Secretary shall use the most recent data available.

"(2) If any State cannot use all of the funds allocated to it under this subsection, the Secretary shall make reallocations to the remaining States in the manner set forth in paragraph (1) of this subsection for allocating funds. Payments to any State of funds allocated under this subsection for any fiscal year shall be made upon condition that at least one-fourth of the cost of equipment financed under this subsection shall be financed from sources within the State, except that this condition shall not apply to equipment obtained for institutions or family or group day care homes that are especially needy, as determined by the State.

"(3) Each State shall establish criteria for determining institutions or family or group day care homes that are especially needy for purposes of this subsection and shall inform all institutions within the State of those criteria. Such criteria shall be submitted to the Secretary for approval and be included in the State plan of operation for the child care food program required by subsection (i) of this section.

"(4) Within 30 days of notification by the Secretary to the State of the amount of funds available under this subsection, the State shall notify institutions of the availability of funds for food service equipment.

The Secretary shall establish standards to assure prompt action by States on requests by institutions or such funds and shall also prescribe a priority system to be followed by States in allocating funds under this subsection.

"(5) The Secretary shall issue regulations authorizing the State to disburse funds under this subsection directly to a supplier of food service equipment if the funds are used to purchase equipment for an institution that (A) meets all requirements for participation under this section, except for licensing requirements, and (B) satisfies all requirements for licensing, except for a requirement for food service equipment. The State shall retain legal title to such equipment until the State and the institution sign an agreement authorizing the institution to participate in the program under this section.

"Training and Technical Assistance

"(r) States participating in the program under this section shall provide sufficient training, technical assistance, and monitoring to facilitate expansion and effective operation of the program, and shall take affirmative action to expand the availability of benefits under this section. Such action, at a minimum, shall include annual notification to each nonparticipating institution or family or group day care home within the State that is licensed, approved or registered, or that receives funds under title XX of the Social Security Act (88 Stat. 2337), of the availability of the program, the requirements for program participation, the availability of food service equipment funds under the program, and the application procedures to be followed in the program. The list of institutions so notified each year shall be available to the public upon request. The Secretary shall assist the States in developing plans to fulfill the requirements of this subsection.

"(s) Expenditures of funds from State and local sources for the maintenance of food programs for children shall not be diminished as a result of funds received under this section.

"(t) States and institutions participating in the program under this section shall keep such accounts and records as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to determine whether there has been compliance with the requirements of this section. Such accounts and records shall be available at all times for inspection and audit by representatives of the Secretary, the Comptroller General of the United States, and appropriate State representatives and shall be preserved for such period of time, not in excess of five years, as the Secretary determines necessary.

"(u) There is hereby authorized to be appropriated for each fiscal year such funds as are necessary to carry out the program authorized by this section.".

Special Supplemental Food Program

SEC. 3. Section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 is amended to read as follows:

SPECIAL SUPPLEMENTAL FOOD PROGRAM

"Declaration of Purpose

"SEC. 17. (a) Congress finds that substantial numbers of pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, infants, and young children from families with inadequate income are at special risk with respect to their physical and mental health by reason of inadequate nutrition or health care, or both. It is, therefore, the purpose of the program authorized by this section to provide, up to the authorization levels set forth in subsection (g) of this section, supplemental foods and nutrition education through any eligible local agency that applies for participation in the program. The program shall serve as an adjunct to good health care, during critical times of growth and development, to prevent the occurrence of health problems and improve the health status of these persons.

"Definitions

"(b) As used in this section—

"(1) 'Administrative costs' means costs that shall include, but not be limited to, costs for certification of eligibility of persons for participation in the program; centrifuges, measuring boards, spectrophotometers, and scales used for such certification; food delivery; monitoring; nutrition education; outreach; start-up costs; and general administration applicable to implementation of the program under this section, such as the cost of staff, warehouse facilities, transportation, insurance, developing and printing food instruments, and administration of State and local agency offices.

"(2) 'Breastfeeding women' means women up to one year postpartum who are breastfeeding their infants.

"(3) 'Children' means persons who have had their first birthday but have not yet attained their fifth birthday.

"(4) 'Competent professional authority' means physicians, nutritionists, registered nurses, dietitians, or State or local medically trained health officials, or persons designated by physicians or State or local medically trained health officials, in accordance with standards prescribed by the Secretary, as being competent professionally to evaluate nutritional risk.

"(5) 'Infants' means persons under one year of age.

"(6) 'Local agency' means a public health or welfare agency or a private nonprofit health or welfare agency, which, directly or through an agency or physician with which it has contracted, provides health services. The term shall include an Indian tribe, band, or group recognized by the Department of the Interior, the Indian Health Service of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, or an intertribal council or group that is an authorized representative of Indian tribes, bands, or groups recognized by the Department of the Interior.

"(7) 'Nutrition education' means individual or group sessions and the provision of materials designed to improve health status, achieve positive change in dietary habits, and emphasize relationships between nutrition and health, all in keeping with the individual's personal, cultural, and socioeconomic preferences.

"(8) 'Nutritional risk' means (A) detrimental or abnormal nutritional conditions detectable by biochemical or anthropometric measurements, (B) other documented nutritionally related medical conditions, (C) dietary deficiencies that impair or endanger health, or (D) conditions that predispose persons to inadequate nutritional patterns or nutritionally related medical conditions, including, but not limited to, alcoholism and drug addiction.

"(9) 'Plan of operation and administration' means a document that describes the manner in which the State agency intends to implement and operate the program.

"(10) 'Postpartum women' means women up to 6 months after termination of pregnancy.

"(11) 'Pregnant women' means women determined to have one or more fetuses in utero.

"(12) 'Secretary' means the Secretary of Agriculture.

"(13) 'State agency' means the health department or comparable agency of each State; an Indian tribe, band, or group recognized by the Department of the Interior; an intertribal council or group that is the authorized representative of Indian tribes, bands, or groups recognized by the Department of the Interior; or the Indian Health Service of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare.

"(14) 'Supplemental foods' means those foods containing nutrients determined by nutritional research to be lacking in the diets of pregnant, breastfeeding, and postpartum women, infants, and children, as prescribed by the Secretary. State agencies may, with the approval of the Secretary, substitute different foods providing the nutritional equivalent of foods prescribed by the Secretary, to allow for different cultural eating patterns.

"Establishment of the Program

"(c)(1) The Secretary is authorized to carry out a special supplemental food program to assist State agencies through grants-in-aid and other means to provide, through local agencies, at no cost, supplemental foods and nutrition education to low-income pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, infants, and children who satisfy the eligibility requirements specified in subsection (d) of this section: Provided, That the State of Florida may continue to determine the price of food instruments by the method in effect on May 1, 1978, at the discretion of that State. The program shall be supplementary to the food stamp program (91 Stat. 958) and to any program under which foods are distributed to needy families in lieu of food stamps.

"(2) Subject to the authorization levels specified in subsection (g) of this section for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1979, and September 30, 1980, and subject to amounts appropriated for this program for the fiscal years ending September 30, 1981, and September 30, 1982—

"(A) the Secretary shall make cash grants to State agencies for the purpose of administering the program, and

"(B) any State agency, approved eligible local agency that applies to participate in or expand the program under this section shall immediately be provided with the necessary funds to carry out the program.

Nothing in this subsection shall be construed to permit the Secretary to reduce ratably the amount of foods that an eligible local agency shall distribute under the program to participants. The Secretary shall take affirmative action to ensure that the program is instituted in areas most in need of supplemental foods. The existence of a commodity supplemental food program under section 1304 of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977 shall not preclude the approval of an application from an eligible local agency to participate in the program under this section nor the operation of such program within the same geographic area as that of the commodity supplemental food program: Provided, That the Secretary shall issue such regulations as are necessary to prevent dual receipt of benefits under the commodity supplemental food program and the program under this section.

"Eligibility of Persons

"(d)(1) Participation in the program under this section shall be limited to any of the following who are determined by a competent professional authority to be at nutritional risk: pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, infants, and children from low-income families.

"(2) The Secretary shall establish income eligibility standards to be used in conjunction with the nutritional risk criteria in determining eligibility of persons for participation in the program. Persons at nutritional risk shall be eligible for the program only if they are members of families that satisfy the income standards prescribed for free and reduced price school meals under section 9 of the National School Lunch Act.

"(3) Persons shall be certified for participation in accordance with general procedures prescribed by the Secretary.

"Nutrition Education

"(e)(1) The State agency shall insure that nutrition education is provided to all pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding participants in the program and to parents or caretakers of infant and child participants in the program. The State agency may also provide nutrition education to pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women and to parents or caretakers of infants and children enrolled at local agencies operating the program under this section who do not participate in the program. The Secretary shall prescribe standards to insure that adequate nutrition education services are provided. The State agency shall provide training to persons providing nutrition education under this section. Nutrition education shall be evaluated annually by each State agency, and such evaluation shall include the views of participants concerning the effectiveness of the nutrition education they have received.

"(2) The Secretary shall, after submitting proposed nutrition education materials to the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare for comment, issue such materials for use in the program under this section.

"Administration

"(f)(1) Each State agency shall annually submit to the Secretary, by a date specified by the Secretary, a plan of operation and administration for approval by the Secretary as a prerequisite to receiving funds under this section. The plan shall include, among such other information as the Secretary may require—

"(A) a description of how the State agency will distribute administrative funds, including startup funds, to local agencies operating under the program;

"(B) a description of the State agency's financial management system;

"(C) a description of methods used to determine nutritional risk;

"(D) a budget for administrative funds;

"(E) the staffing pattern;

"(F) nutrition education goals and action plans, including a description of the methods that will be used to meet the special nutrition education needs of migrants and Indians;

"(G) plans to provide program benefits under this section to eligible migrants and Indians;

"(H) a list of all areas and special populations, in priority order based on relative need, within the jurisdiction of the State agency and the State agency's plans to initiate or expand operations under the program in areas most in need of supplemental foods, including plans to inform nonparticipating local agencies of the availability and benefits of the program and the availability of technical assistance in implementing the program, and a description of how the State agency will take all reasonable actions to identify potential local agencies and encourage such agencies to implement or expand operations under the program within the following year in the neediest one-third of all areas unserved or partially served;

"(I) a description of how the State agency's delivery system will enable low-income persons to receive supplemental foods under this program, in accordance with standards developed by the Secretary;

"(J) the State agency's plans for informing eligible persons of the program under this section in accordance with paragraph (8) of this subsection;

"(K) a description of how the State agency plans to coordinate operations under the program with special counseling services such as, but not limited to, the expanded food and nutrition education program, family planning, alcohol and drug abuse counseling, and child abuse counseling, and with the food stamp program; and

"(L) a copy of the procedure manual developed by the State agency for the program under this section. The Secretary shall not approve any plan that permits any person to participate simultaneously in both the program authorized under this section and the commodity supplemental food program under section 1304 of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977.

"(2) Not less than one month prior to the submission to the Governor of the plan of operation and administration required by this subsection, the State agency shall conduct public hearings to enable the general public to participate in the development of the State agency plan.

"(3) The Secretary shall establish procedures under which eligible migrants may, to the maximum extent feasible, continue to participate in the program under this section when they are present in States other than the State in which they were originally certified for participation in the program. Each State agency shall be responsible for administering the program for migrant populations within its jurisdiction.

"(4) State agencies shall submit monthly financial reports and participation data to the Secretary.

"(5) State and local agencies operating under the program shall keep such accounts and records, including medical records, as may be necessary to enable the Secretary to determine whether there has been compliance with this section and to determine and evaluate the benefits of the nutritional assistance provided under this section. Such accounts and records shall at all times be available for inspection and audit for such period of time, not in excess of five years, as the Secretary determines necessary.

"(6) The State agency, upon receipt of a completed application from a local agency for participation in the program (and the Secretary, upon receipt of a completed application from a State agency), shall notify the applicant agency in writing within 30 days of the approval or disapproval of the application, and any disapproval shall be accompanied by a statement of the reasons for such disapproval. Within 15 days after receipt of an incomplete application, the State agency (or the Secretary) shall notify the applicant agency of the additional information needed to complete the application.

"(7) Local agencies participating in the program under this section shall notify persons of their eligibility or ineligibility for the program within 20 days of the date that the household, during office hours of a local agency, personally makes an oral or written request to participate in the program. The Secretary shall establish a shorter notification period for categories of persons who, due to special nutritional risk conditions, must receive benefits fore expeditiously.

"(8) The State agency shall, in cooperation with participating local agencies, publicize the availability of program benefits, including the eligibility criteria for participation and the location of local agencies operating the program. Such information shall be publicly announced by the State agency and by local agencies at least annually. Such information shall also be distributed to offices and organizations that deal with significant numbers of potentially eligible persons, including health and medical organizations, hospitals and clinics, welfare and unemployment offices, social service agencies, farmworker organizations, Indian tribal organizations, and religious and community organizations in low income areas.

"(9) The State agency shall grant a fair hearing, and a prompt determination thereafter, in accordance with regulations issued by the Secretary, to any applicant, participant, or local agency aggrieved by the action of a State or local agency as it affects participation.

"(10) If a person certified as eligible for participation in the program under this section in one area moves to another area in which the program is operating, that person's certification of eligibility shall remain valid for the period for which the person was originally certified.

"(11) The Secretary shall establish standards for the proper, efficient, and effective administration of the program, including standards that will ensure sufficient State agency staff. If the Secretary determines that a State agency has failed without good cause to administer the program in a manner consistent with this section or to carry out the approved plan of operation and administration under this subsection, the Secretary may withhold such amounts of the State agency's administrative funds as the Secretary deems appropriate: Provided, That upon correction of such failure during a fiscal year by a State agency, any funds so withheld for such fiscal year shall be provided the State agency.

"(12) The Secretary shall prescribe by regulation the supplemental foods to be made available in the program under this section. Use of commercially available products specifically designed for pregnant, postpartum, and breastfeeding women, infants, or children shall be available at the discretion of the Secretary.

"(13) A competent professional authority shall be responsible for (A) prescribing the appropriate supplemental foods, taking into account medical and nutritional conditions and cultural eating patterns, and (B) to the degree possible, assuring that the fat, sugar, and salt content of the prescribed foods is appropriate.

"(14) The State agency shall (A) provide nutrition education materials and instruction in languages other than English and (B) use appropriate foreign language materials in the administration of the program, in areas in which a substantial number of low-income households speak a language other than English.

"Authorization of Appropriations

"(g) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated $550,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $800,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, $900,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1981, and $950,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1982, for the purpose of carrying out the program authorized by this section. Of the sums appropriated for any fiscal year for the program under this section, one-half of 1 percent, not to exceed $3,000,000, shall be available to the Secretary for the purpose of evaluating program performance, evaluating health benefits, and administration of pilot projects, including projects designed to meet the special needs of migrants, Indians, and rural populations.

"Administrative Funds

"(h)(1) The Secretary shall make 20 percent of the funds provided under this section each fiscal year (other than funds expended for evaluation and pilot projects under subsection (g) of this section) available for State agency and local agency administrative costs. When reallocating funds, the Secretary may exceed the 20 percent limitation for administrative costs if the Secretary determines such action necessary for the proper, efficient, and effective administration of the program. Not less than one-fifth of the funds expended by each State agency for administrative costs under this subsection shall be used for nutrition education activities.

"(2) The Secretary, for each of the fiscal years 1979 through 1982, shall allocate administrative funds to each State agency on the basis of a formula determined by the Secretary, which shall include a minimum amount, and which shall be designed to take into account the varying needs of State agencies based on factors such as the number of local agencies and the number of persons participating in the program at those agencies.

"(3) Each State agency shall provide, from its allocation for administrative funds, funds to local agencies for their administrative costs. Each State agency shall distribute administrative funds to local agencies in accordance with allocation standards developed by the State agency in cooperation with the several local agencies, which satisfy allocation guidelines established by the Secretary. Such allocation standards shall take into account factors deemed appropriate to further proper, efficient, and effective administration of the program, such as local agency staffing needs, density of population, number of persons served, and availability of administrative support from other sources. These allocation standards shall be included in the plan of operation and administration required by subsection (f) of this section.

"(4) The State agency shall forward in advance to local agencies those administrative funds necessary for successful commencement of program operations under this section during the three months following approval or until a program reaches its projected caseload level, whichever comes first.

"Distribution of Funds

"(i) By the beginning of each fiscal year, the Secretary shall divide, among the States, the funds provided in accordance with this section on the basis of a formula determined by the Secretary. Each State's allocation, as so determined, shall constitute the State's authorized operational level for that year: Provided, That the Secretary shall reallocate funds periodically if the Secretary determines that a State is unable to spend its allocation. For purposes of the formula, if Indians are served by the health department of a State, the formula shall be based on the State population inclusive of the Indians within the State boundaries. If Indians residing in the State are served by a State agency other than the health department of the State, the population of the tribes within the jurisdiction of the State being so served shall not be included in the formula for such State, and shall instead be included in the formula for the State agency serving the Indians. Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, the Secretary may use a portion of a State's allocation to purchase supplemental foods for donation to the State under this section.

"Annual Report on Migrants

"(j) By October 1 of each year, the Secretary shall prepare a report describing plans to ensure that, to the maximum extent feasible, eligible members of migrant populations continue to participate in the program as such persons move among States. The report shall be made available to the National Advisory Council on Maternal, Infant, and Fetal Nutrition.

"National Advisory Council on Maternal, Infant, and Fetal Nutrition

"(k)(1) There is hereby established a National Advisory Council on Maternal, Infant, and Fetal Nutrition (referred to in this subsection as the "Council") composed of twenty members appointed by the Secretary. One member shall be a State director of a program under this section; one member shall be a State official responsible for a commodity supplemental food program under section 1304 of the Food and Agriculture Act of 1977; one member shall be a State fiscal officer of a program under this section (or the equivalent thereof); one member shall be a State health officer (or the equivalent thereof); one member shall be a local agency director of a program under this section in an urban area; one member shall be a local agency director of a program under this section in a rural area; one member shall be a project director of a commodity supplemental food program; one member shall be a State public health nutrition director (or the equivalent thereof); one member shall be a representative of an organization serving migrants; one member shall be an official from a State agency predominantly serving Indians; three members shall be parent participants of a program under this section or of a commodity supplemental food program; one member shall be a pediatrician; one member shall be an obstetrician; one member shall be a representative of a nonprofit public interest organization that has experience with and knowledge of the special supplemental food program; two members shall be officials of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare appointed by the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare; and two members shall be officials of the Department of Agriculture appointed by the Secretary.

"(2) Members of the Council appointed from outside the Department of Agriculture and the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare shall be appointed for terms not exceeding three years. State and local officials shall serve only during their official tenure, and the tenure of parent participants shall not exceed two years. Persons appointed to complete an unexpired term shall serve only for the remainder of such term.

"(3) The Secretary shall designate a Chairman and a Vice Chairman. The Council shall meet at the call of the Chairman, but shall meet at least once a year. Eleven members shall constitute a quorum.

"(4) The Council shall make a continuing study of the operation of the program under this section and related programs to determine how the program may be improved. The Council shall submit once every two years to the President and Congress, beginning in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1980, a written report, together with its recommendations on such program operations.

"(5) The Secretary shall provide the Council with such technical and other assistance, including secretarial and clerical assistance, as may be required to carry out its functions.

"(6) Members of the Council shall serve without compensation but shall be reimbursed for necessary travel and subsistence expenses incurred by them in the performance of the duties of the Council: Provided, That parent participant members of the Council, in addition to reimbursement for necessary travel and subsistence, shall, at the discretion of the Secretary, be compensated in advance for other personal expenses related to participation on the Council such as child care expenses and lost wages during scheduled Council meetings.

"Purchase and Distribution of Commodities

"(l) Foods available under section 416 of the Agriculture Act of 1949, including, but not limited to, dry milk, or purchased under section 32 of the Act of August 24, 1935, may be donated by the Secretary, at the request of a State agency, for distribution to programs conducted under this section. The Secretary is also authorized to purchase and distribute, at the request of a State agency, supplemental foods for donation to programs conducted under this section, with appropriated funds, including funds appropriated under this section.".

REDUCED-PRICE REIMBURSEMENTS

SEC. 4. The fifth sentence of section 11(a) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by striking out "10" and inserting in lieu thereof "20", and by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof the following: ": Provided, That if in any State all schools charge students a uniform price for reduced-price lunches, and such price is less than 20 cents, the special assistance factor prescribed for reduced-price lunches in such State shall be equal to the special assistance factor for free lunches reduced by either 10 cents or the price charge for reduced-price lunches in such State, whichever is greater".

USING COMMODITY PRICES FOR COMMODITY INDEXES

SEC. 5. (a) Section 3 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 is amended by striking out "series of food away from home of the Consumer Price Index" and inserting in lieu thereof "Producer Price Index for Fresh Processed Milk".

(b) Section 6(e) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by striking out "the series for food away from home of the Consumer Price Index published by the Bureau of Labor Statistics of the Department of Labor." and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "the Price Index for Food Used in Schools and Institutions. The index shall be computed using five major food components in the Bureau of Labor Statistics' Producer Price Index (cereal and bakery products, meats, poultry, and fish, dairy products, processed fruits and vegetables, and fats and oils. Each component shall be weighted using the same relative weight as determined by the Bureau of Labor Statistics. The value of food assistance for each meal shall be adjusted each July 1 by the annual percentage change in a three-month simple average value of the Price Index for Foods Used in Schools and Institutions for March, April, and May each year."

(c) Section 11(a) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by inserting "for All Urban Consumers" after "Consumer Price Index".

(d) Section 13(b)(1) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by inserting "for All Urban Consumers" after "Consumer Price Index".

SCHOOL BREAKFAST EXPANSION PROGRAM

Combined Allocation for Breakfast and Lunch

SEC. 6. (a)(1) Section 12 of the National School Lunch Act is amended by adding at the end theerof a new subsection (h) as follows:

"(h) No provision of this Act or of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 shall require any school receiving funds under this Act and the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 to account separately for the costs incurred in the school lunch and school breakfast programs. In no event, however, shall reimbursement to schools exceed the net cost of operating both the lunch and breakfast programs, taking into account the total costs and total incomes of both programs.".

Equipment Assistance

(b) Section 5 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 is amended by—

(1) striking out $40,000,000" the second time it appears in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof "$75,000,000";

(2) inserting after "schools without a food service program" in the fourth sentence of subsection (b) the following: ", schools that do not serve both breakfasts and lunches but that will use food service equipment to initiate the service of breakfasts or lunches,";

(3) amending the last sentence of subsection (b) as read as follows: "After making funds available to such schools, the Secretary shall make the remaining funds available to eligible schools that do not meet the priority criteria, for the purpose of purchasing needed replacement equipment.";

(4) striking out "without the facilities to prepare and cook hot meals or receive hot meals" the first time that phrase appears in subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof "that do not serve breakfasts or lunches but that plan to use food service equipment to initiate a breakfast or lunch program";

(5) striking out "without the facilities to prepare and cook hot meals or receive hot meals" all other times that phrase appears in subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof "moving toward the initiation of the service of breakfasts"; and

(6) striking out "33⅓" in subsection (e) and inserting in lieu thereof "40".

Especially Needy

(c) The first sentence of section 4(d) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 is amended to read as follows: "Each State educational agency shall establish eligibility standards for providing additional assistance to schools in severe need, including those schools in which the service of breakfasts is required under State law, and those schools, as defined in section 12(d)(6)(A) of the National School Lunch Act, in which—

"(1) for the school year beginning July 1, 1979, not less than 50 percent,

"(2) for the school year beginning July 1, 1980, not less than 45 percent,

"(3) for the school year beginning July 1, 1981, and all school years thereafter, not less than 40 percent, of the lunches served to students, during the second preceding school year, were served free or at a reduced price, and in which the rate per meal established by the Secretary is insufficient to cover the costs of the breakfast program.".

STATE ADMINISTRATIVE EXPENSES

SEC. 7. (a) Section 7(a) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 is amended to read as follows:

"SEC. 7. (a)(1) Each fiscal year, the Secretary shall make available to the States for their administrative costs an amount equal to not less than 1½ percent of the Federal funds expended under sections 4, 11, and 17 of the National School Lunch Act and 3, 4, and 5 of this Act during the second preceding fiscal year. The Secretary shall allocate the funds so provided in accordance with subsections 2, 3, and 4 of this section. There is hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums as may be necessary to carry out the purposes of this section.

"(2) The Secretary shall allocate to each State for administrative costs incurred in any fiscal year in connection with programs authorized under the National School Lunch Act or under this Act, except for the programs authorized under section 13 or 17 of the National School Lunch Act or under section 17 of this Act, an amount equal to not less than 1 percent and not more than 1½ percent of the funds expended by each State under sections 4 and 11 of the National School Lunch Act and sections 3, 4, and 5 of this Act during the second preceding fiscal year. In no case shall the grant available to any State under this subsection be less than the amount such State was allocated in the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978, or $100,000, whichever is larger.

"(3) The Secretary shall allocate to each State for its administrative costs incurred under the program authorized by section 17 of the National School Lunch Act in any fiscal year an amount, based upon funds expended under such program in the second preceding fiscal year, equal to (A) 20 percent of the first $50,000, (B) 10 percent of the next $100,000, (C) 5 percent of the next $250,000, and (D) 2½ percent of any remaining funds. The Secretary may adjust any State's allocation to reflect changes in the size of its program.

"(4) The remaining funds appropriated under this section shall be allocated among the States by the Secretary in amounts the Secretary determines necessary for the improvement in the States of the administration of the programs authorized under the National School Lunch Act and this Act, except for section 17 of this Act, including, but not limited to, improved program integrity and the quality of meals served to children.

"(5) Funds available to States under this subsection and under section 13(k)(1) of the National School Lunch Act shall be used for the costs of administration of the programs for which the allocations are made, except that States may transfer up to 10 percent of any of the amounts allocated among such programs.

"(6) Where the Secertary is responsible for the administration of programs under this Act or the National School Lunch Act, the amount of funds that would be allocated to the State agency under this section and under section 13(k)(1) of the National School Lunch Act shall be retained by the Secretary for the Secretary's use in the administration of such programs.".

State Administrative Expenses for Summer Feeding

(b) Section 13(k)(1) of the National School Lunch Act is amended to read as follows:

"(k)(1) The Secretary shall pay to each State for its administrative costs incurred under this section in any fiscal year an amount equal to (A) 20 percent of the first $50,000 in funds distributed to that State for the program in the preceding fiscal year; (B) 10 percent of the next $100,000 distributed to that State for the program in the preceding fiscal year; (C) 5 percent of the next $250,000 in funds distributed to that State for the program in the preceding fiscal year, and (D) 2½ percent of any remaining funds distributed to that State for the program in the preceding fiscal year: Provided, That such amounts may be adjusted by the Secretary to reflect changes in the size of that State's program since the preceding fiscal year.".

INCOME POVERTY GUIDELINES

SEC. 8. Section 9(b)(1) of the National Lunch Act is amended by—

(1) amending the second sentence to read as follows: "The income poverty guidelines shall be the nonfarm income poverty guidelines prescribed by the Office of Management and Budget adjusted annually pursuant to section 625 of the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, as amended (42 U.S.C. 2971d): Provided, That the income poverty guidelines for the period commencing July 1, 1978, shall be made as up to date as possible by multiplying the nonfarm income poverty guidelines for 1977 by the change between the average 1977 Consumer Price Index and the Consumer Price Index of March 1978, using the most current procedures that have been used by the Office of Management and Budget. The income poverty guidelines for future periods shall be similarly adjusted."; and

(2) amending the fifth sentence to read as follows: "The income guidelines for free lunches shall be prescribed at 25 percent above the applicable family size income levels in the income poverty guidelines prescribed by the Secretary.".

STUDY ON FOOD CHOICE

SEC. 9. The National School Lunch Act is amended by adding at the end thereof a new section 22 as follows:

"SEC. 22. As a means of diminishing waste of foods without endangering nutritional integrity of meals served, the Secretary shall conduct a study to determine the cost and feasibility of requiring schools to offer a choice of menu items within the required meal patterns. This study shall, as a minimum, include different needs and capabilities of elementary and secondary schools for such a requirement. The Secretary shall develop regulations designed to diminish such waste based on the results of this study.".

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 10. (a) Section 12 of the National School Lunch Act is amended by adding at the end thereof new subsections (f) and (g) as follows:

"(f) In providing assistance for school breakfasts and lunches served in Alaska, Guam, and American Samoa, the Secretary shall establish appropriate adjustments for each such State to the national average payment rates prescribed under sections 4 and 11 of this Act and section 4 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, to reflect the differences between the costs of providing lunches and breakfasts in those States and the costs of providing lunches and breakfasts in all other States.

"(g) Whoever embezzles, willfully misapplies, steals, or obtains by fraud any funds, assets, or property that are the subject of a grant or other form of assistance under this Act or the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, whether received directly or indirectly from the United States Department of Agriculture, or whoever receives, conceals, or retains such funds, assets, or property to his use or gain, knowing such funds, assets, or property have been embezzled, willfully misapplied, stolen or obtained by fraud shall, if such funds, assets, or property are of the value of $100 or more, be fined not more than $10,000 or imprisoned not more than five years, or both, or if such funds, assets, or property are of a value of less than $100, shall be fined not more than $1,000 or imprisoned for not more than one year, or both.".

(b) Section 12(d)(7) of the National School Lunch Act is amended to read as follows:

"(7) 'School year' means the annual period from July 1 through June 30.".

(c) Section 15(e) of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 is amended to read as follows:

"(e) 'School year' means the annual period from July 1 through June 30.".

(d) Section 19 of the Child Nutrition Act is amended by adding, at the end thereof, the following:

"(k) Notwithstanding any other provision in law, the Secretary is directed to review and reconsider from time to time any approvals granted for the use of alternate foods as exceptions to the basic meal pattern requirements established for the child nutrition programs pursuant to this Act and the National School Lunch Act, and, if the Secretary determines that such alternate foods no longer fulfill their original purposes, or that such foods are not an integral part of a nutritionally sound diet or contravene currently accepted nutrition education principles, the Secretary shall revoke any previous approvals of such alternate foods: Provided, That no alternate food item shall be presented to substitute for more than one food component in the basic meal requirement.".

EFFECTIVE DATE

SEC. 11. The provisions of this Act, except sections 4, 5, and 8, shall become effective October 1, 1978. The provisions of section 4 of this Act shall become effective January 1, 1979. The provisions of sections 5 and 8 of this Act shall become effective July 1, 1979: Provided, That the Secretary may make the necessary changes in the income poverty guidelines for the special supplemental food program under section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 not earlier than October 1, 1978, and not later than July 1, 1979.

IMPLEMENTATION

SEC. 12. (a) The Secretary shall promulgate regulations to implement the provisions of section 3 of this Act within ninety days of the date of enactment of this Act.

(b) The provisions of section 17 of the National School Lunch Act and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966, in effect prior to the effective date of sections 2 and 3 of this Act, which are relevant to current regulations of the Secretary governing the child care food program and the special supplemental food program, respectively, shall remain in effect until such regulations are revoked, superseded, amended, or modified by regulations issued under those sections as amended by sections 2 and 3 of this Act.

(c) Pending proceedings under section 17 of the National School Lunch Act and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 shall not be abated by reason of any provision of sections 2 and 3 of this Act, but shall be disposed of pursuant to the applicable provisions of section 17 of the National School Lunch Act and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 in effect prior to the effective date of sections 2 and 3 of this Act.

(d) Appropriations made available to carry out section 17 of the National School Lunch Act and section 17 of the Child Nutrition Act of 1966 shall be available to carry out the provisions of sections 2 and 3 of this Act.

SCHOOL LUNCH PROGRAM, PILOT COST AND FEASIBILITY PROGRAMS

SEC. 13. Section 20 of the National School Lunch Act is amended by—

(1) inserting before the period at the end of the first sentence of subsection (c) the following: ", except for the pilot projects conducted under subsection (d) of this section"; and

(2) adding at the end thereof a new subsection (d) as follows:

"(d)(1) The Secretary may conduct pilot projects in up to 14 school districts or other appropriate units), of which not more than one may be located in any administrative region of the Food and Nutrition Service of the Department of Agriculture, for the purpose of determining the feasibility, cost and other consequences of providing lunches free to all children, without regard to the income of the children's families, during the school year beginning July 1, 1979.

"(2) The Secretary shall reimburse school food authorities participating in a pilot project under this subsection for all lunches served to children on the same basis that the Secretary normally provides for lunches served to children meeting the eligibility requirements for free lunches under section 9 of this Act.

"(3) The Secretary shall submit to the appropriate committees of the Senate and the House of Representatives a report on the pilot projects conducted under this subsection no later than six months after the conclusion of such projects.

"(4) There are hereby authorized to be appropriated such sums, as are necessary for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1978, for the purpose of conducting an evaluation of such pilot projects conducted under this subsection and for the purpose of making additional payments for lunches served to children (beyond what the school food authorities would otherwise be expected to receive under sections 4 and 11 of this Act) to school food authorities participating in pilot projects.".

PURCHASES FISH PRODUCTS FOR SCHOOL LUNCHES

SEC. 14. Section 6(e) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by inserting after the words "high protein foods, meat, and meat alternatives" the words "(which may include domestic seafood commodities and their products)".

SEC. 15. Section 14(a)(1) of the National School Lunch Act is amended by inserting after the words "customarily purchased under such section" the words "(which may include domestic seafood commodities and their products".

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make technical and clerical corrections in the engrossment of S. 3085.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. CANNON). Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The second assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CHATTAHOOCHEE RIVER NATIONAL RECREATION AREA

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask that the Senate proceed to the consideration of H.R. 8336.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Under the previous order, the Senate will now proceed to the consideration of H.R. 8336, which the clerk will report.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

Calendar No. 743, a bill (H.R. 8336) to enhance the outdoor recreation opportunities for the people of the United States by expanding the National Park System, by providing access to and within areas of the National Park System, and for other purposes.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill, which had been reported from the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources with an amendment to strike all after the enacting clause and insert the following:

That the Congress finds the natural, scenic, recreation, historic, and other values of a forty-eight-mile segment of the Chattahoochee River and certain adjoining lands in the State of Georgia from Buford Dam downstream to Peachtree Creek are of special national significance, and that such values should be preserved and protected from developments and uses which would substantially impair or destroy them. In order to assure such preservation and protection for public benefit and enjoyment, there is hereby established the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area (hereinafter referred to as the "recreation area"). The recreation area shall consist of the river and its bed together with the lands, waters and interests therein within the boundary generally depicted on the map entitled "Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area," numbered CHAT-20,000, and dated July 1976, which shall be on file and available for public inspection in the office of the National Park Service, Department of the Interior. The Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") may make minor revisions in the boundary of the recreation area to delete tracts that would involve significant severance damages to remaining lands, to delete lands having valuable improvements that would be of little or no benefit to the receration area, to encompass severed lands and to accommodate technical and operational considerations, except that the total area within the recreation, area, exclusive of the river and its bed may not exceed six thousand three hundred acres.

SEC. 2. (a) Within the recreation area the Secretary is authorized to acquire lands, waters, and interests therein by donation, purchase, with donated or appropriated funds, or exchange. Property owned by the State of Georgia or any political subdivision thereof may be acquired only by donation. The Secretary may refrain from purchase of tracts of land or portions thereof used or to be used for other than noncommercial residential purposes if the owner shall, within one year of the date of enactment of this Act, enter into an agreement with the Secretary assuring that such property shall be used under such terms and conditions as the Secretary, in his discretion, may describe for the preservation and protection of the recreation area.

(b) Except for property which the Secretary determines to be necessary for the purposes of administration, development, access, or public use, an owner of improved property which is used solely for noncommercial residential purposes on the date of its acquisition by the Secretary may retain, as a condition of such acquisition, a right of use and occupancy of the property for such agricultural or residential purposes. The right retained may be for a definite term which shall not exceed twenty-five years or, in lieu thereof, for a term ending at the death of the owner or the death of the spouse, whichever occurs later. The owner shall elect the term to be retained. The Secretary shall pay the owner the fair market value of the property on the date of such acquisition less the fair market value of the term retained by the owner.

(c) Any right of use and occupancy retained pursuant to this section may, during its existence, be conveyed or transferred, but all rights of use and occupancy shall be subject to such terms and conditions as the Secretary deems appropriate to assure the use of the property in accordance with the purposes of this Act. Upon his determination that the property, or any portion thereof, has ceased to be so used in accordance with such terms and conditions, the Secretary may terminate the right of use and occupancy by tendering to the holder of such right an amount equal to the fair market value, as of the date of the tender, of that portion of the right which remains unexpired on the date of termination.

(d) As used in this section the term "improved property" means a detached, year-around noncommercial residential dwelling the construction of which was begun before January 1, 1975, together with so much of the land on which the dwelling is situated, the said land being in the same ownership as the dwelling, as the Secretary shall designate to be reasonably necessary for the enjoyment of the dwelling for the sole purpose of noncommercial residential use, together with any structures accessory to the dwelling which are situated on the land so designated.

SEC. 3. (a) The Secretary shall administer, protect, and develop the recreation area in accordance with the Act of August 25, 1916 (39 Stat. 535), and in accordance with any other statutory authorities available to him for the conservation and management of historic and natural resources, including fish and wildlife, to the extent he finds such authority will further the purposes of this Act. In developing and administering the recreation area the Secretary shall take into consideration applicable Federal, State, and local recreation plans and resource use and development plans, including, but not limited to, the Atlanta Regional Commission Chattahoochee Corridor Study, dated July 1972.

(b) The Secretary is authorized and encouraged to enter into cooperative agreements with the State or its political subdivisions whereby he may assist in the planning for and interpretation of non-Federal publicly owned lands within or adjacent or related to the recreation area to assure that such lands are used in a manner consistent with the findings and purposes of this Act.

(c) In planning for the development and public use of the recreation area, the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of the Army to assure that public use of adjacent or related water resource development or flood control projects and that of the recreation area are complementary.

(d) In administering the recreation area the Secretary shall permit fishing on waters under his jurisdiction in accordance with applicable State and Federal laws, except that he may designate zones where, and establish periods when, no fishing shall be permitted for reasons of public safety, administration, or public use and enjoyment and issue such regulations as he may determine to be necessary to carry out the provisions of this subsection. Except in emergencies, any rules and regulations of the Secretary pursuant to this subsection shall be put into effect only after consultation with the appropriate State agency.

SEC. 4. (a) The Federal Power Commission shall not license the construction of any dam, water conduit, reservoir, powerhouse, transmission line, or other project works under the Federal Power Act (16 U.S.C. 791a et seq.), on or directly affecting the recreation area and no department or agency of the United States shall assist by loan, grant, license, or otherwise in the construction of any water resources project that would have a direct and adverse effect on the values for which such area is established, except where such project is determined by the State of Georgia to be necessary for water supply or water quality enhancement purposes and authorized by the United States Congress. Nothing contained in the foregoing sentence, however, shall preclude licensing of, or assistance to, developments upstream or downstream from the recreation area or on any stream tributary thereto which will not invade the recreation area or unreasonably diminish the scenic, recreational, and fish and wildlife values present therein on the date of approval of this Act. Nothing contained in this subsection shall preclude the upgrading, improvement, expansion or development of facilities or public works for water supply or water quality enhancement purposes if such action would not have a material adverse effect on the values for which the recreation area is established.

(b) No department or agency of the United States shall recommend authorization of any water resources project that would have a direct and adverse effect on the values for which such area is established, as determined by the Secretary, nor shall such department or agency request appropriations to begin construction of any such project, whether heretofore or hereafter authorized, without at least sixty days in advance, (a) advising the Secretary in writing of its intention to do so and (b) reporting to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate the nature of the project involved and the manner in which such project would conflict with the purposes of this Act or would affect the recreation area and the values to be protected by it under this Act.

(c) Nothing in this Act shall be construed in any way to require the manipulation or reduction of the lake water levels in Lake Sidney Lanier nor to restrict, prohibit or affect any recommendation of the Metropolitan Atlanta Water Resources Study as authorized by the Public Works Committee of the United States Senate on March 2, 1972.

SEC. 5. (a) There is hereby established the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area Advisory Commission (hereafter referred to as the "Commission") which shall be composed of nine members to be appointed by the Secretary for terms of five (5) years as follows:

(1) Six members to be appointed from recommendations submitted by the Governor of the State of Georgia, two of which shall be residents of the Chattahoochee River Corridor Area, and two of which shall be from the membership of Georgia conservation groups;

(2) One member to be appointed from a recommendation submitted by the Secretary of the Army; and

(3) Two members to be appointed from recommendations submitted by the Atlanta Regional Commission.

(b) The Commission shall terminate ten years from the date of establishment of the recreation area.

(c) A vacancy in the Commission shall not affect its powers, but shall be filled in the same manner as the original appointment (and for the balance of the unexpired term). The Chairman of the Commission shall be designated by the Secretary.

(d) The Commission shall act and advise by affirmative vote of a majority of its members.

(e) The Secretary or his designee shall from time to time, but at least semiannually, consult with the Commission with respect to matters relating to the development of the recreation area.

(f) Members of the Commission shall serve without compensation as such. The Secretary is authorized to pay the expenses reasonably incurred by the Commission in carrying out its responsibilities under this Act upon presentation of vouchers signed by the Chairman.

SEC. 6. (a) The Secretary may not expend more than $72,900,000 from the Land and Water Conservation Fund for land acquisition nor more than $500,000 for the development of essential facilities: Provided, That no funds for the development of essential facilities shall be authorized prior to October 1, 1978.

(b) Within three years from the effective date of this Act, the Secretary shall, after consulting with the Governor of the State of Georgia, develop and transmit to the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives and to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate a general management plan for the use and development of the recreation area consistent with the findings and purposes of this Act, indicating:

(1) lands and interests in lands adjacent or related to the recreation area which are deemed necessary or desirable for the purposes of resource protection, scenic integrity, or management and administration of the area in furtherance of the purposes of this Act, the estimated cost of acquisition, and the recommended public acquisition agency;

(2) the number of visitors and types of public use within the recreation area that can be accommodated in accordance with the full protection of its resources; and

(3) the facilities deemed necessary to accommodate and provide access for such visitors and uses, including their location and estimated cost.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Dan Dreyfus, Tom Williams, and Laura Beaty of the Energy Committee staff have floor privileges during consideration and voting on H.R. 8336.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, will the Senator yield for a unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ABOUREZK. Yes.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Gordon Giffin of my staff be accorded the privilege of the floor during the debate on this measure.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABOUREZK. I ask unanimous consent that Marcia Wolf of Senator WILLIAMS' staff be given the same privileges.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, H.R. 8336 as ordered reported from the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee would authorize the establishment of the Chattahoochee National Recreational Area in the State of Georgia.

The Chattahoochee River rises in northern Georgia and flows through the heart of the Atlanta metropolitan area. H.R. 8336, as reported, would designate a 48-mile stretch of this river from the existing Buford Dam downstream to Peachtree Creek, as a National Recreation Area (NRA) to be managed by the National Park Service. The Secretary would have the authority to acquire approximately 6,300 acres of land along the river for the purpose of protecting significant recreational, historical, and ecological values, as well as providing access to the river for the millions of Americans who enjoy the Chattahoochee each year.

Mr. President, I think it is important to note that the State of Georgia has already made a concerted effort to preserve and protect this valuable resource. Since enacting the Metropolitan River Protection Act in 1973, the State has been able to keep the river corridor free of development and the river itself free of pollution. In terms of public use and recreation, the State and local governments have moved forward with an acquisition program for key tracts of prime land within the river corridor. The State has acquired some 1,000 acres of this land but some 5,300 prime acres remain to be acquired according to a comprehensive plan prepared by the State and the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation in 1976. H.R. 8336 will provide the funds necessary to acquire this critical land.

Mr. President, the legislation before us today provides an opportunity to protect a stretch of river which is perhaps the most heavily used recreation river in the Nation. The measure enjoys the support of the State of Georgia, the administration, various environmental and conservation associations, and nine of the ten members of the Georgia congressional delegation including Senator NUNN and Senator TALMADGE.

The version of H.R. 8336 reported by the Energy and Natural Resources Committee is virtually identical to the version which passed the House by a vote of 273 to 79. The committee agreed to incorporate some technical amendments suggested by the Department with regard to formulation of a final official boundary map for the area. The committee also agreed to adopt a provision included in the Senate version of this legislation, S. 1791, sponsored by my good friend from Georgia, Mr. NUNN, which provides for the creation of a Citizens Advisory Commission which will provide an opportunity for increased public input into the management of the Chattahoochee NRA.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to join in support of this important legislation.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, if the Senator will yield, I have an amendment which I would propose at this time.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I reserve the remainder of my time.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1466

(Purpose: To permit hunting in the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area)

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Georgia (Mr. NUNN) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1466.

Mr. NUNN. I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 14, line 17, strike out "fishing on waters" and insert in lieu thereof "hunting and fishing on lands and waters".

On page 14, line 20, insert "hunting or" after "no".

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, this is a very simple amendment. To my knowledge, national parks, as a general rule contain boiler plate language authorizing hunting and fishing within the boundaries of the area, subject to limitation by the Secretary of Interior. The Chattahoochee bill, as reported from committee, provides the standard language regarding fishing, however, it omits the standard authorization for hunting.

While I do not believe that there will be a high incidence of hunting activity within the confines of the proposed Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area, I believe that it is unwise to depart from the traditional treatment of this issue. My amendment would simply add the standard hunting language to the bill while retaining the usual discretionary authority in the Secretary for limitation of this activity as he deems necessary.

Mr. President, I have talked to the manager of the bill about this proposal, and I do not believe there will be objections from the committee on this amendment.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, we have discussed this proposal, and we have no objection; and I am sure the minority side has none.

Mr. NUNN. We have also discussed this with the minority staff. I do not believe the minority has an objection. I ask for a vote on the amendment.

Mr. ABOUREZK. We are ready to vote.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment of the Senator from Georgia.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. TALMADGE. Mr. President, I am very pleased to have this opportunity to express my strong support for the passage of the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area legislation. This proposal, which I am cosponsoring along with Senator Nunn, will be of great benefit to the people of Georgia and the Nation and will make possible the proper protection and utilization of one of our Nation's unique natural resource areas.

This legislation is the culmination of several years of diligent work and cooperative efforts by the Atlanta Regional Commission, the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, the North Georgia Mountain Authority, and the U.S. Department of the Interior. In addition, local citizens' groups and public officials have contributed greatly to the movement to preserve the scenic and historic Chattahoochee River corridor. I would particularly like to commend my distinguished colleague from Georgia, SAM NUNN, for his efforts in seeing that the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area is established.

Mr. President, with proper care and management, the 48-mile stretch of the Chattahoochee River within the proposed national recreation area will provide valuable recreational and educational benefits to the people of Georgia and the Nation, both now and for generations to come. In this age of vanishing natural resources and surroundings, we must not pass up this golden opportunity to protect and preserve the Chattahoochee River corridor as an area which offers significant natural and recreational resource possibilities. The Chattahoochee River Area has the potential to become one of our Nation's most valued urban parks. I encourage my Senate colleagues to support this legislation in order that this most worthwhile project may become a reality.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I want to express my appreciation to the distinguished senior Senator from Georgia, who has been a dedicated sponsor of this proposal for a long time.

I am extremely pleased that the Senate is about to take one of the final steps in what has been an extended journey toward preserving a unique natural resource, the Chattahoochee River. In an age of urban crowding, it is increasingly important that we preserve the available open spaces in and near our large cities for recreational use. The preservation and protection of parklands and recreation areas throughout the Nation is becoming increasingly important as more and more Americans seek to participate in travel and outdoor activties. The History of the effort to preserve the 48-mile stretch of the Chattahoochee River from Buford Dam to Peachtree Creek is a long one and involves the efforts of many individuals who are dedicated to the task of preventing the loss of this area's natural and histroic character.

The Chattahoochee begins as a small mountain stream in northeast Georgia, following southwesterly across the State where it enters Lake Lanier and is impounded by Buford Dam. The river then continues southerly, passing by the northwest boundary of Metropolitan Atlanta and forms the boundary for the States of Alabama and Georgia, eventually flowing into the Apalachicola River in Florida and emptying into the Gulf of Mexico. Much of the lower portion of the river has been dammed to form a succession of reservoirs.

The proposed national recreation area extends for 48 miles from Buford Dam to Peachtree Creek, near the center of Atlanta. On September 14, 1970, the Secretary of the Interior selected this area, along with 13 other major areas as having recreation potential in a metropolitan setting. The Bureau of Outdoor Recreation, cooperating with other Federal, State, and local agencies, completed a study of this section of the river which was published under the title, "The Chattahoochee Recreation Area Study."

Beginning in the late 1960's and reaching a peak in 1971 when the Georgia General Assembly proposed legislation to place the river under the protection of a State agency, there has been considerable State, local government, and private citizen interest in planned recreational use and preservation of the Chattahoochee. In July of 1972, the Atlanta Regional Commission, a State planning agency, in cooperation with the North Georgia Mountain's Authority and aided by a grant from the Department of Housing and Urban Development, published the Chattahoochee corridor study proposing controlled development along the river. This plan called for areas of private and public land ownership, and recommended public acquisition of 6,000 acres along with planned unit developments of privately owned lands. Subsequently, then Georgia Governor Jimmy Carter, worked with the Atlanta Regional Commission and local citizen's groups to draft legislation which would implement this concept.

In September of 1972, approval of a $1.89 million land and water conservation fund grant helped establish a 377-acre Chattahoochee Palisade's State Park. To date, over 900 acres of land bordering the river, with a value in excess of $14 million, are publicly owned.

The 1973 session of the Georgia General Assembly passed the Metropolitan River Protection Act to regulate development within 2,000 feet of the river. This act now requires review by local governments and the Atlanta Regional Commission of any proposed changes in land or water use within the corridor.

In September of 1975, representatives of the National Park Services Advisory Board on National Parks, Historic Sites, Buildings and Monuments, visited the proposed recreation area, examining various sites along the river's banks, floating a 2-mile stretch of the river, and overflying the entire area from Standing Peachtree to Lake Sidney Lanier.

As a result of this visit, the Advisory Board submitted a report to the Secretary of the Interior in which they made the following statement:

The Subcommittee was extremely impressed with the natural beauty of the area, particularly since much of the most attractive portions of the River are within the city limits of Atlanta. The Chattahoochee is a unique resource; it obviously must be protected from the multitude of possible immediate encroachments, and it offers an extraordinary possibility to serve the recreation needs of the area. Presently, with no management at all, and often requiring citizens to violate private property, the River is extensively used. Atlanta public transportation and the interstate highway system provide easy access to the River for people in a five state area. Twenty percent of present usage is from outside the Atlanta area, and half of that from outside the State of Georgia. The subcommittee was in agreement that the Chattahoochee Corridor more than met the established criteria for national recreation areas, and that private and state facilities for development have been exhausted. The Board thus recommends that the National Park Service proceed with the necessary preliminary study, building on the work of the Bureau of Outdoor Recreation, the Georgia Department of Natural Resources, and Friends of the River, with the intent of adding to the system the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area.

During the 93d Congress, I introduced legislation, S. 1738, cosponsored by Senator TALMADGE, which would have accomplished the creation of the national recreation area contemplated by the bill which we are considering today. Field hearings, chaired by Senator BENNETT JOHNSTON, were conducted on S. 1738, by the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs in Atlanta on October 28, 1974. In the 94th Congress, I introduced similar legislation in the form of S. 661 and S. 2587, a bill to create a Chattahoochee Urban Recreation Area. These bills were the subject of hearings in the Interior Committee's Subcommittee on Parks and Recreation on October 30, 1975, and the Senate subsequently passed S. 2587 in September of 1976. Unfortunately, while the companion measure in the House, H.R. 3078, was reported by the House Interior Committee in 1976, final action on this legislation in the House of Representatives did not come prior to the adjournment of the 94th Congress. Our efforts in this regard were renewed in both bodies in the 95th Congress. Hearings were conducted in the House and Senate last year; the House passed H.R. 8336 on February 14, 1978; and the Senate Energy and Natural Resources Committee favorably reported the bill on May 11 of this year.

Mr. President, this is a synopsis of the events which have taken place to date concerning the effort to preserve a 48-mile stretch of the Chattahoochee. At this point, I would like to mention a few of the reasons which caused me to believe that we should proceed with the formal steps necessary to designate this area as a national recreation area and provide the necessary funds to accomplish its preservation.

This 48-mile stretch of the river should be preserved and protected due to its natural, scenic, historic, educational, and recreational values. It is important, not only to the State of Georgia, but also to the entire Nation. While this is, to some extent, a subjective evaluation, there are several facts which support such a conclusion. According to the 1972 Census of Transportation published by the Commerce Department, half of all trips taken by Americans have a metropolitan area as their destination. This fact is of particular significance to this discussion because of the fact Atlanta is the hub of the South. Due to the intersection of I–75 and I–85 in Metropolitan Atlanta, virtually all north-south vacation traffic passes within view of the Chattahoochee. In a 1972 travel research study on Georgia highways and vacation/recreation travel, the University of Georgia division of research estimated that the average vacation/recreation traffic volume on I–75 from Tennessee to Atlanta in 1970 was 4,000 cars per day. On I–85 from South Carolina to Atlanta, the average was 3,100 cars. More important, however, is the estimation that within 25 years the traffic on the I–75 corridor will reach 9,400 cars per day, while I–85 will produce traffic in the range of 6,200 cars per day. It is important to recognize that these figures represent only vacation/recreation related traffic.

Lake Lanier, which marks the beginning point of the proposed recreation area, has the largest visitation of any Army Corps of Engineer's project anywhere in the United States. The 13.8 million individuals who visited the lake in 1975 also represented a larger visitation than at any single unit in the national parks system.

The seven county area which would be touched by the proposed recreation area currently has a population of in excess of 1.6 million persons. The Georgia Office of Planning and Budget estimates that within 25 years, the population will easily exceed 2 million and represent approximately 35 percent of Georgia's population.

During the summer as many as 10,000 people have been surveyed to be using the Chattahoochee River for recreation on each weekend day. At least 20 percent of these users originate from areas outside of Metropolitan Atlanta and half of these people are from out of State. This volume will certainly increase in the future as Americans continue to seek out natural areas for recreation. It is also important to recognize that this volume of individuals generally must obtain access to the river through privately owned property. In addition to providing a recreational outlet for citizens from outside the Atlanta metropolitan area, this stretch of river provides a vital outlet for the residents of the urban areas in Atlanta.

I want to emphasize my belief that this area possesses the requisite recreational potential, national significance, local significance, and historical importance, and natural significance to warrant designation as a national recreation area. Few, if any metropolitan centers have such a major natural resource which can still be a preserved. As then candidate Jimmy Carter said in a July letter to the chairman of the Interior Committee's Subcommittee on Parks and Recreation, Senator JOHNSTON, and I quote:

I am so convinced of the national significance of urban parks of this type (referring to the Chattahoochee River) and their role in creating equality of life for urban Americans. * * *

While some portions of the corridor have already been acquired through such means as Federal land and water conservation grants, donation, and States funds, this form of "holding action" cannot be expected to prevent deterioration of this resource much longer. We must proceed with an organized preservation effort pursuant to the Atlanta Regional Commission study and a recently completed concept plan developed by the Georgia Department of Natural Resources in cooperation with the Atlanta Regional Commission and local citizen's groups.

Mr. President, I believe that it is essential that we act expeditiously in order to insure that this rare resource is appropriately preserved for the benefit of Georgians and all Americans. Expeditious action would also be in the best interest of all affected property owners in order to clarify the future of their holdings. As I said 4 years ago upon the initial introduction of legislation on this subject, at a time when open space continues to disappear under concrete blankets and high-rise complexes, the preservation of an area of natural beauty, such as the Chattahoochee, for the future enjoyment of generations of Americans should be top priority.

Mr. President, I would just like to take this opportunity to thank a few people who have worked diligently on this matter for a long time. I would like to express my appreciation to Glen Davis, on Governor Busbee's staff, and also to Laura Beatty and to Tom Williams of the committee staff, who have spent a great number of hours looking into the details of this legislation, and have been of immeasurable assistance in bringing the measure to the floor.

Also, I would like to thank the thousands of people in the State of Georgia, particularly people in the Atlanta area, the Cobb County area, who have spent untold hours in terms of their efforts to protect this asset for future generations. Particularly I thank Barbara Blum and Kay McKenzie who have adopted the Chattahoochee River as a top priority of theirs in both their professional and personal lives for a long time, and who have led the effort to preserve this asset for future generations.

I first became acquainted with the efforts to preserve the Chattahoochee through Barbara and by Kay who had formed the Friends of the River. This organization has led the way in doing a masterful job in presenting information to the legislature of the State of Georgia and to the U.S. House of Representatives and the U.S. Senate as to the overall significance of this project.

I add my deep appreciation to them for their leadership in this regard.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, will the Senator yield?

Mr. NUNN. I yield.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, may I ask if there are any Senators who expect to request a rollcall vote in relation to this bill or in relation to any amendments thereto?

Mr. NUNN. I do not suggest that there be a rollcall vote.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Then I will ask the cloakrooms to advise Senators that there will be no further rollcall votes today. Is that agreeable?

Very well. I thank the Senators.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I also express my deep gratitude to Congressman ELLIOTT LEVITAS, who has been here on the floor today, and who has played a key role in the House of Representatives on the early passage of this legislation. I would like to thank him for the extraordinary job he has done in this regard and in many other ways.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1467

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I send to the desk an unprinted amendment and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1467.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

At the end of the Act add the following new title:

TITLE II

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SECTION 201. (a) The Congress hereby finds that—

(1) the purpose of the national park system is to preserve outstanding natural, scenic, historic, and recreation areas for the enjoyment, education, inspiration, and use of all people;

(2) units of the national park system have recently been established near major metropolitan areas in order to preserve remaining open space and to provide recreational opportunities for urban residents (many of whom do not have access to personal motor vehicles); and

(3) circumstances which necessarily require people desiring to visit units of the national park system to rely on personal motor vehicles may diminish the natural and recreational value of such units by causing traffic congestion and environmental damage, and by requiring roads, parking, and other facilities in ever-increasing numbers and density.

(b) The purpose of this Act is to make the national park system more accessible in a manner consistent with the preservation of parks and the conservation of energy by encouraging the use of transportation modes other than personal motor vehicles for access to units of the national park system with minimum disruption to nearby communities through authorization of a pilot transportation program.

SEC. 202. (a) The Secretary of the Interior (hereinafter referred to as "Secretary") is authorized to formulate transportation plans and implement transportation projects where feasible pursuant to those plans for units of the national park system.

(b) To carry out the purposes of subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary is authorized to—

(1) contract with public or private agencies or carriers to provide transportation services, capital equipment, or facilities to improve access to units of the national park system;

(2) operate such services directly in the absence of suitable and adequate agencies or carriers;

(3) acquire by purchase, lease, or agreement, capital equipment for such services; and

(4) where necessary to carry out the purposes of this Act, acquire by lease, purchase, donation, exchange, or transfer, lands, waters, and interests therein which are situated outside the boundary of a unit of the national park system, which property shall be administered as part of the unit: Provided, That any land or interest in land owned by a State or any of its political subdivisions may be acquired only by donation:

Provided, further, That any land acquisition shall be subject to such statutory limitations, if any, on methods of acquisition and appropriations thereof as may be specifically applicable to such area.

(c) Acquisitions pursuant to subsection (b) (3) and (4) shall become final within sixty days (not counting days on which the Senate or the House of Representatives has adjourned for more than three consecutive days) from the time the Secretary has submitted a detailed proposal for such acquisitions to the Committee on Energy and National Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives in the absence of a concurrent resolution of objection.

(d) All fees collected in the operation of the facilities and services authorized by this Act shall be covered into the Planning, Development, and Operation of Recreation Facilities appropriation account to be subject to appropriation.

(e) The Secretary shall establish information programs to inform the public of available park access opportunities and to promote the use of transportation modes other than personal motor vehicles for access to and travel within the units of the national park system.

(f) Transportation facilities and services provided pursuant to this Act shall not be considered as concession facilities or services within the meaning of the Act of October 9, 1965 (79 Stat. 969) and may be undertaken by the Secretary directly or by contact without regard to any requirement of local, State, or Federal law respecting determinations of public convenience and necessity or other similar matters: Provided, That the Secretary or his contractor shall consult with the appropriate state or local public service commission or other such body having authority to issue certificates of convenience and necessity, and any such contractor shall be subject to applicable requirements of such body unless the Secretary determines that such requirements would not be consistent with the purposes and provisions of the Act.

(g) No grant of authority in this Act shall be deemed to expand the exemption of section 203(b)(4) of the Interstate Commerce Act (49 U.S.C. 303(b)(4)).

SEC. 203. (a) To carry out the purposes of this Act, the Secretary of Transportation, the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Secretary of Health, Education, and Welfare, and the Secretary of Commerce, and the heads of such other Federal departments or agencies as the Secretary deems necessary are directed to assist the Secretary in the formulation and implementation of transportation projects.

(b) Within one hundred and eighty days from the enactment of this Act, the Secretary shall prepare and submit to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the House of Representatives, a compilation of Federal statutes and programs providing authority for the planning, funding, or operation of transportation projects which might be utilized by the Secretary to carry out the purpose of this Act. The Secretary shall revise the compilation thereafter as he deems necessary.

SEC. 204. (a) The Secretary shall, during the formulation of any transportation plan authorized pursuant to section 2 of this Act—

(1) give public notice of intention to formulate such a plan by publication in the Federal Register and in a newspaper or periodical having general circulation in the vicinity of the affected unit of the national park system; and

(2) following such notice hold a public meeting at a location or locations convenient to the affected unit of the national park system.

(b) Prior to the implementation of any project developed pursuant to the transportation plan formulated pursuant to subsection (a) of this section, the Secretary shall—

(1) establish procedures, including but not limited to public meetings, to give State and local governments and the public adequate notice and an opportunity to comment on the proposed transportation project; and

(2) submit, when the proposed project would involve an expenditure in excess of $100,000 in any fiscal year, a detailed report to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources of the United States Senate and the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs of the United States House of Representatives. The Secretary shall proceed with the implementation of such plan after sixty days (not counting days on which the Senate or House of Representatives has adjourned for more than three consecutive days) in the absence of a concurrent resolution of objection.

SEC. 205. The Secretary shall submit a report to the Congress, within three years of the effective date of this Act. The report shall include, but not be limited to, his findings and recommendations regarding—

(a) preservation of natural resource values within units of the national park system through access alternatives;

(b) effects of the projects on communities in close proximity to the units of the national park system; and

(c) future transportation projects formulated pursuant to this Act.

SEC. 206. In carrying out the purposes of this Act, there is hereby authorized to be appropriated $1,000,000 for fiscal year 1979; $2,000,000 for fiscal year 1980; and $3,000,000 for fiscal year 1981, which shall remain available until expended.

Mr. WILLIAMS. Mr. President, this amendment would add a new title II to H.R. 8336, as ordered reported. My amendment is identical to the language of S. 975—the so-called National Parks Access Act—which passed the Senate unanimously on May 19, 1978.

On July 20, the House Interior Committee completed a hearing on S. 975. In order to expedite passage of this measure in the House of Representatives, I am offering this amendment to the House-passed bill, H.R. 8336, which we are now considering. I believe that this will provide the House with an opportunity to act expeditiously on both of these proposals.

The amendment I am proposing is designed to improve public access to our national parks and recreation areas.

Mr. President, I would like to take a moment to express my great gratitude to the distinguished Senator from South Dakota and chairman of the Subcommittee on Parks and Recreation (Mr. ABOUREZK). His leadership and his perseverance are responsible for bringing this amendment before the Senate. It is largely due to his efforts that the administration has recently announced its support for S. 975, which is the language of this amendment.

I would also like to thank the able chairman of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, our good friend from the State of Washington (Mr. JACKSON), and the distinguished sponsor of H.R. 8336 (Mr. NUNN) for their efforts on behalf of this amendment.

Mr. President, I urge my colleagues to lend their support to H.R. 8336, and to my amendment, which will help preserve the national park system, while giving more people the opportunity to enjoy it.

The problem the amendment addresses is one that afflicts new urban recreation areas, such as Gateway, and traditional older parks, such as Yellowstone, alike. It is the bane of those who want maximum protection of the parks and those who want maximum use of the parks. The problem is our overreliance on the automobile for park access. Excessive use of cars causes air pollution and other environmental damage, as more and more precious parkland is devoted to roads and parking lots. Traffic congestion on access roads adversely impacts local communities and detracts from the visitor's enjoyment of the park. It also represents a wasteful and unnecessary use of our energy resources.

About 90 to 95 percent of all visitors to the national park system arrive by car. This reliance on cars for park access is perpetuated by current Federal policy. The Federal Government pays for construction and maintenance of highways leading to national parks. But it does not provide for any alternative means of getting there. People who do not have cars—particularly the poor, the elderly, the young, and the handicapped—are thus denied the opportunity to enjoy their country's natural splendors.

For all these reasons, we need to develop, provide, and promote alternatives to the automobile for travel to and within the national park system. Just as public transit has provided an alternative means of transportation in our cities, it can provide an alternative means of access to the parks.

An extensive network of bus, rail and air routes serves our Nation's cities and towns. Various public transit services have already been instituted by the National Park Service within the boundaries of certain parks. What is lacking in many cases is a transit link between the two systems—a shuttle bus from an airport or a train station to a park; a ferry from a mass transit stop at a city dock to a seaside or lakeside park. In some cases, existing intercity or commuter services could be modified slightly to accommodate park visitors. In others, a park-and-ride service could link outlying parking lots to points within a park.

This could be accomplished at minimal cost. But it would take planning and coordination which is now lacking.

The amendment before us today would authorize the Secretary of the Interior to undertake a 3-year pilot program to plan and implement park access projects. In planning these projects, the Secretary would consult with other relevant Federal departments and agencies, and provide an opportunity for State and local governments and the general public to participate.

The amendment would authorize the expenditure of $6 million on these transportation projects over the 3-year period. An expenditure on any one project of over $100,000 a year would be subject to review by the appropriate congressional committees.

Mr. President, I believe the support Senator NUNN has given this title has been most helpful in obtaining passage.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, I thank the Senator for his comment, though I will not take all the credit.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Will the Senator allow me to compliment him also?

Mr. NUNN. I would be most honored.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. May I say the Senator is not sui generis in that one respect.

Mr. NUNN. I thank the Senator.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, we have no objection to this amendment. The Senate has already passed it in this form.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, there is no objection from the minority.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. SPARKMAN. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1468

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I send an amendment to the desk and ask for its immediate consideration.

The PRESIDING OFFICER (Mr. SASSER). The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from Kansas (Mr. DOLE) proposes an unprinted amendment numbered 1468.

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, I ask that further reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

Amend H.R. 8336 by adding a new Title III.

TITLE III

SEC. 301. Section 4 of the Act approved August 31, 1965 (79 Stat. 588), as amended, providing for the commemoration of certain historical events in the State of Kansas, is further amended by changing "$2,000,000." to "$2,750,000.".

Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, this amendment has been discussed with the floor managers of the bill.

This amendment would raise the authorization ceiling for the commemoration of certain historical events in the State of Kansas from the current ceiling of $2 million to $2,750,000.

Although the amendment calls for an authorization increase of $750,000—all that is needed to complete old Fort Scott is an appropriation of $346,000. The reason for this is that under the heritage bill passed last year old Fort Scott received $404,000 above the $2 million ceiling as a part of the appropriations provided in the heritage bill.

Therefore, in order to secure the $346,000, the authorization ceiling must be raised to the level of $2,750,000. The fact that the appropriation for this project has extended the authorization is not unique—Fort Scott is one of 29 projects that, under the terms of the heritage bill, was provided funding above the authorization ceiling.

I wish to make clear the fact that this $346,000 will complete the project.

Mr. President, I yield back the remainder of my time.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, we have discussed this amendment. We agree to accept this amendment in title III.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the amendment.

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the amendment was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Third reading, Mr. President.

Mr. NUNN. Mr. President, before we go to third reading, let me express my deep appreciation to Senator ABOUREZK for all the assistance he has rendered on this bill and also to Senator HANSEN, who is not in the Chamber today, for his great cooperation. Particularly, I wish to thank Senator JACKSON, who has not only helped us this year on this legislation but who actually came down to Georgia and looked at the Chattahoochee River several years ago and has been a real leader for preserving this asset for Georgia and for all America.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, third reading.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended.

The committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute, as amended, was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on the engrossment of the amendment and third reading of the bill.

The amendment was ordered to be engrossed and the bill to be read a third time.

The bill was read the third time.

The bill (H.R. 8336) was passed.

The title was amended so as to read:

An act to authorize the establishment of the Chattahoochee River National Recreation Area in the State of Georgia, and for other purposes.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TOWER. Mr. President, I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendment to the title is agreed to.

Mr. ABOUREZK. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Secretary of the Senate be authorized to make technical and clerical corrections in the engrossment of H.R. 8336 and the Senate's amendments thereto.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

ROUTINE MORNING BUSINESS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that there now be a period for the transaction of routine morning business and that Senators may be permitted to speak up to 5 minutes each during that period.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

MESSAGES FROM THE PRESIDENT

Messages from the President of the United States were communicated to the Senate by Mr. Chirdon, one of his secretaries.

EXECUTIVE MESSAGE REFERRED

As in executive session, the Presiding Officer laid before the Senate a message from the President of the United States submitting the nomination of W. K. Smith, of Minnesota, to be Chairman of the Board of Directors of the U.S. Railway Association, which was referred to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation.

MESSAGES FROM THE HOUSE

At 12:11 a.m., a message from the House of Representatives delivered by Mr. Hackney, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House has passed the following bill in which it requests the concurrence of the Senate:

H.R. 15. An act to extend and amend expiring elementary and secondary education programs, and for other purposes.

At 3:19 p.m., a message from the House of Representatives delivered by Mr. Berry, one of its reading clerks, announced that the House insisits upon its amendment to the bill (S. 3040) to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to extend the authorization of appropriations for an additional fiscal year, to provide for public consideration and implementation of a rail passenger service study, and for other purposes, disagreed to by the Senate; agrees to the conference requested by the Senate on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon; and that Mr. STAGGERS, Mr. ROONEY, Mr. METCALFE, Ms. MIKULSKI, Mr. FLORIO, Mr. DEVINE, and Mr. SKUBITZ were appointed managers of the conference on the part of the House.

HOUSE BILLS PLACED ON THE CALENDAR

The following bill was read twice by its title and placed on the calendar:

H.R. 15. An act to extend and amend expiring elementary and secondary education programs, and for other purposes.

COMMUNICATIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following communications, together with accompanying reports, documents, and papers, which were referred as indicated:

EC–4017. A communication from the Administrator, Energy Information Administration, Department of Energy, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on changes in the market shares of the statutory categories of retail gasoline marketers; to the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources.

EC–4018. A communication from the Chairman of the Council on Environmental Quality, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report on chemical information classification, storage, and retrieval; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works.

EC–4019. A communication from the President of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, the third annual report of executive branch activities; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–4020. A communication from the Comptroller General of the United States, transmitting, pursuant to law, a report entitled "Federal Compensation Comparability: Need for Congressional Action"; to the Committee on Governmental Affairs.

EC–4021. A communication from the U.S. Commissioner of Education, Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, transmitting, pursuant to law, notice of interpretation for absorption provision in the impact aid program for Public Law 81–874, as amended by Public Law 93–380.

PETITIONS

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following petitions and memorials, which were referred as indicated:

POM–760. A joint resolution adopted by the legislature of the State of California; to the Committee on Commerce, Science, and Transportation:

"ASSEMBLY JOINT RESOLUTION NO. 61

"Whereas, An area of over 4,500 square miles has risen five to 10 inches since 1961 along a section of the San Andreas fault where major earthquakes have historically occurred and are likely to occur in the future; and

"Whereas, There is uncertainty about the specific location and mechanism of possible earthquakes in such section of the San Andreas fault and in other areas of California which similarly face potential earthquakes; and

"Whereas, The full implications of the uplift and other manifestations of earthquakes are unclear, but serve as a forceful reminder of the constant threat of damaging earthquakes in California; and

"Whereas, In California, there are several tens of thousands of hazardous buildings which constitute a significant danger to life; the strengthening or abatement of which are beyond the financial resources of local and state government; and

"Whereas, The California Seismic Safety Commission recently held hearings in Palmdale on the uplift and other manifestations of earthquakes and advised the Legislature of their implications for public safety; now, therefore, be it

"Resolved by the Assembly and Senate of the State of California, jointly, That the Legislature of the State of California finds that while the significance of the uplift and other manifestations of earthquakes is not fully understood, they should be considered as forceful reminders of the possible threat to public safety and welfare; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Legislature of the State of California hereby respectfully memorializes the Congress of the United States to ensure that adequate funds are allocated pursuant to the implementation plan for the National Earthquake Hazards Reduction Act to meet the highest priority needs for earthquake hazard mitigation in California, including the following:

"(1) Providing local government with financial and technical assistance in the evaluation of non-earthquake-resistant buildings.

"(2) Providing financial and technical assistance to evaluate the vulnerability of areas subject to earthquake damage and to improve disaster plans, training, public education, and other emergency preparedness measures.

"(3) Assisting in the organization and support of intergovernmental reconstruction planning programs for areas subject to major earthquakes for the purpose of accelerating recovery, minimizing social and economic disruption, and avoiding the creation of future hazards.

"(4) Accelerating the publication of regional and local maps showing faults and other geologic hazards, expected ground motion, and probable damage patterns.

"(5) Assisting in the establishment by the appropriate scientific organizations of a reliable and timely system for the prediction of damaging earthquakes in California; and be it further

"Resolved, That the Chief Clerk of the Assembly transmit copies of this resolution to the President and Vice President of the United States, to the Speaker of the House of Representatives, and to each Senator and Representative from California in the Congress of the United States."

POM–761. A concurrent resolution adopted by the legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Agriculture, Nutrition, and Forestry:

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION NO. 195

"Whereas, the American farmer has long enjoyed the distinction of being the most productive farmer in the world; and

"Whereas, the tremendous productivity of the American farmer has enabled the United States to become both the best fed nation in the world and a principal exporter of food stuffs to less fortunate countries; and

"Whereas, in recent years foreign nationals and aliens have been purchasing agricultural land in this country at ever increasing rates; and

"Whereas, the purchase of agricultural lands by foreign nationals and aliens results in the holding of these lands by absentee landlords who often hold these lands for speculative and other nonagricultural uses; and

"Whereas, this trend of events has caused great alarm among the citizens of Louisiana and of the other states, particularly in the farm community.

"Therefore, be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Louisiana, the Senate thereof concurring, that the United States Congress is hereby memorialized to take such actions as are necessary to conduct an in-depth investigation and determine the amount of agricultural lands owned by foreign nationals or aliens and its present and potential effect upon the public welfare and safety of this great nation, with a view to determining whether and to what extent the protection of the agricultural land holdings of United States citizens which are vitally important to the continued prosperity of this great nation require congressional action.

"Be it further resolved that a copy of this Resolution shall be transmitted to the presiding officers of the Senate and the House of Representatives of the United States Congress and to each member of the Louisiana delegation in Congress."

POM-762. A concurrent resolution adopted by the Legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Finance:

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 34

"Whereas, the marketability of American produced foods is a vital domestic concern; and

"Whereas, the promotion of economic independence as well as the general welfare of the United States is furthered by this country's supplying more of its own needs; and

"Whereas, economic incentives to the American food producers to compete with the influx of imports from foreign food markets should be provided; and

"Whereas, the incidence of bacterial contamination, inadequate labeling of weight and contentts, and unavailability of lots for sampling which accompanies the imported seafoods presents hazards to the health of the American consumer; and

"Whereas, the amount of shrimp imported over the requisite supply of imported shrimp for American consumption has been as high as 240% and is currently 40%; and

"Whereas, the price paid for foreign shrimp steadily undercuts the price needed for operation of American fleets; and

"Whereas, the bankruptcy of yet another American market may be prevented by stabilizing the supply and demand of this commodity.

"Therefore, be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Louisiana, the Senate thereof concurring, that the Congress of the United States and the President of the United States are hereby memorialized to take the following measures to stabilize the American Shrimping Industry and to protect the health of the American consumer:

"1. Place restrictions on the amount of shrimp imported from foreign markets so that American-produced shrimp will sell for an adequate price on the American commodities markets.

"2. Mandate that foreign shrimp sold or offered for sale in America be identified as to their point of origin on the label of the package in letters placed under the brand name.

"3. In consideration of legislative provisions which would regulate the labeling of imported shrimp, impose a severe fine on shrimp processors who do not obey such regulations.

"Be it further resolved that copies of this Resolution shall be transmitted to the President of the Senate and the speaker of the House of Representatives of the United States, to the Louisiana Delegation in Congress, and to President Jimmy Carter."

---

POM-763. A concurrent resolution adopted by the legislature of the State of Louisiana; to the Committee on Environment and Public Works:

"HOUSE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION No. 168

"Whereas, the United States is currently facing a shortage in the supply of energy necessary to meet all of our industrial, commercial and private needs; and

"Whereas, the United States government has not yet developed a sound responsible energy development policy which will provide for the innovative exploitation of alternative energy sources; and

"Whereas, the dependence of our nation on foreign energy supplies has not only stimulated inflation within our own economy but international erosion of the monetary strength of the American dollar due to our balance of payments deficit largely occasioned by our importing of hydrocarbons; and

"Whereas, the need is great to develop renewable, reliable, environmentally safe forms of energy production; and

"Whereas, the Old River Control Structure on the Mississippi River currently directs thirty percent of the Mississippi River discharge volume into the Atchafalaya River and would be an ideal location for the construction of a hydroelectric facility.

"Therefore, be it resolved by the House of Representatives of the Legislature of Louisiana, the Senate thereof concurring, that the legislature does hereby memorialize the Congress of the United States to take necessary action to direct the United States Army Corps of Engineers to make river dams and control structures and river waters available to private business for the building of electric generating plants and to establish as the first location available therefor the Old River Control Structure on the Mississippi River.

"Be it resolved that copies of this Resolution be forwarded to all members of the Louisiana congressional delegation and to the clerk of the House of Representatives and to the secretary of the Senate of the United States Congress."

INTRODUCTION OF BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

The following bills and joint resolutions were introduced, read the first time and, by unanimous consent, the second time, and referred as indicated:

By Mr. LONG:

S. 3329. A bill to suspend the duty on mixtures of mashed or macerated hot red peppers and salt until the close of June 30, 1981; to the Committee on Finance.

By Mr. CULVER (for himself and Mr. NELSON):

S. 3330. A bill to provide that agencies consider alternative regulatory proposals in the promulgation of agency rules, regulations, and reporting requirements; and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CULVER:

S. 3331. A bill to provide fees and costs to prevailing parties in certain administrative proceedings and civil actions involving the United States and to increase the quality of agency decisionmaking through public participation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CURTIS:

S. 3332. A bill to permit the importation of a leopard skin; to the Committee on Finance.

STATEMENTS ON INTRODUCED BILLS AND JOINT RESOLUTIONS

By Mr. LONG.

S. 3329. A bill to suspend the duty on mixtures of mashed or macerated hot red peppers and salt until the close of June 30, 1981; to the Committee on Finance.

DUTY SUSPENSION ON RED PEPPERS AND SALT

Mr. LONG. Mr. President, I am today introducing legislation which would suspend temporarily the duty on imports of mixtures of mashed or macerated hot red peppers and salt. The suspension would be for the period from the date of enactment of the act through June 30, 1981. This legislation would basically apply to imports from certain developing countries, in particular Mexico, which are to my knowledge the only countries which now export this product to the United States. Imports from countries other than Mexico now receive duty-free treatment under the generalized system of preferences. Imports of the pepper mix from Mexico received GSP until this year.

This legislation would help producers of tabasco and similar hot pepper sauces to hold the line against inflationary pressures.

It is my understanding that this bill would not harm any American producer of the peppers about which we are talking. The McIlhenny Co.—the producer of tabasco—has had to import these peppers, because there simply are not enough of these peppers produced in the United States. I assume that other sauce manufacturers have had the same problem.

Indeed, I am not aware of any objections to this bill. The hearings which will be held on this bill should confirm this.

By Mr. CULVER (for himself and Mr. NELSON):

S. 3330. A bill to provide that agencies consider alternative regulatory proposals in the promulgation of agency rules, regulations, and reporting requirements; and for other purposes; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

By Mr. CULVER:

S. 3331. A bill to provide fees and costs to prevailing parties in certain administrative proceedings and civil actions involving the United States and to increase the quality of agency decisionmaking through public participation; to the Committee on the Judiciary.

REGULATORY REFORM LEGISLATION

● Mr. CULVER. Mr. President, today I am introducing two bills designed to correct some of the problems arising from the application of Federal Government rulemaking to small businesses, small organizations, small governmental jurisdictions, and individuals of limited resources.

The first measure, the Regulatory Flexibility and Reform Act, results from the information obtained from hearings and discussions on S. 1974, which Senator NELSON and I introduced on August 1, 1977. The scope of the legislation I am introducing today has been expanded to cover broader aspects of the regulatory problem not addressed by S. 1974. It amends chapter 5 of title 5 of the U.S. Code to require that Federal agencies assure that their rulemaking has the least adverse effect on organizations with limited resources. It affords to those affected by agency rulemaking an opportunity to suggest alternative regulations to lessen the burden on individuals and small businesses. The agencies must consider such proposals and justify the final rules adopted, stating reasons for rejecting alternate proposals having less adverse economic impact.

The adoption of a recordkeeping or reporting requirement applicable to at least 100,000 persons is made subject to the same requirements as agency rulemaking. This provision makes many Federal Government forms available for public review and comment before they are adopted.

The bill is consistent with the goals endorsed by the President when he promulgated Executive Order 12044 last March, which established similar requirements for the executive branch, and legislatively expands the scope of such requirements to include independent regulatory agencies.

The second bill, the Regulatory Fairness Act, provides that individuals with limited resources and organizations of limited size that prevail over an agency in an administrative adjudication or in litigation may be awarded attorneys fees and other reasonable costs of participation in the dispute, if the agency, as a party to the dispute, took a position that was arbitrary, frivolous, unreasonable or groundless. A hearing necessitated by an unreasonable failure or refusal of the agency to take appropriate action in a timely manner, or, by an unreasonable agency interpretation of existing law is also subject to this provision. It is similar in some respects to S. 2354 now pending in the Committee on the Judiciary.

Together, these two bills are designed to ease the burden of Federal regulation on small organizations whose problems are sometimes inadequately considered in rulemaking and who are otherwise unable to pursue their legal rights because of limited resources. In an increasingly interrelated and complex economy where legitimate social and economic goals often conflict, some Government regulation is necessary and agencies do not customarily abuse their authority in promulgating or enforcing regulations. These bills will not deter Federal agencies from carrying out their responsibilities forcefully and effectively nor will they punish agencies for failing to prevail in a reasonable dispute. Rather, the intent is to require the Federal Government to develop regulations which are consistent with the capabilities of those being regulated, without any loss in regulatory effectiveness, and to make agencies more aware of the economic effects of regulation on small firms, municipalities and other organizations of limited size.

In the three decades since the Administrative Practices Act regularized the process of Federal rulemaking and gave to the public both guarantees of access and procedural safeguards, the scope of regulatory activity has expanded greatly. The number of regulatory agencies and the number of Federal employees engaged in regulatory activities has increased during this period and the areas under regulatory jurisdiction have proliferated dramatically. Between 1970 and 1974, the number of pages of regulations printed in the Federal Register more than doubled, from 20,036 pages to over 42,422 pages a year. In 1977, 7,031 final rules were printed in the Federal Register; in the first 5 months of 1978, another 2,939 final rules have been printed. Federal regulations touch almost every person and organization in the United States.

In many instances, agency rulemaking affects small organizations, such as small businesses, disproportionately because of their limited size. Regulations which are reasonable when applied to large organization can become oppressive to smaller ones. In fact, the cost of compliance with Government regulations has become a major expense to small business. In a survey conducted by the National Federation of Independent Business last January, 12 percent of the responding firms named it as their greatest problem; only taxes and inflation were cited more often. Just 4 years ago, six other elements—taxes, inflation, quality of labor, fuel and material shortages, competition from large businesses and interest rates and financing difficulties—were named at least as often as Government regulations as major problems facing small business.

The general practice followed by many regulatory agencies of issuing uniform regulations for businesses of all sizes magnifies these problems several fold. This occurs even though reasonable alternatives which would avoid undue hardships on small organizations without substantially reducing the effectiveness regulations are available in many cases. One such alternative, "tiering" sets varying levels of compliance responsibility according to the size of the regulated organization. In addition, other agencies have established a minimum-size level below which certain regulations do not apply. I recognize that alternative regulations are not feasible in certain cases, particularly where health and safety are concerned. But, agencies should fully examine the effects of rulemaking and weigh alternatives prior to promulgating regulations.

The Regulatory Fairness Act deals with another set of problems arising from Federal regulatory activities. Under present law a party in litigation or involved in an adjudicatory action with the Government must pay its costs and fees even when the Government's position in the dispute is blatantly wrong or unreasonable. A person or business ensnarled in the conflicting demands of two or more Federal agencies may be forced to spend substantial attorneys fees to determine which agency's requirements must be followed. In other cases, agencies have failed to take legally required actions until forced to act by lawsuit. It is unfair to put on the victim the financial burden of correcting or resisting Government abuse. This legislation addresses this shortcoming by placing that expense where it belongs: on the offending agency.

Federal regulatory powers are not unlimited. But agencies are able to extend their powers past their legal limits because of the vast resources they can bring to bear in enforcement proceedings. Many individuals and small organizations cannot afford the attorney's fees and other costs necessary to participate in hearings or court proceedings to correct such abuses. Small businesses may be coerced because, right or wrong, win or lose, they cannot afford to resist the might of the Federal Government.

The Regulatory Fairness Act will help end the disparity of resources by providing that an agency that takes an arbitrary, frivolous, unreasonable or groundless position in an adjudication or in litigation must pay the costs and attorney's fees of any small organization or individual of limited means who prevails over it.

This bill does not make the Government liable for litigation costs in every case in which the Government does not prevail. That kind of rule would be a deterrent to the conscientious performance of agency responsibilities and would encourage litigation of every dispute, no matter how minor. The approach taken by this bill, which has been recommended by the Department of Justice, should thus go a long way toward ending excesses without interfering with legitimate regulatory activities. And, its reporting provisions should pinpoint for congressional scrutiny those agencies most often identified by the courts and administrative adjudicators as abusers of their power.

The relief afforded individuals and small organizations by these bills will greaty lighten the burden of Federal regulation, recordkeeping, and reporting requirements. The orderly conduct of the business of Government will not be injured: in fact, the quality and efficiency of rulemaking and enforcement will be improved. And Americans will have renewed their beliefs that they can have a part in formulating the rules under which they must live and that a fair hearing is available to them.

Mr. President, I hope that we can move promptly and affirmatively to enact this important legislation.●

● Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, I am pleased to join Senator CULVER today in introducing the Regulatory Flexibility and Reform Act. This bill would provide innovative administrative procedures for use by individuals, smaller businesses, organizations, and governmental bodies that would otherwise be adversely affected by proposed Federal regulations. The bill directs Federal agencies to seek greater participation by such individuals and smaller institutions when rules affecting them are proposed. This is a goal President Carter has also called for in his recent Executive order on regulatory reform. The bill extends that mandate throughout the Federal Government—to the independent regulatory commissions as well as to the executive branch agencies.

But perhaps the most important innovation of the bill is that it provides agencies with the necessary tools and congressional backing for tailoring regulations to the size and resources of those who will be affected by them. During the public comment period on proposed regulations, agencies would be required to "solicit and consider" lesser cost regulatory alternatives which would meet the legislatively-established goals of the regulations. An agency which rejected a lesser cost alternative would have to explain why it did so in the final rule. The bill suggests a number of approaches to flexible regulations: the use of "two-tier" or "multitier" standards for organizations and businesses of differing economic sizes, the use of performance-oriented standards rather than standards which impose particular technologies, and the use of progressively-applied standards which condition exemption from more rigorous standards upon satisfactory compliance with less rigorous standards. Many of these approaches have been used on an ad hoc basis in existing regulations; the bill would greatly increase the efficiency of the agencies by requiring routine consideration of such approaches.

Finally, the bill sets up stringent new restrictions governing the imposition of reporting and recordkeeping requirements on the public by Federal agencies. All regulations which would involve reporting demands on the public would be required to so indicate at the time the regulations are originally proposed. Regulations which would create significant paperwork demands would have to be proposed and opened to public comment—including suggestions for less burdensome approaches—just like substantive regulations.

These amendments to the Federal rulemaking law will offer agency administrators new congressional guidance for achieving a fit between the scale of regulation and the scale of those being regulated. In the generation that has passed since the enactment of the original Administrative Procedures Act, profound changes have occurred in the American economy, in the roles of governmental bodies, and in the pervasiveness of Federal regulations. Yet the law itself has remained virtually unchanged, and, as a result, there has been very little change in the methods the agencies have used to issue their regulations. Perhaps these methods were appropriate for a time when regulations affected a few large industries—most of them subscribers to the Federal Register—and the public reporting burden was little more than an index-card-sized income tax form. In a society that is characterized by 42,000 pages of Federal rules in 1 year (1977), and a paperwork burden of $100 billion a year (Federal Paperwork Commission estimate), guidelines for rulemaking must be specific, parsimonious, and economically efficient. Individuals of limited means, small businesses, small organizations, rural governments, and the like, must not be forced to assume an unfair burden. Uniform regulations are not necessarily fair regulations.

It was a recognition of these serious and growing problems that led Senator CULVER and I to introduce the Regulatory Flexibility Act, S. 1974, last year. That bill was the first to systematically address the need for differentiating among categories of those regulated, and the first to offer the option of "two-tier" or multitier regulatory standards. S. 1974 drew an exceptional outpouring of support. More than a third of the Senate is now cosponsoring it. Over 200 associations of small businesses and small nonprofit organizations have backed it. The bill's basic concepts have been endorsed by individuals ranging from U S. Chamber of Commerce President Richard Lesher to economist John Kenneth Galbraith.

After evaluating a considerable body of testimony and agency submissions on S. 1974, we are offering this new bill today, which substantially refines the language and broadens the scope of the original. This new bill encourages the agencies to seek alternative regulatory strategies not only from within the Government, but from the public as well. It streamlines the requirement for agency impact statements. It mandates agency consideration of regulatory effects on small cities and towns, as well as on small enterprises and on individuals. It offers regulatory strategies which go beyond "tiering," but have the same effect: reducing the burden on those least able to bear it. It imposes strict controls on paperwork requirements. And perhaps best of all, it opens the regulatory process further to the bright sunlight of public participation.

Representatives KASTENMEIER and BALDUS, who introduced the House companion bill to the original Regulatory Flexibility Act, today join us in introducing the House companion to this revised measure. We believe this legislation will go a long way toward assuring that the regulatory and paperwork burdens of the Government are reduced overall, and that the costs of paperwork and regulations do not fall most heavily on those least able to afford it.●

ADDITIONAL COSPONSORS

S. 2860

At the request of Mr. MELCHER, the Senators from Alabama (Mrs. ALLEN and Mr. SPARKMAN) were added as a cosponsor of S. 2860, a bill to provide for a research, development, and demonstration program to determine the feasibility of collecting in space solar energy to be transmitted to Earth and to generate electricity for domestic purposes.

S. 3285

At the request of Mr. TOWER, the Senator from Arkansas (Mr. BUMPERS) was added as a cosponsor of S. 3285, to amend the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 to extend the investment tax credit to certain special use agricultural structures.

S. 3311

At the request of Mr. DOMENICI, the Senator from North Dakota (Mr. BURDICK), the Senator from Oregon (Mr. MARK O. HATFIELD), and the Senator from Nevada (Mr. LAXALT) were added as cosponsors of S. 3311, to amend the Social Security Act to reimburse States for the administrative costs they incur in implementing the Indian Health Care Improvement Act.

SENATE JOINT RESOLUTION 141

At the request of Mr. MCCLURE, the Senator from Delaware (Mr. ROTH) and the Senator from Arizona (Mr. GOLDWATER) were added as cosponsors of Senate Joint Resolution 141, to provide for a constitutional spending limitation amendment.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 92

At the request of Mr. GOLDWATER, the Senator from New Jersey (Mr. WILLIAMS) was added as a cosponsor of Senate Concurrent Resolution 92, to seek the resurrection of the Ukrainian Orthodox and Catholic Churches and other religions in the Ukraine.

SENATE RESOLUTION 524—ORIGINAL RESOLUTION REPORTED WAIVING CONGRESSIONAL BUDGET ACT

Mr. LONG, from the Committee on Finance, reported the following original resolution, which was referred to the Committee on the Budget:

S. RES. 524

Resolved, That (a) pursuant to section 303(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 303(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of H.R. 3946, an Act to suspend for a temporary period the rate of duty on wool not finer than 46s, as such H.R. 3946 was reported by the Committee on Finance and with respect to the consideration of any modification or amendment thereto but only if the net impact of such modification or amendment, if adopted, would not result in an increase in new spending authority for any fiscal year over the amount of new spending authority which would have been provided for in H.R. 3946 as so reported, and

(b) That waiver of such section is necessary because the educational expense tax credit provided for by the bill is provided on a refundable basis and, under present Congressional budget procedures, the refundable aspects of tax credits are treated as though they created spending authority. Since several aspects of the tax credit are deferred until future fiscal years, the new spending authority considered to exist as a result of the refundability of the tax credit increases in such future fiscal years and this necessitates a waiver of section 303(a) of the Congressional Budget Act.

SENATE CONCURRENT RESOLUTION 97—SUBMISSION OF A CONCURRENT RESOLUTION AUTHORIZING PRINTING

Mr. PROXMIRE submitted the following concurrent resolution, which was referred to the Committee on Rules and Administration:

S. CON. RES. 97

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That there be printed for the use of the Senate Committee on Banking, Housing and Urban Affairs two thousand additional copies of its committee print of the Ninety-fifth Congress, second session, entitled "Preliminary Guide to Export Opportunities to Japan".

AMENDMENTS SUBMITTED FOR PRINTING

SMALL BUSINESS AMENDMENTS—H.R. 11445

AMENDMENT NO. 3266

(Ordered to be printed and lie on the table.)

Mr. BARTLETT submitted an amendment intended to be proposed by him to H.R. 11445, an act to amend the Small Business Act and the Small Business Investment Act of 1958.

ADDITIONAL STATEMENTS

SUPPORT GROWS FOR BUDGET LIMIT SET AT 20 PERCENT OF GNP

● Mr. DOMENICI. Mr. President, within the past week more bipartisan endorsement arose for the concept of limiting the Federal budget to 20 percent of gross national product. This limitation is contained in S. 3200, the brief amendment to the Budget Act which I introduced 7 weeks ago, on June 13, 1978.

The first endorsement came from President Carter's appointee as Chairman of the Federal Reserve Board, Mr. G. William Miller, and appeared in the July 17, 1978 issue of Time magazine. Federal Reserve Chairman Miller's "whole program," reports Time, "is based on the idea that Government spending must be reduced from the current 22 percent of the GNP to 20 percent by the early 1980's.

"Miller does have a club," continues Time. "If Congress and the White House will not cooperate, the Federal Reserve will have to crack down so hard on money supply, and push interest rates so high, that there really will be a recession."

The second endorsement of the budget limitation contained in my amendment comes from Mr. Herbert Stein, former chairman of the Council of Econonmic Advisers under two Republican Presidents, and appears in the Wall Street Journal of July 18, 1978. According to Mr. Stein:

Unless we make long-run plans we find ourselves each year facing expenditure commitments that seem to preclude any substantial reduction of tax rates. The Government needs to be put on notice to plan expenditures so that its share of GNP declines to, say, 20 percent or 19 percent. We must create a situation in which proponents of new spending programs bear the burden of advocating higher tax rates, or a bigger deficit, and cannot simply dip into the pool of revenue generated by growth and inflation.

I would go beyond that and include in the tax bill a requirement that the President submit each year a budget which does not exceed a specified, declining fraction of GNP. The fraction might be 21 percent of fiscal 1980, 20.5 percent for fiscal 1981, and 20 percent for fiscal 1982.

Mr. President, last week I reported on the study conducted by the world's industrialized nations under the auspices of the Organization for Economic Development. In that study, every single industrial nation reported that expenditures in their public sector had increased considerably faster than their economic output over the last 20 years.

The conclusion reached by the 24-member-nation OECD was that too rapid an increase in public expenditure can: First, reduce productive potential; second, provoke retaliation by taxpayers; and third, be a source of inflationary pressure.

Mr. President, with growing bipartisan support, I think it is time we started to balance Government spending with the Nation's economic output, and S. 3200 is a sensible place to begin.●

COAL PRODUCTION UNAFFECTED BY NEW STRIP MINE LAW

● Mr. BUMPERS. Mr. President, when Congress enacted Public Law 95–87, the Federal Surface Mining Control and Reclamation Act which President Carter signed into law on August 3, 1977, there were dire predictions from leaders of the coal industry. Coal production would plummet, coal mines would close, coal miners would be thrown out of work—these were echoes of the ill-conceived effort during the Ford administration to stampede Congress and kill the bill through presidential veto.

That those awful warnings have been proven hollow and self-serving is now plain to see.

Coal production is up, not down, nationwide, as compared to 1 year ago. Despite many initial difficulties in getting funded and properly geared up, Interior's new Office of Surface Mining under Director Walter N. Heine is doing a creditable job of bringing the coal-producing States into compliance with the interim standards of the law and encouraging reclamation of abandoned mine areas, without unduly restraining the production of coal so vital to the Nation's energy requirements.

A story in the June 12th New York Times by Ben Franklin reviews the implementation of Public Law 95–87 to date. Congress can take satisfaction in the knowledge that, where coal surface mining is concerned, protection of the environment does not inevitably lead to lowered production and a declining standard of living, as the doomsayers would have us believe.

I ask to have printed in the RECORD the news item from the New York Times.

The article follows:

ENFORCEMENT OF STRIP-MINE RULES YIELDS LITTLE EFFECT ON PRODUCTION

(By Ben A. Franklin)

WASHINGTON June 11.—A month of vigorous enforcement by an understaffed inspection force has failed to bring about the cataclysmic interruption in coal deliveries that the mining industry had predicted would result from the environmental protection provisions of the new Federal strip-mine control law.

When the Federal Surface Mining and Reclamation Act took effect on May 6, after most elements of a massive coal industry lawsuit to block it were rejected in Federal District Court here, the Interior Department's new Office of Surface Mining had only 29 newly trained inspectors in the coal fields. The inspection force may eventually total 150.

The environmental credentials of the new agency's administrators were one reason for the coal industry's bitter resistance to a statute that its lobbyists had fought and delayed in Congress for a decade. Under the administrators' leadership, the inspectors now on the job appear to have been stringent in their first enforcement effort.

18 OPERATIONS CLOSED

The office's enforcement reports as of the end of last week show that in more than 100 inspections, the Federal agents have ordered the closing of 18 strip-mining operations for major or continuing environmental violations. All the closings were in the Appalachian coal fields, where intensive strip mining operations on the flanks of the steep, timbered slopes have left the most widespread scars.

The industry had predicted that if the agency were not deterred by the courts from enforcing the new law, strip mine operators would lose millions of tons of otherwise minable coal. The Department of Energy reported last week, however, that the May coal tonnage figure was nearly 3.5 million tons greater than that of May 1977, when the surface mining industry was still only spottily regulated under the coal states' poorly enforced environmental controls.

COULD CLOSE OPERATIONS

The Federal figures—65,695,000 tons last month as against 62,220,000 in May 1977—reflected all coal production, from deep mines as well as from stip mines. But stip-mine production accounts for more than half of the overall tonnage, and this is increasing.

Lawyers for the nation's largest stripper, the Peabody Coal Company, said in the coal industry's anti-enforcement lawsuit that the Federal law "could in May close down a significant fraction of our mining operations."

A Peabody spokesman said last week, however, that none of the company's 34 strip mines had been forced to close in May and that its June production figures were expected to reflect a rising output. The official David S. Hemenway, a Peabody lawyer, said that some of this increase resulted from the fact that Federal District Judge Thomas A. Flannery had agreed in part to coal industry petitions demanding postponement or dissolution of certain proposed agency rules. These regulations may be restored later, however.

The Interior Department must return to Judge Flannery's court next month to defend the proposed regulations that he enjoined. But agency administrators believe that their environmental program will not be seriously deterred, whatever the court decides.

LAW'S REGULATORY IMPACT

Some of the new law's regulatory impact in the vast new strip mines of the West—in Wyoming, Montana, Colorado and New Mexico—remains to be determined in the courts, particularly regarding enforcement by the agency at mines on Indian reservations and the preservation of precious subterranean water courses at other sites.

But agency officials said last week that in the West, where recently developed surface mines are dominated by subsidiaries of such corporate giants as Exxon and other petroleum and mineral conglomerates, compliance might be better than expected.

The agency so far has only one inspector in the Rocky Mountain area, and two states there—Colorado and New Mexico—are making no moves to adopt their own federally mandated state regulatory programs, so precise information on compliance is scarce.

The biggest strip-mine operators in the West are leading the battle against the new Federal regulations in the courts while apparently preparing to comply with any provisions that survive the legal test.

LITTLE DISSATISFACTION

Aside from the legal issues, there seems to be little dissatisfaction among the major strip-mine operators with the way the agency is administering the new law.

Mr. Hemenway, for example, praised the "fairness" of the former environmentalists enforcement staff here. "Quite frankly," the lawyer said, "we have found them fair—not oversolicitous at all, but generally fair."

The agency is head by Walter N. Heine, a former strip-mine control administrator in Pennsylvania, which is regarded as having one of the strictest state laws on the subject. The enforcement office is run by Richard M. Hall, a former lawyer for the Natural Resources Defense Council. The inspection office is headed by Harriet Marple, a former lawyer with the New York City and the United States environmental protection agencies.

Another aggressive figure on the new agency's staff—the office did not get its first appropriation and begin hiring until March because of a Congressional delay in approving money for it—is Dr. Charles A. Beasley, a 43-year-old native Appalachian with three academic degrees, including a doctorate in mining engineering. He is the agency's chief inspector.

MINES RARELY CLOSED

The state regulatory agencies under which Appalachian strip mines had operated in recent years rarely invoked orders to close the mines, even for the most flagrant violations.

Mr. Beasley's inspectors issued their first closing order two weeks ago at a strip mine in Harlan County, Ky. The operator there had made no provision, according to the inspector's report, for retaining runoff water in sedimentation ponds on the mine site, a provision of the Federal regulations designed to reduce by half the siltation of mountain streams and the resulting increase in flood damage.

Criminal action has been threatened against another strip-mine operator in southwestern Virginia, who, Federal officials said, had continued mining despite a closure order issued two weeks ago for pushing soil—the earth and rock scraped off the surface to expose a mountainside coal seam—down the slope. This environmentally ruinous practice has left some 20,000 linear miles of rubble-strewn scars on the Appalachian mountain flanks. The new Federal law forbids any spoil material "over the side."

OPPOSED REGULATIONS

The mountain strip miners' have vigorously opposed the new regulations.

But both the Federal enforcers and their state government counterparts, once the state-run strip-mine control efforts required by the Federal act come into force in 1980, can apparently expect broad support from the courts.

Last month, in granting the coal industry's demands for exclusion from a few of the law's provisions, Judge Flannery also held that "Congress left the operators only one alternative" in finally passing the long-disputed strip-mine law.

"Surface coal mining operations must comply with the act and the regulations or cease operating," Judge Flannery's opinion said. Three weeks later, he was upheld in the United States Court of Appeals here, and no further appeal has been taken.●

STRATEGIC DISASTER LOOMS

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, as the Soviets go on amassing more and more military strength, the true nature of our Nation's defenses and what has happened to them under the policies of the Carter administration becomes more important with every passing day. Now, at this period, I believe it behooves us to listen carefully to the opinion of men intimately acquainted with the military problems this Nation could face in the event of war with the Soviet Union. One person well equipped to discuss our defense posture is Adm. Elmo R. Zumwalt, Jr., former Chief of Naval Operations.

Recently, Admiral Zumwalt delivered a stark assessment of our position in a speech at the Valley Forge Military Academy and Junior College in Wayne, Pa. In that speech, he urged the American people to wake up and realize the Soviets have the capability to overwhelm us in a nuclear exchange. He further adds that decisions made by the Carter administration are adding to the already great advantage that the Soviets enjoy.

Mr. President, I ask that the text of Admiral Zumwalt's address be printed in the RECORD.

The address follows:

STRATEGIC DISASTER LOOMS

Now that the debate over the Panama Canal Treaties is behind us, it is important that the debate over the prospective SALT II treaty begins.

I enter this debate as one who was proud to support the President on the Panama Canal Treaties. I come into it as one who has tried to work within the Democratic Party, both as a one-time candidate for the U.S. Senate and by working on the defense platform at the last Democratic presidential convention. I enter the debate as one who believes that President Carter's recent defense budget decisions are harmful to the United States' future security, and who further believes that the future of the United States is in great jeopardy as a result of the strategic nuclear imbalance which will result from those decisions.

President Carter's decisions on strategic nuclear budget items and in the strategic arms control field suggest confusion about what the facts are with regard both to our capabilities and to sound negotiating procedure. The Soviets have the capability to overwhelm us in a strategic nuclear exchange today. Carter's decisions should have been designed to regain our capability to deter the Soviets. Instead, his budget decisions on strategic nuclear forces have added to the already great advantage the Soviets would have had over the United States in 1985, if not earlier, whether or not SALT II is signed. He has made these decisions without obtaining any quid in the SALT II negotiations, and thus has given away significant potential leverage. And, the positions that he has taken in the SALT II negotiating arena have moved the U.S. progressively to weaker ground.

STRATEGIC POLICY AND PRESIDENTS

Those of us who participated in the Cuban Missile Crisis experienced first hand the impressive contribution that the U.S. strategic nuclear superiority over the Soviet Union gave President Kennedy in winning Soviet acquiescence to his objectives. We also experienced first hand the horror of calculating that while hundreds of millions of Russians would have died in a nuclear exchange flowing from that crisis, nevertheless tens of millions of Americans would also have died. Some of us could, therefore, understand the fundamental values that lay behind the Kennedy/McNamara decision soon after the Cuban Missile Crisis: to offer to give up the U.S. strategic nuclear advantage; to permit the Soviet Union to catch up with the United States in strategic nuclear capability; and to gamble that by granting the Soviets the opportunity to join us at parity in mutual assured destruction, we would create a state of true mutual deterrence. This policy was to have been coupled with urgent efforts to achieve arms control agreements to provide parity at lower levels of force and expenditure.

President Kennedy and Mr. McNamara made it clear that the United States would not go beyond its then-programmed missile force of 1,054 ICBMs (Inter-Continental Ballistic Missiles) and 656 SLBMs (Submarine-Launched Ballistic Missiles), would greatly reduce the radioactivity in its warheads, would forego larger missiles and would not develop an effective civil defense—a calculus designed to assure the Soviets that we were structuring our forces so that a U.S. first strike could not destroy their retaliatory capability, and to give them further assurance that their retaliatory strike would surely kill not tens, but hundreds of millions of Americans, if we did strike first.

Seven years later, by the time Mr. Nixon came into office, it was beginning to be clear that Soviet strategy during the interim had been to capitalize on the U.S. parity offer, to build huge asymmetrical advantages that would carry them to ultimate superiority. They had not eliminated the lethal radioactivity of their warheads as we had done. They had made their missiles huge, in comparison to ours, with warheads 10 times more powerful. They had begun to develop a civil defense capability to help their people survive a U.S. nuclear strike. They were in the process of overtaking us in numbers of missiles and they were vigorously pursuing greater accuracies—equal or superior to ours—to add to their huge advantage in warhead megatonnage.

The signing of the SALT I agreement was a watershed point. In a corporate sense; the U.S. government at that time viewed the SALT I agreements the last best hope to agree on mutual balanced deterrence. Our side saw the ABM (Anti-Ballistic Missile) treaty as a means of keeping both populations hostage to the weapons of the other by foregoing defense. We saw the interim executive agreement as a five-year tradeoff of Soviet quantitative advantage in missile numbers, megatonnage and throw weight against the U.S. advantages of numbers of strategic bombers, and qualitative advantages in multiple independently targetable vehicles (MIRVs) and weapon accuracy.

The government generally recognized two principles. First, the five-year period had to be followed by an agreement which would move us to strategic parity. Second, the leverage on the Soviets, during the five-year tenure of SALT I to let us have parity in Salt II, could only be maintained by adequately funded strategic force levels, by suitable modernization programs, including appropriate research and development, and by gaining full intelligence on Soviet strategic nuclear programs and civil defense.

The Soviets, on the other hand, saw SALT as a device for further accelerating their march toward strategic nuclear superiority. The ABM treaty permitted them, through skillful cheating and by research and development much more vigorous than the U.S. Congress would permit us in view of the treaty, to overtake our advantage in the ABM field. . . . While U.S ABM system deployments are halted, the Soviets have added handsomely to their ABM early-warning radar system around the Soviet periphery. The United States added further to the defense disparity by concluding during this period that since we were, as a policy matter, to leave our homeland naked to Soviet missiles, there was no advantage in defending against Soviet bombers.

The Soviets saw the interim executive agreement as a way to restrict the U.S. programs, while their own exploitation of ambiguities in the agreements would permit them to counter our temporary qualitative advantage in accuracy and in MIRVs while further improving their current advantages in megatonnage and in throw-weight. The Soviets further saw SALT I as a vehicle with which to intrude into our democratic political process. They understood that in our free and open society the interplay of interest groups is important in policy formulation. They knew that their statements, skillful backgrounders and briefings could manipulate the hopes and aspirations of many Americans in ways that would help to constrain U.S. strategic weapon decisions, just as we have seen them do quite recently in campaigning in this country against the tactical neutron bomb.

The Soviets further advanced their strategy through their great good fortune at Vladivostok in being the only side with an interpreter present. In the absence of a U.S. interpreter to keep them honest, they were able to contend after the meeting that President Ford and Secretary of State Kissinger had misunderstood them and that the limitation of 2,400 strategic delivery vehicles was not intended by them to include their new strategic Backfire bomber. For the same reason they were able to leave ambiguous the agreement on cruise missiles. The Soviets capitalized on these ambiguities and carried them into the strategic relationship with the new Carter Administration.

Over the years, although many decisions were made with which I did not agree, I think it is fair to say that one president after another was clear in his own mind about what it was he was seeking to accomplish.

Privately, Presidents Kennedy and Johnson were clear that they were improving our forces qualitatively while holding constant the number of U.S. strategic forces in accordance with their intention to permit the Soviet Union to achieve strategic nuclear parity. Both presidents were carrying out the theory that this policy would most likely provide mutual deterrence and stability.

Presidents Nixon and Ford, by the time they took office, knew very well that the Kennedy/Johnson strategic parity proposal to the Soviets had not worked out. During their years, privately, they were quite clear that the Soviet Union, rather than stopping at parity, was proceeding to achieve strategic nuclear superiority. For example, in the Sixth Fleet, after the Jordan crisis in September of 1970, still early in his first term, President Nixon told me, with regard to his negotiations in SALT I with the Soviets, that he thought that he could get strategic superiority but might have to settle for parity if there was inadequate support for defense budgets. Yet, by the time SALT I was signed, 18 months later, Mr. Nixon was quite clear in private discussions that the United States had had to accept somewhat less than parity. And, 20 months later, by Jan. 24, 1974, while I was attending a National Security Council meeting which President Nixon had called, it was clear that he believed we were going to have to accept strategic nuclear inferiority. My notes of the meeting show that Kissinger expressed the view, and President Nixon agreed, that there was no way the United States could get parity in the strategic nuclear field with the Soviet Union. Kissinger said the people won't support it. President Nixon made it clear that he didn't want any talk that sounded like that publicly.

In my annual discussions with Mr. Ford when he was House minority leader and vice president, it was evident that he recognized the Soviet march to strategic superiority.

It is a separate question as to whether each of these presidents was completely candid with the public on strategic nuclear issues. But, one has to recognize that at the very least, they had done their homework and knew what the facts were.

THE CARTER ERA

In contrast to these previous presidents, Mr. Carter, based on everything one can learn from private conversations, seems not to have done his homework and seems sincerely confused about the facts. He seems truly not to be aware of the burgeoning Soviet nuclear superiority. I can attest to this first hand. I believe that this personal confusion on strategic arms issues is unique among the six presidents I have observed.

In my judgment there are three major reasons why the President has not yet discovered the extent of forthcoming Soviet strategic nuclear superiority.

The first is his failure to review the information available to him. The second is that under our system it is easy, although misleading, to give equal weight to the opinions of uninformed authorities and national figures, and those of the informed. A paper pronouncing that the United States is well off in the strategic nuclear balance can be submitted to him by a staff person who has no real background on the issues and who has had strong previous prejudices that more defense is bad and less is good. This is given equal treatment to the views of the Joint Chiefs of Staff, past and present, the views of recent, and therefore best informed, Secretaries of Defense, such as James Schlesinger and Melvin Laird, and those of the nation's best and most informed strategic expert and negotiator, Paul Nitze.

The third reason is that being in possession of such conflicting views, not properly weighed for their background and experience, President Carter, rather than giving careful study to the issues, tends to select the naively idealistic rather than the realistic alternative. No better recent example can be cited than the President's initial acceptance of the advice of novices Andrew Young and Hamilton Jordan to kill the neutron bomb and his overruling of the advice to build it given by the real expert, Cy Vance. The fact that other pressures subsequently led the President to ameliorate his initial bad decision does not invalidate the point.

STRATEGIC FORCE LEVEL SETBACKS

Let us examine what has resulted in the strategic force level area since Mr. Carter became President.

There were three systems available to the President with which to begin a relatively rapid return to strategic nuclear parity in the 1980s: the B–1 bomber, the mobile (MX) minuteman, and the long-range cruise missile.

The B–1 strategic bomber has been cancelled, while the Soviet strategic Backfire bomber goes forward. (The Soviets deny that the Backfire is a strategic bomber and some in the United States have agreed. Yet, according to a secret memorandum from Secretary of Defense Harold Brown to the President leaked to the New York Times, the Secretary has realistically acknowledged that our bomber defenses, now almost dismantled, are going to have to be improved because of the Backfire threat). The cancellation of the B–1 bombers means that the aging, less penetrable B–52 must carry on until it is no longer operable, and will likely be replaced by extremely vulnerable substitutes. The existing preponderance of Soviet megatonnage, which could have been partly compensated by the B–1, will not grow more disparate.

The mobile minuteman (MX) development has been slowed down by the President. Our fixed ICBMs are not subject to prompt destruction in a Soviet first strike. The huge new Soviet missiles with MIRVed warheads several times larger than ours and with future accuracies of .1 nautical mile, will be able to destroy 90 percent of our 1,054 ICBMs in a first strike, using only about 1,300 of the 5,000 or 6,000 MIRVed ICBM warheads the Soviets will have. The number of MIRVed warheads they have left after that will still be over twice the number they destroyed. There is a desperate urgency to regain the deterrent value of this leg of the triad. The proper course of action for the safety of our country was to accelerate the development of the mobile minuteman replacement to the vulnerable ICBMs. The decision to slow it down is a stunning setback to our national safety.

The long-range cruise missile is the device which could most quickly restore a semblance of strategic nuclear balance because it can be deployed on airplanes, surface ships and attack submarines. All of these platforms are available in large numbers. Deployment of the cruise missile on these platforms would regain a deterrent posture for the United States. Yet, recent budget decisions have slowed down rather than accelerated the cruise missile development programs. . . . The slowdown is another stunning setback to the country's safety.

SALT II SETBACKS

At the same time President Carter has been putting our national safety in jeopardy by budget decisions on strategic forces, he has been making similarly unsafe decisions in the strategic arms control field. In part he has found himself driven to these bad decisions because of the leverage he has given up in cancelling and slowing programs without any Soviet quid in SALT II.

During its 16 months, the Carter Administration has put forth a series of proposals to the U.S.S.R. The formulations have progressively worsened from the United State's point of view.

In March, 1977, President Carter had Secretary Vance present two proposals at Moscow. One of these was a comprehensive proposal involving substantial mutual force reductions, coupled with significant limitations designed to restrain improvements in intercontinental ballistic missiles. The other proposal was more modest in nature—an effort to maintain earlier progress toward implementing the Vladivostok agreement while deferring for the future the resolution of those two highly crucial items left over from Vladivostok, the Soviet strategic Backfire bomber and the U.S. cruise missile.

The Soviets, in their standard negotiating fashion, savagely rejected the March proposals. The United States, in its standard negotiating fashion, went back to the drawing boards to come up with a new proposal more advantageous to the Soviets and less so to the United States. This was the May 1977 proposal for a new negotiating framework. Secretary Vance suggested that the May proposal was designed to arrive at the same general result as the March comprehensive proposal, but over a longer period.

The new framework was to consist of three tiers. There was to be a first tier consisting of an eight-year treaty similar to the U.S. March proposal. A three-year protocol would contain items not yet negotiable for the longer period. A third tier was to be an agreed set of principles to guide the continuing negotiations on an agreement to come into effect upon the termination of the three-year protocol. Unbelievably, this May proposal was given to the Russians without any clearance by the Joint Chiefs of Staff. Again, in standard Soviet negotiating style, the Russians rejected it and the Warnke team has been progressively improving SALT II from the Soviet point of view during the ensuing year.

The SALT II agreement will, as now drafted, be impossible to verify. We must expect to see the Soviets exploit this opportunity to gain additional strategic advantage just as they exploited the ambiguities in SALT I to gain similar advantage. The SALT II agreement increases still further the opportunities of the Soviet Union suddenly to break out of the deal with greatly increased deployments of antiballistic missiles and intercontinental ballistic missiles.

SALT II will be so structured that the Soviets have nearly all the negotiating leverage of superiority in measures of effectiveness. Heavy pressure will be on the United States to accommodate to the Soviet demands in SALT III negotiations. Given the history of U.S. accommodation to the Soviets' superior leverage in the negotiations, SALT III will almost certainly be worse. The time to consider such consequences is now before SALT II is ratified.

Perhaps the most striking aspect of SALT II is that it will restrict the United States from deploying those weapons systems necessary to regain stability and rough equivalency and to reverse the present trends. Among other limitations, we acknowledge that only the Russians have the right to deploy the huge ICBMs.

One can go on to point out that SALT II, not yet formally agreed, has already impeded our strategic nucluear program. President Carter has assured us that nothing in SALT II's three-year protocol would affect the deployment of weapons after that three-year period. Yet, he then approved his budget director's recommendation that the engineering and development of one phase of the Tomahawk cruise missile be slowed down because the future of the whole cruise missile program after the three-year protocol remained in doubt.

In order to put across the true nature of the strategic balance today, it is insufficient to recite just the advantages in figures of merit in the strategic equation. If one stops there, those who argue incorrectly that the United States today has "overkill" are able to get away with their false doctrine. One must go on to run through the likely consequences of a strategic nuclear exchange under the force balance which would come about under SALT II.

The Committee on the Present Danger has written, "It has become the conventional wisdom to maintain that such strategic advantages do not matter. Yet, detailed calculations demonstrate that under any of the strategic agreements now being considered, and assuming current programs continue (these words were written before President Carter's decisions to slow down the MX and cruise missile developments), regardless of whether the United States or the U.S.S.R. strikes first, the Soviets would destroy far more strategic targets and damage far more people and industries in a nuclear war." Paul Nitze has demonstrated in his analyses that after a Soviet-initiated counter force exchange against each other's nuclear forces, remaining Soviet forces would still be able to destroy the nuclear capacity of China and Western Europe, attack other military and population targets in the United States to kill more than 100 million Americans, and still retain nuclear force weight in excess of that available to the United States.

Analyses done while I was a member of the Joint Chiefs of Staff confirm this. The tragic truth is that in the face of these huge casualties, if the Soviet Union has exercised its impressive civil defense capability, they can expect to lose less than 10 million people. This is not "overkill." It is not one-half of the casualties the Soviets suffered in World War II. It is not as many Russians as Stalin slaughtered. It is not enough, given prospective U.S. casualties in the same exchange, to deter the Soviets from aggressive acts. It is not "overkill."

In summary, President Carter's budget decisions on strategic nuclear forces have accelerated our decline to strategic nuclear inferiority. His decisions on arms control issues in SALT II are serving to codify the U.S. strategic inferiority which his budget decisions are bringing about. He seems to be proceeding in the blind faith but with no logical rationale.

Three quick points in the non-strategic field are now pertinent:

The conventional military inferiority of NATO for many years has been justified in the light of the U.S. strategic nuclear deterrent. In the years ahead we will no longer have that deterrent.

There has been hope that, in the absence of a cabability in the 1980s to deter at either the strategic nuclear level or the conventional military level, President Carter would, at the very least, authorize the neutron bomb to restore some measure of deterrence to NATO. His delay of that program does still further harm to the national safety.

SALT II will interfere with our plans to regain conventional military capability with cruise missiles carrying non-nuclear warheads. We are already seeing the consequence of burgeoning Soviet strategic nuclear and military superiority around the globe. . . . We must expect to see Soviet mischief increase as the world increasingly comes to recognize the military realities of today.

ACTION REQUIRED

Only dramatic action now can begin to turn the tide.

In view of the incipient national disaster inherent in the SALT II strategic nuclear relationship with the Soviet Union, the time has come for heroic action from the two concerned co-equal branches of the government. I call upon the President to do the following:

Broaden his base of official advice. Bring the experience and judgment of a bipartisan group to his assistance on these matters.

Review in depth the Soviet climb to strategic nuclear superiority by studying the minutes and tapes of the top level meetings of the Nixon/Ford years.

Review with the Joint Chiefs of Staff the history of theoretical strategic nuclear exchanges between the United States and the U.S.S.R. since 1970, which show grossly unfavorable exchange ratios.

Obtain the written, frank views of the present Joint Chiefs of Staff on the state of the strategic nuclear balance and on the consequence of the current SALT II deal and any future modifications made to it.

Read what the Soviet leaders are telling their associates they intend to accomplish with their military supremacy.

Report candidly to the American people on the true state of the strategic nuclear balance in terms of JCS calculated outcomes for the last eight years and outcomes predicted during the next eight years. Report candidly the status of SALT I by comparing the assurances that the President gave the Congress as to what it meant at the time, with what the Soviets have actually done with it.

Regain a position of strategic nuclear parity with the Soviet Union by restoring the B-1, cruise missile, and MX programs and by negotiating true parity in SALT II.

I call upon the Congress of the United States, through its appropriate committees, to hold hearings and report to the American people on the following:

Compare what the Congress and the public were told about the meaning and impact of SALT I at the time it was submitted to Congress, with what SALT I has in fact become. Report the extent to which Soviet violations and exploitation of ambiguities have contributed to the present developments.

Portray the extent to which the U.S. strategic nuclear capabilities vis-a-vis the Soviet Union have deteriorated in recent years and will further deteriorate in the years ahead under the prospective SALT II agreement. Report the extent of U.S. strategic nuclear inferiority today and in the years ahead.

Recommend those strategic nuclear force expenditures which will begin to regain parity with the Soviet Union in the absence of a fair SALT II.

Submit a joint resolution of concern to the President urging that SALT II be renegotiated to achieve true parity at reduced levels of force and expenditures, and warning that SALT II in its present form will be rejected.

It is time our elected leaders recognize the realities of today and level with those who put them in office. If they do, our chances of attaining and then maintaining military parity with the Soviets will be vastly greater. If they do not, we shall surely make self-fulfilling the prophecy that the United States has passed its historic high point like so many earlier civilizations.●

THE TRIALS OF ANATOLY SCHARANSKY AND ALEXANDER GINZBURG

● Mr. MUSKIE. Mr. President, the next few weeks will be an uncertain time for Soviet-American relations. There has been much discussion about the extent to which we should link our outrage over the trials of Soviet dissidents to other questions of United States-Soviet policy.

It is important for the world community to understand the extent of American concern for the dissidents Anatoly Scharansky and Alexander Ginzburg, and others who seek an end to repression in the Soviet Union.

Standing by themselves, unrelated to any other question but that of human rights, these trials by the Soviet Union are contrary to all the basic tenets to which the free world subscribes.

The Soviet Union and its leaders must know that the great majority of the American people do not relate these trials to the cosmic questions which confront our two societies. They simply view these trials as a signal that the Soviet Union is still a repressive country in which there are no rights—no political rights—no civil rights—no social rights—no economic rights—and no human rights.

The American people hold dear the right to move freely about the world and have protested openly and loudly when any attempt has been made to infringe on that right at home or abroad.

The American people hold dear the right to freely exchange views with any people, anywhere in the world, so much that we permit all voices, no matter how offensive, in any forum, in any place, at any time.

The American people know that the Soviet Union is not an open society. They know that the Soviet Union is not a democracy. They know that in the Soviet Union there is only one party and one ruling structure and one road to opportunity.

The American people know that in the Soviet Union people take risks when they dissent: exile, imprisonment, even death. It is thus bad enough that we know what goes on inside the Soviet Union. It is quite another thing for the Soviet Union, as an element of international policy, to respond to our President's call for human rights by generating this latest mockery of justice.

Mr. President, these are no ordinary trials. There can be no doubt that they were ordered for the purpose of making it abundantly clear to the President of the United States that his call for human rights would be met with an even more vigorous denial of human rights; that his campaign against oppression would be countered with greater oppression.

The real horror of the trials is that the Soviets did not accuse these men as individuals. With bloodless calculation they brought to trial not two men with the courage to speak out, but mere symbols.

The Soviets set out to put American beliefs and sensibilities on trial. And these men were convicted, to convict us; to convict our ideals, hopes and understandings of the basic decency of the individual.

Let the Soviets understand this: We resist their charges. We reject their verdict.

And let the Soviets understand that we seek no special leverage in unrelated areas. In the basic sense, this is not a SALT issue; this is not a trade issue; it is a fundamental moral question. It divides the United States and the Soviet Union more deeply than our economic differences or our political differences.

The Soviet Union has not only elected to reject the international movement to demand protection of human rights. They have chosen to further restrict the rights of people.

I find this offensive and appalling to a degree which I cannot properly express. I would hope that soon the Soviet Union will reexamine its rejection of President Carter's human rights initiative and rejoin the family of nations and the family of man.●

IMMORAL POLICY ON AFRICA

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, it has long been my opinion that three things mark the major thrust of the Carter administration's foreign policy pertaining to Africa: expediency, inefficiency, and self-righteousness. Time and again, we find statements being made by top Government officials which are more inclined to attract political favor in this country than to help solve the complicated problems which confront the nations of Africa. In a recent article in the Washington Post, Georgie Anne Geyer of the Los Angeles Times Syndicate describes the Carter policy in Africa as "immoral." I agree with that assessment and ask that this very incisive article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

[From the Washington Post, July 6, 1978]

"IMMORAL" POLICY ON AFRICA

(By Georgie Anne Geyer)

Washington can now see in the starkest relief the basic immorality of the Carter administration. It is, incredibly, an immorality that is quite willing to sell out millions of black people in the name of expediency, that claims self-righteously to talk about majority rule when it really means black power, and that particularly fools itself about its grand moral postures.

I am referring to the "forward-looking and positive" policy toward Africa that Secretary of State Cyrus Vance recently outlined. In one more (I have lost count because I do not have a computer) "restatement of American policy," Vance now says we want to work with the Marxist Angolan MPLA government "in more normal ways."

That elevates to policy U.N. Ambassador Andrew Young's arguments that we should trade a promise by Angola to stay away from Zaire's Shaba Province for our probable diplomatic recognition of the minority MPLA government. That government is kept in power by some 20,000 Cuban troops, and if there are modern-day black echoes of a Munich-like sellout of Czechoslovakia, this is it.

What is so astonishing about all this is its immortality. Forget for a moment the Cubans' role or non-role in Shaba. The highest intelligence sources tell me that now approximately 2,000 black Rhodesians have crossed from Angola, where they were trained by Cubans, to join Joshua Nkomo's army in Zambia, which is trying to impose (not win through the vote) Nkomo as leader of the new Zimbabwe.

Then, forget that for a moment and consider the revolutionary situation in Angola. I know of no analyst of Angola who does not conclude that 90 percent of the black people of Angola are with the anti-MPLA, pro-Western movements, in particular Jonas Savimbi's UNITA in the South.

With almost no money or weapons, those poor, courageous people are still waging a brutal civil war against the highly equipped foreign Cubans. Only a few weeks ago, Zbigniew Brzezinski, the other side of the president's conscience, was trying to find ways to aid UNITA. But that initiative was thwarted.

If it were only Angola, however, and only the 5 million black Angolans who don't want to live under the MPLA and the Cubans, I suppose one could argue for Vance's and Young's propositions.

In March, Young was quoted in the Zambian press as saying he would look favorably upon military aid to the front-line states: Zambia, Mozambique, Angola and Tanzania. Indeed, the core of the problem is that he has placed our policy under their whims, all in the name of "majority rule for Rhodesia, Namibia and South Africa."

Yet, two of these are Marxist and total failures economically; one is a totally subsidized "socialist" failure; the other is simply a sloppy economic failure. Not one has elections or will have.

Yet all actively and militarily oppose the internal settlement in Rhodesia, which is going ahead with elections to turn the country over to black majority rule.

Why do black Rhodesian guerrilla leaders like Nkomo and the extremist Robert Mugabe, Andy Young's romantic favorite, not want elections? Even Africanists in the administration admit it is because neither one could win them.

Yet, in both places, we are supporting these revolutionary movements and not those who would bring real majority rule. In both places, we come out (1) in opposition to free elections, (2) in opposition to free enterprise and our own economic interests, (3) in support of further, all-out civil war in which hundreds of thousands of blacks will continue to be killed and (4) in favor of the final depotism and economic failure of the one-party states that surround them.

The argument on the other side, of course, is that the internal settlement will not stop the civil war. Yet, Nkomo waits. If the United States and Britain would support it, it is very likely he would come in. As it is, he has no need to.

So, incredible as it seems, this is what is genuinely behind the recent Vance statements. What is also behind them is the fact that people like Andy Young are surrounded by 1960s black-power activists who foresee in Africa what they were denied in the United States. They call it "revolution," but they really mean their own "power." They make Machiavellian Kissinger, whom they so hate, look like St. Augustine.●

U.S. RAILWAYS

● Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, in April 1976, ConRail officially began its operations to continue rail service to the Northeast. It also took its first major step to prove that with innovative management, marketing, car utilization, and other improved operations, that a viable, private sector rail operation could survive in the Northeast. Congress had intended that this system ultimately become an example to the rest of the industry of how to run a railroad.

Today, Government officials are beginning to concede that the Corporation, under its present structure, will never become self-sufficient. In point of fact, ConRail is further from its original projections for success than when it started 2 years ago.

Next week, the Senate is scheduled to consider an additional $1.3 billion authorization in order that ConRail may continue its steadily declining operations. While I believe that the funding for this year should be continued, it is essential that Congress be aware that unless ConRail's operations parallel its most optimistic projections, which is unlikely, the Corporation will return to Congress next year with additional funding needs.

In light of this situation, Congress must begin to consider alternatives to ConRail as it is presently structured. There is no doubt that rail service in the Northeast is essential to the economy of the region and the Nation. However, I believe we are faced with several critical decisions concerning its future operations and organizations if it is to survive at all.

Mr. President, I request that an article that appeared in the July 10, 1978, issue of Business Week be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

CONRAIL'S TROUBLES GROW EVEN WORSE

Consolidated Rail Corp. was created by Congress in 1976—and given $2 billion in taxpayers' money—to replace Penn Central Transportation Co and six other bankrupt railroads in the Northeast. After such an infusion of federal money to upgrade its facilities, Conrail was expected to be well on its way toward profitability by 1978.

Instead, government officials are beginning to conclude that Conrail will never become self-sufficient. It is losing more money than the railroads it replaced. Service has deteriorated, not improved. Shippers have been frightened away, and, after a two-year truce, government agencies are taking a more active role in overseeing Conrail's affairs. What is more, Richard D. Spence, who had been president since Conrail's inception, has left following a special meeting of the board on June 26. The board is composed of six government-appointed members and five who represent the creditors and estates of the former Conrail companies. Chairman Edward G. Jordan, a former insurance executive, remains in his post.

In fact, Conrail is further from operating and financial success now than when it started:

It lost $367 million last year, and $216 million more in the first quarter of this year. These larger-than-expected losses sent Conrail back to Congress this spring, seeking an additional $1.3 billion on top of its initial $2 billion.

The percentage of cars delivered within one day of scheduled arrival fell from 75% when Conrail began operations to 55% in early May.

Conrail was fined $2.3 million by the Interstate Commerce Commission early this month for failing to comply with ICC orders to speed the flow of freight cars to other railroads.

Despite an impressive start at rehabilitating track, Conrail's operating difficulties have discouraged many shippers. For example, Sea-Land Service Inc., the nation's largest ship operator, recently said it was switching from Conrail to the Delaware & Hudson Ry. Co. to move containers west from New York.

At times, the company has appeared to be virtually paralyzed. An ICC official points out that the agency had to send 30 car service agents into Conrail facilities this spring to unclog the jammed switching yards. "Our people virtually ran the system for them. We got 34,000 cars off their lines in one month," he says. "The question is, why couldn't they do it themselves?" With more than 100,000 cars belonging to other railroads on its lines, Conrail is a primary cause of the national freight car shortage.

LOSING CUSTOMERS

Conrail's failure to improve service makes it still costlier to rehabilitate the system. Donald C. Cole, president of U.S. Railway Assn., the government agency that bankrolls and monitors Conrail, says: "There is a continuing decline in their traffic base." In the first quarter of 1978, Conrail had revenues of $759 million, down from $770 million in the first quarter last year. Without increased traffic to produce additional revenues, more federal funding will be required. "A 1 percent shortfall in revenue between 1978 and 1982 would require increased federal assistance of $189 million, or 15 percent more than Conrail's $1.3 billion estimate," Cole told Congress this month.

Officials at the ICC, the Transportation Dept., and USRA say publicly that Conrail can still succeed, although it will likely need even more than the additional $1.3 billion it has asked for. In private, most officials seem convinced that further restructuring of Conrail will be necessary.

In its report on Conrail performance, USRA told Congress: "The coming year will be a crucial one for Conrail." Citing problems of service deterioration, locomotive reliability, car utilization, capital investment, and labor productivity, USRA said Conrail has until next April to show progress or the agency "will be prepared to present alternatives for congressional consideration."●

THE POSTAL SERVICES AMENDMENTS ACT OF 1978

● Mr. NELSON. Mr. President, the Committee on Governmental Affairs has concluded hearings on S. 3229, the Postal Services Amendments Act of 1978. This is vitally important legislation which I hope the Senate will consider and pass at an early date.

I would like to focus on two aspects of this bill which I deem to be of particular importance to the preservation of a vigorous free press in this country.

The bill would continue the present practice of requiring each class, subclass, and type of mail to bear the costs that are attributable to each. However, section 6(b) of the legislation provides that through fiscal 1982, if the Postal Rate Commission finds that attributable costs exceed 60-percent of total postal costs, the attributable costs of each class and kind are to be reduced by multiplying the attributable costs of that class or kind by a fraction whose numerator is 60 and denominator is a whole number equal to the percentage of total estimated costs determined to be so attributable. Under the bill, costs which would otherwise be attributed which are not attributed may be apportioned according to the other criteria, including the perceived social value of a given type of mail. This 60-percent "cap" on attributable costs will be of considerable benefit to regular second-class and controlled circulation publications, whose rates now reflect a 65-percent cost attribution.

Section 6(b)(1) of the bill would provide substantial additional rate relief for regular second-class and controlled circulation publications by requiring that such classes will be required to recover only the costs attributable to regular rate second-class mail for the first 250,000 copies of such publications. This provision would provide these publications with a mailing rate substantially equivalent to that paid by nonprofit publications.

Rate relief for small publications is urgently required. A few statistics will suffice to underscore the need for a change in the law. Between the creation of the U.S. Postal Service in 1970 and July of 1979, the average second-class postal rate will have risen by 400 percent. The New Republic, a prestigious journal of political commentary with a 78,000-person circulation, saw its yearly postal costs rise from $82,005.60 in 1973 to $182,425.44 in 1977. By July of 1979, its yearly postal rate will be a staggering $358,524 if the law is not altered.

In my own State of Wisconsin, countless small publications are being forced to the wall by postal rate increases. To select two examples out of many, the Loyal, Wisconsin Tribune & Record-Gleaner has seen its weekly postal costs increase from $1,077.50 in 1971 to $4,080.89 in 1977 and the small Elroy, Wis. Tribune-Keystone, with an 1,800-person circulation, absorbed a quadrupling of its mailing costs between 1971 and 1977, from $535.35 to $2,392 per year.

During the past 6 years, my involvement with this issue has been consistent.

In 1972 and again in 1973, I introduced legislation to delay the implementation of proposed postal rate increases, to limit the rates which could be charged for the first 250,000 copies and to eliminate the regressive second-class per piece surcharge.

In 1974, I supported S. 411, the law which delayed and phased in postal rate increases for second-class and controlled circulation publications, while consistently arguing that the legislation did not go far enough in the direction of safeguarding the survival of small publications.

S. 3229 now offers the only realistic hope of limiting these catastrophic second-class rate increases. The extent of the relief it would provide is, at present, unclear, but the 60-percent attributable cost "cap" coupled with the additional rate relief provided for the first 250,000 copies of a regular second-class publication offers our small publications some hope of a tolerable financial future.

I believe it is important to restate the fundamental reasons why assistance to our newspapers and periodicals is so necessary and desirable. In the past 7 years, Congress and the Postal Service, tragically, appear to have forgotten these reasons.

From the earliest days of this country, our national leaders have recognized that the essential educational service of keeping the American people informed is best performed by the widest possible distribution of newspapers, periodicals, and journals of opinion.

In 1787, Thomas Jefferson acknowledged the vital role which the printed media played in American democracy when he stated:

I am persuaded myself that the good sense of the people will always be found to be the best army. They may be led astray for a moment, but will soon correct themselves. The people are the only censors of their governors; and even their errors will tend to keep these to the true principles of their institution. To punish these errors too severely would be to suppress the only safeguard of the public liberty. The way to prevent these irregular interpositions of the people, is to give them full information of their affairs through the channel of the public papers, and to contrive that those papers should penetrate the whole mass of the people. The basis of our government being the opinion of the people, the very first object should be to keep that right; and were it left to me to decide whether we should have a government without newspapers or newspapers without a government, I should not hesitate a moment to prefer the latter. But I should mean that every man should receive those papers, and be capable of reading them.

In 1822, James Madison noted that—

A popular Government, without popular information, or the means of acquiring it, is but a prologue to a farce or a tragedy; or, perhaps, both. Knowledge will forever govern ignorance; and a people who mean to be their own governors must arm themselves with the power which knowledge gives.

James Madison, Thomas Jefferson, and their colonial contemporaries were concerned with assuring sources of popular information in an infant rural nation of about 3 million people. They certainly could not have foreseen the developments in methods of mass communications which have revolutionized modern society. The validity of their concerns and the force of their arguments, however, are even more compelling at a time when the electronic media can report to a nationwide audience measured in millions the news of an event which has occurred only a fraction of a second previously.

The sheer communicative power implicit in today's electronic network of 7,000 radio stations and 890 television stations is awesome. The broadcast media, however, are only one part of our system of disseminating information and thought. In order to insure that our information and opinion network is truly comprehensive and competitive, a vital role must still be performed by the thousands of daily and weekly newspapers, opinion magazines, and independent journals which collect, condense, comment, challenge, and communicate information, ideas, and opinions in printed form.

There is no doubt that the electronic media can efficiently speed a news message to a vast national audience with an immediacy which cannot be equalled. However, by using the public airwaves, the electronic media are dependent upon Government licenses for their very existence. With governmental pressure as a constant overriding threat, and the need to appeal to great numbers of people to pay for the expensive costs of production, it is no wonder that the electronic broadcast industry is not well equipped to present a multiplicity of opinions and divergent ideas.

The only place where controversy, dissent, criticism and minority points of view can be effectively expressed and widely disseminated is in the printed media, particularly in the independent journals of opinion. Here fresh ideas often see their first public exposure. It is here that traditional thoughts and established norms are challenged with uncommon vigor. In our smaller publications a broad span of issues may be argued in greater depth and with a partisan passion. Complex matters can be discussed and developed over a greater period of time and targeted to specialized audiences.

While the mass media serve to efficiently communicate the common experience quickly to the majority of the Nation, it is the little press that performs the crucial function of providing public access to new and untested ideas, to minority thoughts which might otherwise remain hidden, and to the whole range of human experience and expression which provides the impetus for the continual search for the truth in a free society.

For 178 years Congress provided very specific and precise encouragement and assistance for the national distribution and wide dissemination of newspapers and magazines. Historically, the Congress of the United States has provided these publications with the benefits of favorable rates in the use of the U.S. mail. From 1792 to 1971, the low postal rates which were set by Congress for distribution of printed publications through the mails were recognized as a form of national subsidy justified by the educational function and contribution to the self-governing aspect of citizenship.

This policy was well understood formerly by those charged with enforcing and interpreting the law.

In his annual report for 1901, the then Postmaster-General Charles E. Smith reiterated the basis for the reduced rates set by Congress for the mailing of newspapers and periodical magazines:

> Our free institutions rest on popular intelligence, and it has from the beginning been our fixed and enlightened policy to foster and promote the general diffusion of public information. Congress has wisely framed the postal laws with this just and liberal conception. It has uniformly sought to encourage intercommunication and the exchange of intelligence.

As Justice Douglas further explained in Hannen v. Esquire, Inc., 327 U.S. 146 (1946):

> The policy of Congress has been clear. It has been to encourage the distribution of periodicals which disseminated "information of a public character" or which were devoted to "literature, the sciences, arts, or some special industry", because it was thought that those publications as a class contributed to the public good.

In the past 7 years, this tradition, which contributed so much to the growth of our free institutions, has been abandoned. The costs have been considerable. Many religious and other nonprofit publications have failed or are in danger of failure.

Many other magazines, ranging across the ideological spectrum from the National Review to the Nation and the Progressive are struggling for survival. In addition, countless small specialty and hobby publications have disappeared. These publications are the lifeblood of the first amendment. We are all the poorer for their loss.

In conclusion, I urge speedy committee and Senate action on this legislation.●

LIFE AND DEATH STRUGGLE

● Mr. KENNEDY. Mr. President, on May 25, the trustees of Assumption College in Worcester, Mass., announced the election of Joseph H. Hagan as president of the college.

Joe Hagan had had a long and distinguished career in both education and Government. He has been a teacher, legislative assistant to Congressman ST GERMAIN of Rhode Island, staff assistant to the President's Committee on Juvenile Delinquency, special assistant in the Office of Economic Opportunity, and vice president of Bryant College in Smithfield, R.I. He is presently special assistant to the chairman of the National Endowment for the Humanities where he is responsible for congressional relations. President-elect Hagan will take office at Assumption on August 1.

On May 30, the Evening Gazette of Worcester published an editorial which commented on Joe Hagan's first message to the college community. I ask to have the text of that editorial printed in the RECORD.

The editorial follows:

LIFE AND DEATH STRUGGLE

Joseph H. Hagan, Assumption College's president-designate, hit the nail on the head when he said these are difficult days for colleges and universities.

"Both private and public institutions have felt the pinch and perhaps the small private liberal arts colleges like Assumption have felt it most severely," he said in his first message to the college community.

Indeed, America's colleges are in peril, with many facing extinction.

Says Boston University's President John R. Silber: "There are going to be academic ghost towns all over the country." He foresees as many as 500 of the nation's 1,500 private schools closing, merging or consolidating.

The problem is fairly clear. There are too many colleges and not enough students coming along.

Between 1979 and 1992, the number of 18-year-olds in the U.S. will fall from 4.3 million to 3.2 million, a 26 percent decline in the age group that comprises the bulk of entering college freshmen.

Colleges remaining open also face some of the most serious problems in their history. Inflation—caused by factors ranging from higher energy costs to salary increases—has wreaked havoc on many campuses.

Rising costs will mean higher tuition year after year and continued cuts in faculty and programs. Experts fear that these reductions and the closing of many schools may seriously undermine the quality and diversity of education. Student choices will be diminished.

Lawrence E. Fox, executive director of the Worcester Consortium for Higher Education, Inc., says many area colleges are trying to compensate for the shrinkage problem by enrolling more students over 25 years of age, developing and stressing their evening programs and "life-long learning," and developing special career and managerial programs for women.

"It's going to be a battle," said Fox, "but it is one Worcester's colleges seem to be a good position to fight."

The future will not be easy, but it will be a challenging and exciting time, said Hagan.

"If schools such as Assumption are prudent in the management of their resources, if they are vigorous in seeking well deserved financial support from both public and private sources and if all constituencies of such institutions work together for the common good and do not make unrealistic demands on one another, then such places will not only survive, they will prosper." he said.

We welcome President Hagan to the Worcester community and hope his optimism prevails.●

JOHN DAVISON ROCKEFELLER 3D

● Mr. McGOVERN. Mr. President, one of the finest citizens I have been privileged to know was the late John D. Rockefeller 3d. His death deprives us of a gentle, humane, and intelligent man who did much to elevate the well-being of his fellow humans.

I had the privilege of several discussions with him on our mutual interest in the issues of food and population.

The July 24, 1978, issue of Time magazine contains an interesting account of some of the highlights in Mr. Rockefeller's career. I ask that this article be printed in the RECORD.

The article follows:

THE SHY PHILANTHROPISTS: JOHN DAVISON ROCKEFELLER 3D, 1906–1978

On one of his trips to Washington to call on President Lyndon Johnson, John D. Rockefeller 3rd flew tourist class and did not ask to be met by a limousine. But it was raining at the airport and no cabs were in sight. So Rockefeller rented the only vehicle available and rode to the White House as the sole passenger of a sightseeing bus. Not recognizing him, a White House official asked for his name. "John Rockefeller," he replied softly, not bothering to use his distinctive middle initial. Only after several more questions did the official realize that the tall, gaunt man before him was the senior brother of one of the nation's most powerful families.

The shyest and most unpretentious of the five grandsons of the magnate who founded largest fortunes, John Davison Rockefeller 3rd always tried to stay in the background. While his brothers pursued more public careers, he devoted himself full time to the family's philanthropies, which annually donate millions to promote social welfare, health care, the arts and education around the world.

Although he shared in the family wealth, estimated at $1.5 billion, he spurned most of its superficial trappings. "He held out for a simple, sensible kind of life," said Blanchette, his wife of 45 years. Five days a week, he walked or took the crosstown bus from his apartment to his office in Manhattan; on weekends at his country estate twelve miles north of the city, he relaxed by trimming the rose bushes or chopping firewood.

Last week, after spending the day on the estate, he got a lift to the local train station with his secretary in her 1965 Mustang. As they rounded a curve, they collided head-on with a car driven by a 16-year-old boy. Rockefeller, 72, and the boy were killed instantly; the secretary and a woman in a third car were injured. The accident occurred only a mile from the 3,200-acre family estate in Pocantico Hills, N.Y., that was the childhood home of John and his brothers.

As the first-born son, John especially felt the burden of his grandfather's admonition that wealth is "a gift of God to be developed and used to the best of our ability for the good of mankind." After graduating from Princeton in 1929, he dutifully went to work at his father's office. "My father had the idea that his sons would follow the same pattern he had," he once explained. The son eventually became a trustee of the Rockefeller Foundation and of Rockefeller Center, the family's huge real estate complex in Manhattan. He also oversaw the family's $50 million restoration of colonial Williamsburg in Virginia. At one time, he was a trustee or director of some 30 educational and charitable organizations, most of them heavily financed by the Rockefellers.

In 1951, in what Rockefeller called "a major step outside the family orbit," he served as a cultural consultant to John Foster Dulles during negotiations in Tokyo on the peace treaty between the U.S. and Japan. That experience, and his subsequent travels through Asia, convinced Rockefeller that population growth had to be limited if underdeveloped countries were ever to achieve political stability. When the Rockefeller Foundation board rejected this idea as too radical, he used his own funds to set up the Population Council, which conducts research in family planning. At a dinner honoring him and his four brothers, he once said: "If my parents had been exposed to today's ideas of family planning, my brothers Win and David might not have made it." Typically, before delivering that line, he had spent a day agonizing over whether it was in good taste.

The Dulles mission inspired Rockefeller's deep interest in Asia as well. He revitalized the moribund Japan Society and established the Asia Society, the International House of Japan and the Indian International Center—organizations all devoted to fostering cultural and educational exchanges between East and West. As mementos of his trips to Asia, Rockefeller began a collection of Asian art, worth an estimated $15 million. Said his artistic adviser, Sherman Lee, director of the Cleveland Museum of Art: "He was very moved by certain images, especially the Buddhas—the serene, contemplative figures." Rockefeller bequeathed his art to the Asia Society.

Rockefeller's biggest cultural legacy, however, is New York City's Lincoln Center. Originally promising only to serve on an exploratory committee for a new music hall, he became increasingly involved in the project. Made chairman in 1960, he spent nearly 13 years overseeing negotiations with artists, architects and government officials. When the cost of the complex rose from the original estimate of $75 million to $185 million, he covered the deficit through appeals for funds and a personal gift of $10 million.

At last week's memorial service in Manhattan's Riverside Church, the eulogy was delivered by Rockefeller's only son Jay, who is Governor of West Virginia. Said he: "He endures in what he stood for, in what he did, in the inspiration and guidance he has given us. Let me say to you, my father, that you helped shape a country and a world in your own quiet way. You have set a standard for our family and for each of us as individuals. Let me say to you that we are strong and we are ready to carry that standard forward; that we know and accept our responsibility. Rest in peace. You have blessed and touched this world in good ways that will last forever."●

IN DEFENSE OF RHODESIAN CONSTITUTIONAL AGREEMENT

● Mr. GOLDWATER. Mr. President, during a recent wide-range debate over Rhodesia, many references have been made to the Rhodesian constitutional agreement of 1978. Unfortunately, many of the people who air their views about the Rhodesian situation have never read the constitutional agreement and have little knowledge of what it actually involves. In the interest of clarifying this important aspect of the Rhodesian controversy, I should like to have printed in the RECORD a booklet entitled "In Defense of the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement" written by Ndabaningi Sithole, one of the architects of the agreement and a senior partner in Rhodesia's transitional government.

The booklet follows:

IN DEFENCE OF THE RHODESIAN CONSTITUTIONAL AGREEMENT: A POWER PROMISE

PREFACE

The Government of Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) unilaterally seized the country's independence on 11 November 1965, severing its historic connections with Great Britain and the Commonwealth. For the black people of this country the act led to hardship and to the deprivation of basic human rights. For the world, it created a serious and at times a critical diplomatic problem which, for thirteen years, defied solution.

During these years various external and internal forces attempted to free Zimbabwe from the heavy burden of white supremacy. The United Kingdom Government applied economic and diplomatic pressures, and on a number of occasions entered into negotiation with Mr. Ian Smith, leader of the illegal regime. The United Nations imposed mandatory economic sanctions against the country. The Organization for African Unity gave moral and practical support to the Zimbabwean liberation movement. Other countries—South Africa, the United States of America and the frontline states of Zambia, Tanzania, Angola, Mozambique and Botswana—as well as many political parties, helped try to resolve the Rhodesian problem.

During all these years the armed struggle between Rhodesian Government forces and guerillas of the Zimbabwean liberation movements continued. This war, this battle to free the people, began on 28 April 1966, when freedom fighters of the Zimbabwe African National Union, dedicated to the cause of majority rule based on the democratic principle of one man, one vote, engaged Rhodesian security forces near Sinoia.

All efforts to solve the problem by peaceful means failed, and the armed struggle grew in intensity between 1966 and 1977.

Then, in December 1977, the internal leaders of the three African nationalist parties began negotiating with the Rhodesian Government for a just political settlement and, after three months of hard bargaining, broke the thirteen-year-old stalemate.

The Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement was signed on 3 March 1978.

The Agreement ensures that Zimbabwe will become independent on 31 December 1978 on the firm foundation of the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. In effect it represents the end of white rule and the beginning of black rule in Zimbabwe, and is therefore rightly regarded as the most significant event in the country's history.

The internal African nationalist leaders succeeded where all others had failed.

The people of Zimbabwe—African and White, civilian and guerrilla, city dwellers and those who live in the Tribal Trust lands and who know the ugly brutalities of war—have welcomed the Agreement, because it will bring peace and stability to this strife-torn country.

But the outside world, for reasons of its own, has been less enthusiastic. Attitudes range from cautious acceptance to outright denunciation of the Agreement.

My purpose in this short work is to reveal the true nature of the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement of 1978 and of the circumstances from which it was born.

Measured against objective criteria, the settlement cannot be faulted. This, I believe, will become evident to all who read this work.

CHAPTER ONE: HISTORICAL BACKGROUND

1. The Rhodesian Front Government unilaterally seized the independence of Rhodesia (Zimbabwe) on 11 November 1965. This means that it declared the country independent without the approval of Great Britain, the colonial power with the ultimate legislative responsibility for Rhodesia, nor of that of Zimbabwe's African people who constituted more than 95 per cent of the population.

2. The main objective of the Rhodesian Government's unilateral declaration of independence (UDI) was to prevent the establishment of African majority rule in Zimbabwe, to perpetuate indefinitely white minority rule, and hence the subjection of the African to the white man.

3. As a result of this unilateral action Britain refused to recognise the so-called independence of Rhodesia, and passed an Act through the House of Commons to that effect. The United Nations supported Britain in her condemnation of the Rhodesian action, as did the Organisation for African Unity (OAU).

4. In order to bring about the collapse of the Rhodesian Front Government which had engineered the illegal seizure, and thereby to ensure a return to constitutional legality, the United Nations passed a resolution applying economic sanctions against Rhodesia. These sanctions have been in force since 1966, and are still in force. As a result, Rhodesia's economy came under critical pressure and there was a massive reduction in the country's foreign currency earnings.

5. A consequence of UDI was that Rhodesia's African nationalist movements altered their strategy from internal pressure to externally-supported struggle, not only in an attempt to reverse the illegal act but finally to force the Rhodesian Government to accede to the legitimate and long-standing demands of the African people of Zimbabwe for majority rule based on the democratic principle of one man, one vote. The first bullet in this attempt was fired on 28 April 1966 by the freedom fighters of the Zimbabwe African National Union (ZANU) and since that date the conflict has escalated dramatically.

6. The armed struggle to reverse UDI, and to establish majority rule based on one man, one vote, has caused the loss of many lives, and more are being lost daily. Black and white alike have suffered and, during the thirteen years since UDI, an atmosphere of uncertainty, anxiety, insecurity and fear has pervaded the country. The people are weary of the present war which is causing many whites to emigrate and many blacks to stay abroad. The country's foreign currency earnings have been eroded even further and the economy is inexorably winding down, bringing in its wake large-scale unemployment with its many attendant evils.

7. In 1966, the British Labour Prime Minister, Mr. Harold Wilson, now Sir Harold Wilson, and the Rhodesian Premier, Mr. Ian Smith, met on HMS Tiger to resolve the UDI dispute. At that time it was considered to be essentially a problem between the British and the Rhodesian Governments rather than, in the first instance, between the Rhodesian Government and the repersentatives of the country's African masses. Consequently, Rhodesia's African nationalist leaders were not invited to participate in the talks and the negotiations centred on the technical details of the country's return to constitutional rule.

It was inevitable therefore that, in attempting to treat the symptoms rather than the cause of UDI, the two premiers would fail to reach accord. In effect the talks did not succeed because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

8. Further talks were held in 1968 between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Smith, again without the participation of the African nationalist leaders.

Once more, the talks failed because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

9. In 1971, similar talks were held between the British Conservative Government and the Rhodesian Government without the participation of the African nationalist leaders.

The agreement which flowed from these talks was put to a test of acceptability through the Pearce Commission and was rejected by the African people because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

10. In 1974, talks were held between Mr. Smith and Bishop Abel Muzorewa, President of the African National Council (ANC), without the participation of the other African nationalist leaders, who were in detention.

The agreement which Bishop Muzorewa reached with, Mr. Smith was rejected by the African people because the democratic principle of the majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

11. In 1975, talks were held in Milton Building, Salisbury, between the Rhodesian Government and the enlarged ANC, an association comprising ZANU, the original ANC, the Zimbabwe African People's Union (ZAPU), and the Front for the Liberation of Zimbabwe (FROLIZI). The talks culminated in the Victoria Falls Conference.

The initiative failed because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

12. At the beginning of 1976, talks were held between Mr. Smith and Mr. Joshua Nkomo, leader of the Zimbabwe African People's Union, and one of the co-leaders of the enlarged ANC, without the participation of any of the other African nationalist leaders.

The talks failed because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

13. After the breakdown of the Nkomo-Smith talks, Dr. Henry Kissinger, the United States Secretary of State, presented his plan to Mr. Smith for the solution of the Rhodesian problem.

The plan ultimately failed because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

14. Towards the end of 1976, the Geneva Conference was convened and was attended by all Rhodesia's African nationalist leaders.

The Conference failed because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded.

15. In 1977, the Governments of the United States of America and the United Kingdom essayed to resolve Rhodesia's thirteen-year-old deadlock. This resulted in the Anglo-American Proposals which clearly conceded the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. The majority of Rhodesia's African people, as well as the whites, accepted the principles of Proposals but rejected the mechanics proposed for an interim government.

16. In December 1977, internal talks began between the Rhodesian Government and the internally-based African nationalist leaders. For the first time in thirteen years, talks were held between the parties most relevant to the long-standing dispute. After three months of hard bargaining, an agreement was reached in which was conceded the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

The immediate reaction to the Internal Agreement of the people of Zimbabwe and of the outside world will be examined in a separate chapter in which it will be shown that the way outsiders view the Zimbabwe situation is different from the way those inside the country view the same thing.

In this work I examine broadly and critically the various agreements and attempts at agreement to resolve Rhodesia's problem. I examine why these initiatives, why the internal settlement talks, had to be. I also examine the course of the internal talks and their result as well as their effect.

The drama is far from complete. A lot has yet to be written about it as it unfolds. But there can be no doubt that the March 1978 Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement marks a distinct and significant watershed in the country's political history. It marks the end of white minority rule and the beginning of black democratic majority rule.

CHAPTER TWO: CRITICISM OF THE VARIOUS INITIATIVES

In the great effort to solve the Rhodesian problem of UDI, various attempts at agreement were made between the various parties. But they failed simply because they did not get to grips with the country's fundamental problem—the rule of the majority by an elite minority. Hence it is that there has been deadlock for the past thirteen years. It is important therefore that we examine here the attempts, so as to demonstrate why they failed to solve the problem they were intended to solve:

1. The Domboshawa Indaba, 1964.—When the Rhodesian Government imprisoned most of the well-known African nationalist leaders or held them in detention, they ran into the problem of establishing who precisely were the country's African representatives. Consequently, the Government convened the famous Domboshawa Indaba of 1964 during which it was agreed that the Chiefs, and not the African nationalist leaders, were the legitimate representatives of the African people. The Indaba did not concede the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote, the participants appearing to be unaware of the very existence of the concept, and thus the Indaba did not help to prevent UDI.

2. The Wilson-Smith Talks, 1965.—There was no formal agreement as such between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Smith, but there was an explicit understanding that Britain would not intervene militarily if and when Rhodesia seized its independence unilaterally. This naturally encouraged the Rhodesian Front Government to embark on UDI, having first been assured of Britain's non-intervention militarily.

In a sense Britain underwrote UDI.

The understanding between Mr. Wilson and Mr. Smith that Britain would in no way intervene militarily in the event of UDI did not help the cause of majority rule based on one man, one vote, and therefore did nothing to solve the fundamental problem facing the country. Rather, it helped to cause and escalate the present armed struggle.

3. The Wilson-Smith Tiger Talks, 1966.—Mr. Wilson and Mr. Smith met on HMS Tiger to resolve Rhodesia's deadlock after several behind-the-scenes preparations. The main pre-occupation of the Tiger talks was the theme of "Return to Legality", which proposals the Rhodesian Government turned down. The talks did not even attempt to concede the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. They stuck to the principle of qualified franchise. The Legislative Assembly was to consist of 33 "A" Roll seats, 17 "B" Roll African seats and 17 Reserved non-African seats.

4. The Wilson-Smith Fearless Talks, 1968.—The talks on HMS Fearless followed the same path as those on Tiger, namely, there was no concession to the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. The Legislative Assembly was to be the same as proposed at the Tiger talks. The main pre-occupational was the "Return to Legality", and once more the parties failed to reach agreement.

5. The Home-Smith Agreement, 1971.—The Agreement, between Sir Alec Douglas-Home, the British Conservative Government Foreign Secretary, and Mr. Smith, known as the Anglo-Rhodesian proposals, was rejected in 1972 by the African people when it was submitted to a test of acceptability by the people of Rhodesia as a whole.

The first flaw in the Agreement was that it was one between the British and Rhodesian Governments, whereas it should have been between the African people and the Rhodesian Government.

The second flaw was that it tended to entrench white supremacy and therefore indefinite African subjection, the termination of which was fiercely being sought by armed struggle. Above all, the Anglo-Rhodesian proposals repudiated altogether the democratic principle of one man, one vote, and offered no prospects for immediate majority rule based on that principle.

6. The Smith-Muzorewa Agreement, 1974.—The Agreement between Mr. Smith and Bishop Muzorewa was privately signed in 1974. It granted to the African people six more seats to the then existing 16 seats in Rhodesia's Legislative Assembly.

The Agreement was vehemently denounced by the other African nationalist leaders and the African people generally. Once again, the reason for its rejection was that it did not concede the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

7. The Rhodesian-Zambian Agreement, 1974.—In October 1974, Rhodesia and Zambia entered into a gentleman's agreement, without the participation of Rhodesia's African nationalist leaders. The Agreement involved, on the one hand, the freezing by Zambia of all guerrilla activities in its territory, and thereby effectively producing a ceasefire, and, on the other hand, the release by Rhodesia of all the nationalists who had been detained for the previous ten years. The Agreement was not between the Rhodesian Government and the Rhodesian nationalist leaders, and it did not concede the democratic principle of immediate majority rule based on one man, one vote. Neither the freezing of guerrilla activities by Zambia, nor the release of African nationalist detainees by Rhodesia guaranteed majority rule on the basis of adult universal suffrage, and thus the two exercises did not go to the heart of the matter.

The ceasefire agreement between Zambia and Rhodesia caused a great deal of misunderstanding between the nationalist leaders and the Zambian President, Dr. Kenneth Kaunda. The misunderstanding was particularly marked between ZANU and Dr. Kaunda because ZANU, at that time the only liberation movement engaged in the armed struggle, ignored the cease fire agreement.

8. The Zimbabwe Declaration of Unity, 1974.—In essence, the Zimbabwe Declaration of Unity was a sequel to the Zambia-Rhodesian Agreement. Its main purpose was not only to unite the various Rhodesian African nationalist organisations, but also to implement the terms of the Zambia-Rhodesia Agreement to which the nationalist leaders had not been party.

On the advice of Dr. Kaunda, most of the African nationalist leaders of Zimbabwe (Rhodesia) refrained from publicly demanding "majority rule now." It was maintained that such public utterances would have made it more difficult to bring Mr. Smith to a conference table. The ZANU leaders ignored the presidential advice and publicly continued with their demand for "majority rule now" with resultant discord not only between themselves and the other nationalist leaders, who had agreed to abide by the dictates of the Zambian president, but between the majority of the nationalist leaders and the Zambian Government.

Concluded in Lusaka, Zambia, the Zambabwe Declaration of Unity was, in the first place, a reluctant agreement between the Zambian Government and the Rhodesian African nationalist leaders, under presidential pressure, and, in the second place, was not an agreement between the nationalist leader and the Rhodesian Government. It therefore did not resolve the Rhodesian problem.

9. The Pretoria Agreement, 1975.—The Pretoria Agreement was entered into by the South African and the Rhodesian Governments, on the one hand, and the Zambian Government on the other. The Rhodesian nationalist leaders were not consulted on the terms of the Agreement and, therefore, were not party to it. It was signed by the South African, Rhodesian and Zambian Governments, but not by any Rhodesian nationalist organisation. It did not conclude the principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

In compliance with the terms of this Agreement, a conference was held on the Victoria Falls bridge between the Rhodesian Front Government and the enlarged ANC, which at that time embraced the four major Rhodesian nationalist parties. It ended in deadlock. Mr. Smith stuck to his stand of "no majority rule", while the nationalists stuck to theirs of "majority rule now". Thus the Pretoria Agreement died on the bridge that links Rhodesia with Zambia.

10. The ZIPA Agreement, 1975.—The Zimbabwe People's Army was formed by some of the frontline states without consultation with the political leadership of the enlarged ANC.

The philosophy behind the formation of ZIPA was based on the mistaken belief on the part of some of the frontline states that the future political leaders of a free and independent Zimbabwe should come only from among the fighting cadres of Zimbabwe's freedom fighters. The ZIPA Agreement, therefore, was not reached between Zimbabwe's political leaders and Zimbabwe's fighting cadres, but between Zimbabwe's military leaders and the frontline states.

It was rejected by the people of Zimbabwe, through their political leaders, and by the rank and file of their fighting forces.

11. The Nkomo-Smith Talks, 1976.—The central point of these Talks was that certain African nationalists would be appointed to positions in the Rhodesian Government, as it was then constituted, with Mr. Nkomo as Foreign Minister. This was the understanding before Mr. Smith and Mr. Nkomo began their negotiations. Excluded from the discussions were Mr. Nkomo's colleagues in the combined African nationalist leadership of the enlarged ANC.

The negotiations, which had raised the hopes of the frontline states, were opposed by the African people of Zimbabwe because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote had not been conceded at any point either before or during the negotiations, and the Talks consequently failed.

12. The Kissinger Agreement, 1976.—This was an Agreement reached in Pretoria, South Africa between the United States of America, represented by Dr. Henry Kissinger, the American Secretary of State, and leaders of the Rhodesian, South African and Zambian Governments. Zimbabwe's nationalist leaders were excluded.

According to the Agreement, an interim government was to be formed consisting of a five-man Council of State comprising a white chairman, two African representatives and two white representatives, and of a Council of Ministers on which Africans would outnumber whites. Key ministerial positions—Defence, Law and Order, and Finance—were to remain in white hands.

The Agreement was silent on the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote, did not therefore tackle the fundamental problem, and was rejected by Rhodesia's African nationalist leaders.

13. The Patriotic Front Agreement 1976.—This was an Agreement between the Patriotic Front (PF) and the frontline states that only the PF would speak for the people of Zimbabwe at the anticipated Geneva Conference.

At the urging of the frontline states, the PF was formed specifically for this purpose. It was in essence a curious marriage-of-convenience between two ideologically disparate personalities: Mr. Joshua Nkomo, leader of ZAPU, and Mr. Robert Mugabe, then Secretary of ZANU.

The Agreement was rejected by the people of Zimbabwe, through their nationalist leaders, on the grounds that it was a foreign political device designed to impose upon them certain leaders who had lost their popularity with the masses but who nevertheless were favourites among members of the frontline states.

The belief was widely held that the PF had been sired and fostered by some of the frontline states in order to install Zimbabwean leaders of their own choice in a free and independent Zimbabwe, irrespective of their acceptability to the people whose right, and choice, was to follow political leadership freely and democratically elected. The democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was unacceptable to the PF, hence their rejection of pre-independence elections in Zimbabwe, and their demand for the outright transfer of power into their hands.

14. The Geneva Conference, 1976.—The Conference was globally heralded as the most promising step yet taken towards producing a solution to the Rhodesian problem, and it received the moral—and in some instances the practical—support of many Governments, including those of the United Kingdom, the United States of America, the frontline states and South Africa. The OAU gave its blessing to the initiative, and the people of Zimbabwe, with high hopes of a final breakthrough, gave their enthusiastic support.

Chaired by Mr. Ivor Richard, representing the United Kingdom Government, the Conference was attended by the leaders of the Rhodesian Front Government, the United African National Council, the Zimbabwe African National Union and the joint leaders of the Patriotic Front.

The Conference—the first external meeting to be attended by all the concerned parties—was bedevilled by dissension, and argument on non-essential details: the intrusion of external influences, and personal competitiveness between some of the delegates. Opinions polarized on some of the issues.

However, in the final analysis the initiative failed because the Rhodesian Government delegation, claiming that it had been mislead—by the Government of the United States and the United Kingdom—in regard to the nature and objectives of the Conference, differed from the African nationalist leaders on the fundamental democratic principle of majorty rule based on one man, one vote.

After the Conference broke up, the broad initiative continued in a somewhat half-hearted fashion through the offices of Mr. Richard, who achieved very little in further discussion with the Rhodesian Government, and the Geneva exercise finally became irrelevant.

15. The Anglo-American Proposals 1977.—This was an attempt by the Governments of the United States of America and the United Kingdom to resolve the thirteen-year-old Rhodesian deadlock. The attempt resulted in the Anglo-American Proposals which, among other things, recognised the democratic principle of majority rule, based on one man, one vote, and independence in 1978 for Zimbabwe.

The African nationalists and the Rhodesian Government broadly accepted the basic principles enunciated by the Anglo-American Proposals, but rejected most of the mechanics for the proposed interim government, principally the proposal that all power be handed to a British Resident Commissioner who would form a one-man legislative authority for the interim period between agreement and the democratic election of a majority rule government based on universal franchise.

Thus, on the level of constitutional principles, the Anglo-American Proposals did provide the solution, but did not do so on the level of the mechanics of the interim government.

16. The Internal Agreement, 1978.—This Agreement was between the Rhodesian Government and the African nationalists who were internally based and who were supported by both the freedom fighters and the overwhelming majority of the African people, now sick and tired of the war which was claiming the lives of twenty people each day.

The Internal Agreement included virtually all the basic principles put forward in the Anglo-American Proposals save that during the interim period all effective power would be vested in an Executive Council assisted by a Council of Ministers (Cabinet) consisting of black and white members in equal numbers.

It should be noted that all the agreements, or attempts at agreement, with the exception of the last two, were quite irrelevant to the Rhodesian (Zimbabwean) problem. The only agreement that was to make any sense was the one between the Rhodesian Government and the majority of the African nationalist liberation movements acting in concert—one which accepted the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man one vote.

The only ceasefire that could make sense had to be one that derived from an agreement between the Government in power and the African nationalist parties, representing both the political and military movements. What the OAU or UN thought or said was irrelevant. Neither the OAU nor the UN was fighting the war, and consequently there was no point in seeking their approval of the Internal Settlement Agreement. The war was being fought by Zimbabwe's freedom fighters and the Rhodesian security forces. It was therefore logical and relevant that the Agreement produced by the Rhodesian Government and the African nationalist parties received the support of the majority of the people of Zimbabwe.

CHAPTER THREE: WHY THE INITIATIVES FAILED

There are good reasons why the agreements or attempts at agreement, enumerated in Chapter Two, were unsuccessful with the exception of the latter two. It is the twofold thesis of this chapter, that all the other attempts failed to resolve the Rhodesian stalemate because the parties to these agreements or negotiations were often the wrong parties, and because the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was not conceded either before or during such negotiations.

The following is a broad examination of this twofold thesis:

1. The Domboshawa Indaba, 1964.—The Domboshawa Indaba produced an agreement between the Rhodesian Government and the African Chiefs. It sought to prevent the establishment of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

The Chiefs were a wrong party to any agreement concerning the political future of the African people of Zimbabwe. The Chiefs were Government servants. They were paid and disciplined by the same Government, and they depended on the Government for their official recognition. For all practical purposes, therefore, the Chiefs were Government agents in the Tribal Trust Lands, and the African people defined them in that light. No agreement of a political nature between the Government and the Chiefs could therefore have been binding on the African people who sought to replace a white minority government with an African majority government.

Similarly, and other than for its representation of Rhodesian whites, the Rhodesian Government was a wrong party.

Thus, the agreement produced by the Indaba was wrong both in representativeness and in principle, and it failed.

2. Anglo-Rhodesian Talks, 1965, 1966, 1968 and 1970.—The talks and agreements between the British and the Rhodesian Governments did not succeed in solving the fundamental problem facing the country because the British Government, although having de jure authority, was a wrong party to such talks and agreements. Britain's authority in Rhodesia had been effectively liquidated when UDI was declared in November 1965, and consequently, in practical terms, she had become irrelevant to any agreement relating to the implementation of the principle of majority rule.

Nor was the British Government willing to tackle the essentials of the problem. In 1966, for instance, Britain on HMS Tiger, was still preoccupied with the qualified franchise—33 "A" Roll seats, 17 "B" Roll African seats and 17 Reserved non-African seats—when the African nationalists demanded majority rule based on one man, one vote. Both the British and Rhodesian Governments ignored the issue which had been the cause of the armed struggle.

In 1968, again, Britain, on HMS Fearless, ignored the issue.

Not only was Britain a wrong party to these talks, but she also propounded principles which were inconsistent with legitimate African nationist demands.

Neither the British nor the Rhodesian Governments had been elected by the African people of Zimbabwe, and therefore neither held a mandate from them.

The Home-Smith Agreement of 1971 also suffered from this flaw and thus Sir Alec and Mr. Smith (other than for his representation of Rhodesian whites) were wrong parties. Furthermore, none of the talks nor the Home-Smith Agreement conceded the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

As a result, the talks and the Agreement were wrong both in representatives and in principle, and they failed.

3. The Smith-Muzorewa Agreement, 1974.—The parties to this Agreement were the right ones in that Mr. Smith represented the Rhodesian whites, while Bishop Muzorewa represented the blacks, as leader of the ANC, at that time the largest African nationalist movement. The essential element of representatives, therefore, was present but the Agreement foundered on that of white supremacy, and hence indefinite African subjection. It ignored the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote—the cornerstone of African political aspirations—and consequently failed.

4. The Rhodesian-Zambian Agreement, 1974.—The Agreement between the Rhodesian and the Zambian Governments was wrongly based in that not only were its terms unacceptable to the African nationalists but that neither government had been elected by the people of Zimbabwe and therefore held no mandate from them. Hence, the Agreement failed not only in respect of representativeness (other than that of Rhodesian whites) but also in respect of the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. In fact, a pre-condition of the Agreement was the requirement of the African nationalist leaders not to demand acceptance of this basic principle.

5. The Zimbabwe Declaration of Unity, 1974.—This Agreement was reached between the Zambian Government and the various African nationalist movements, under pressure from Dr. Kaunda. While the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote was accepted, the Agreement could not possibly have succeeded because it did not include the Rhodesian Government, a significant party to the dispute. Therefore, although the Agreement was correct in principle, it was wrong in representativeness.

6. The Pretoria Agreement, 1975.—This Agreement was reached between the South African and Rhodesian Governments, on the one hand, and the Zambian Government on the other.

Apart from the Rhodesian Government's representation of Rhodesian whites, all three were wrong parties in that none had been elected by the people of Zimbabwe and therefore held no mandate from them. Moreover, the Agreement did not concede the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

Thus, the Agreement was wrong both in representativeness and in principle and it was inevitable that it would fail.

7. The ZIPA Agreement, 1975.—The Agreement was reached between Zimbabwe's military leaders and the frontline states.

Both were wrong parties in that none of the governments of the frontline states had been elected by the people of Zimbabwe and therefore held no mandate from them, and Zimbabwe's military leaders were subservient to the people and their chosen political leaders and similarly had not the right to enter into any agreement. For these reasons it was rejected by the people, and it failed.

8. The Nkomo-Smith Agreement, 1976.—As leader of the Rhodesian Government and therefore representative of the Rhodesian whites, Mr. Smith was a correct party, but Mr. Nkomo was not. Mr. Nkomo was a minority leader in the enlarged ANC and had not consulted either his fellow leaders or the people of Zimbabwe on the terms of the Agreement. Moreover, it did not concede the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

Thus the Agreement was wrong both in representativeness and in principle, and it failed.

9. The Kissinger Agreement, 1976.—The Governments of the United States of America, South Africa, Zambia and Rhodesia were parties to this Agreement. The African nationalist movements were not consulted.

Once again, and other than for the Rhodesian Government's representation of Rhodesian whites, all three were wrong parties in that none had been elected by the African people of Zimbabwe and therefore held no mandate from them. Furthermore, the Kissinger Agreement did not concede the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. Thus it was wrong both in representativeness and in principle, and it failed.

10. The Patriotic Front Agreement, 1976.—This Agreement was reached between the frontline states and the Patriotic Front.

Both were wrong parties. The people of Zimbabwe had not elected the governments of the frontline states and for the reasons outlined in the previous chapter, had rejected the PF. Consequently, neither party held a mandate from the people. Moreover, the Agreement rejected pre-independence elections and therefore the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

Thus, the PF Agreement was wrong both in representativeness and in principle, and it failed.

11. The Geneva Conference, 1976.—The participants at the Geneva Conference were the Rhodesian Government and the three major African nationalist parties: the African National Council, the Zimbabwe African National Union, and the Patriotic Front. The Rhodesian Government delegates came armed with a mandate from the Rhodesian whites and the nationalist delegates with one from the African masses of Zimbabwe, and thus they were the right parties to the Conference.

The Rhodesian Government delegation, however, did not concede the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote and the Geneva Conference consequently failed because, although it was right in representativeness, it was wrong in principle.

12. The Anglo-American Proposals, 1977.—The Proposals put forward by the Governments of the United States of America and the United Kingdom to the Rhodesian Government (representing Rhodesian whites) and all the African nationalist leaders (representing the African masses) went a long way towards loosening the Rhodesian deadlock.

Intensive consultations were held between all four parties before the American and British Governments tabled their Proposals and the result was that much of their content had been contributed by the Rhodesian Government and the African nationalist leaders. Of greatest significance was the concession by all parties to the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. However, the inclusion in the Proposals of a one-man interim administration (see previous chapter) was unacceptable to both the Rhodesian Government and the African nationalist leaders and was rejected.

It is true to say, therefore, that on substantive matters the Anglo-American Proposals succeeded to a remarkable degree but failed on the question of mechanics.

Thus, and aside from the American and British Governments, who played a conciliatory but dynamic role in formulating the Proposals, the question of both representativeness and of principle was correct. The mechanics of the interim government were rejected, however, and the exercise failed.

From what has been outlined in this chapter, it is clear that for any attempt to succeed in producing a solution to the Rhodesian problem, two criteria had to be established and accepted:

(a) That the parties to the negotiations were the acknowledged leaders of both the whites and the black masses of Zimbabwe with a mandate from them to enter into agreement; and

(b) That a pre-condition of the negotiations was that any agreement reached should embody the fundamental democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

With the exception of the Anglo-American Proposals and the Internal Settlement Agreement, all previous initiatives failed because these two criteria had not been established.

Despite having accepted these two criteria, the Anglo-American Proposals failed because of the mechanics of the interim government.

The Internal Settlement Agreement succeeded because representativeness, principle and the mechanics were correct.

CHAPTER FOUR: THE NECESSITY FOR INTERNAL TALKS

There are many reasons why the Internal Settlement Talks had to be held, and the following is a resume of these reasons:

1. Failure of External Factors.—If external talks to solve the Rhodesian problem had succeeded, there would have been no need for internal talks. It is a matter of historic record that all attempts from 1965 to 1977 by external parties failed to resolve the deadlock.

As we have already seen, in 1965, 1966 and 1968, talks between Mr. Harold Wilson and Mr. Ian Smith failed to resolve the problem.

In 1971 talks between Sir Alec Douglas-Home and Mr. Smith also failed when what they had agreed to was massively rejected by the African people through the Pearce Commission.

The Rhodesian Government wrongly assumed that it could resolve the problem through negotiation with the British Government without first coming to terms with the African nationalists. Hence it resorted to the detention of African nationalist leaders in the hope that, by putting them out of circulation, the African people as a whole would in due course come to accept the minority-rule Rhodesian Government, and thus encourage Britain legally to recognise the UDI Government of the Rhodesian Front.

Similarly, successive British Governments also sought to produce a solution by negotiating with the Rhodesian Government without first coming to terms with the African nationalist leaders. Despite the good intentions behind the British Government's persistent attempts, it was inevitable that they would fail time and again, as the basis of their negotiations was inconsistent with legitimate African political aspirations. For example, and until the Anglo-American Proposals of 1977, the British Government was still attempting to negotiate with the Rhodesian Government on the basis of a qualified franchise, contrary to the democratic and historic demands by the African nationalist leaders for a universal franchise—one man, one vote.

It bears repeating, also, that Britain was unqualified to negotiate for the African people of Zimbabwe as her authority for Rhodesia had been effectively liquidated by the Unilateral Declaration of Independence by the Rhodesian Front Government, and it was rude and crude, but possibly correct, when a Zambian diplomat characterised her as a "toothless bulldog."

The Rhodesian Government, on its own, was equally unqualified to resolve the problem to the advantage of the African people since, aside from being representative only of the Rhodesian white minority, its main purpose in seizing independence from Britain was to prevent the establishment of majority rule in Zimbabwe.

The British Government and, to a lesser extent, the Rhodesian Government were external to the fundamental problem that affected the future of more than 95 per cent of Rhodesia's, or Zimbabwe's, population. It is this fact that was finally responsible for the failure of these two governments to provide a solution.

The Zambian and South African Governments were among other external forces who attempted to resolve the Rhodesian problem. They, too, failed as the answer could not possibly have been found in the Lusaka-Salisbury-Pretoria axis. Lusaka looked at the problem through the eyes of the Zambian one-party state, Salisbury through those of Rhodesian white supremacy, and Pretoria through those of South African apartheid—each inconsistent with the democratic aspirations and demands of the vast majority of the people of Zimbabwe.

The governments of the frontline states (Zambia, Tanzania, Mozambique, Botswana and Angola) also tried to produce a solution. But they were unsuccessful. Not only were they external to the problem but they similarly were unsuited for the role.

True to their one-party state principles, the Zambian Government had arbitrarily selected one of Zimbabwe's African nationalist leaders, Mr. Joshua Nkomo, as their choice for president of an independent Zimbabwean people. As explained in the previous chapter, Mr. Nkomo was a minority African nationalist leader and the overwhelming majority of the people of Zimbabwe rejected the attempt as undemocratic.

Tanzania approached the Rhodesian problem from the viewpoint of ujumaa, a specifically Tanzanian brand of socialism which was alien to the people of Zimbabwe.

With the active encouragement of Mr. Robert Mugabe, an externally-based African nationalist leader who was also co-leader of the Patriotic Front, Mozambique attempted to apply its marxist principles to the solution but failed because the people of Zimbabwe were diametrically opposed to a marxist solution; they wanted free and democratic elections.

The Organisation for African Unity saw the Rhodesian problem through the eyes of the frontline states, was in fact more concerned with the interests of those states than with the interests of the Zimbabwean people, and herefore ignored the realities of Zimbabwe. Thus, despite its genuine support for the liberation of Zimbabwe, the OAU, as an external body, could not by its very nature solve the problem.

Similarly, the United Nations attempted to liberate Zimbabwe but, because it, too, is an external organization, interpreting the Zimbabwean issue on the basis of the interests of its member states, it failed to find a solution. Its principal weapon—economic sanctions—proved ineffective (sanctions damaged, but did not destroy, the illegal regime) because its member states traded with Rhodesia. Some were obliged to do so in order to safeguard their own vulnerable economies, others violated the Sanctions Order because their governments exercised insufficient control over their private commercial concerns. Even the United States of America was, until recently, importing Rhodesian chrome.

To summarize, no external force, however well-intentioned it might have been, succeeded in resolving the Rhodesian problem simply because it did not see the issue from the viewpoint of the Zimbabwean people themselves.

These external forces acted in their own interests and according to their own prejudices, and, far from alleviating the problem, they complicated it. Too many parties were involved, too many conflicting solutions suggested, and the end result is that for thirteen years the Zimbabwean people were subjected to repression without hope of relief.

2. Failure of Internal Factors.—A number of internal elements have been sincerely anxious to resolve the Rhodesian problem, but sincerity is no substitute for the ability to face political realities. They did not see the real problem.

The Chiefs wanted a solution based on chiefly authority, but their status is hereditable and not elective. The nationalist movement is a democratic one; it rejects the hereditable right to rule for precisely the same reasons as the people of Great Britain finally rejected their aristocratic oligarchies. The Chiefs, by the very nature of their office, could not provide a solution.

On the other hand, although the Rhodesian Government was established on the elective as opposed to the hereditable principle, it nonetheless sought to entrench white supremacy, and its failure to overcome the impasse was inevitable. So long as it rejected free elections based on one man, one vote, and intended to prolong white rule in a country that is predominantly black, it could never succeed in its efforts.

Specifically, the internal talks between Mr. Ian Smith and Bishop Abel Muzorewa failed because the former offered something far less than one man, one vote, and the latter accepted the offer. The people, of course, rejected this acceptance. Both Mr. Smith and Bishop Muzorewa were, for different reasons, ill-attuned to the real needs of Zimbabwe and could not therefore resolve the situation.

The Nkomo-Smith Talks of 1976 ran the same course of rejection by the people of Zimbabwe.

3. The Armed Struggle.—Thirteen years of external talks failed. So did the initial attempts at an internal solution. The final attempt at an internal solution has been successful because—and I have absolutely no doubts about this—the armed struggle forced the Rhodesian Front Government to come to terms with political reality.

The war between the freedom fighters and the Rhodesian security forces, comprising both black and white soldiers, has been long and bitter. Both sides have fought with equal determination. Both sides have committed atrocities. Both sides have justified their respective causes on moral grounds. Both sides have called upon the same God to give them victory.

The armed struggle, what we in Zimbabwe call Chimurenga, has killed many people of both races. It has destroyed many African homes, many white farms. It has seriously disrupted family life in both racial communities. It has made deep inroads into the national economy, which has led to insecurity and to unemployment. Many Africans in the border areas have entered Mozambique as refugees; many whites have left the country.

As the war escalated, so did the elements of fear and insecurity enter more and more into the hearts of the black man and of the white man, the Asian and the man of mixed descent.

The people of Zimbabwe became boneweary of the war, and fearful of its ultimate consequences. They wanted a peaceful settlement, and all that this would bring. Both the freedom fighters and members of the Rhodesian security forces came to realize that the fighting had been too hard and unrewarding, and that an accommodation—fair to all, of genuine benefit to the people of Zimbabwe—had to be found.

That accommodation has been found. War has begot peace.

4. Economic Sanctions.—In somewhat the same way, but of lesser importance, United Nations economic sanctions helped bring about peaceful settlement.

Sanctions failed to bring down the Rhodesian Government, but they had a cumulative effect both on the Rhodesian economy and on the morale of the white supremacists.

In 1977 and 1978 the economy degenerated to the point where the white community began to look, not just for material relief, but for political relief as well. In short, sanctions have influenced the leaders of the various economic sectors—industry, finance, commerce, agriculture—to bring pressure to bear on a hitherto reluctant white political leadership to find a realistic political solution to Zimbabwe's dilemma.

Let me sum up. Clearly, it was the failure of both the external and preliminary internal political initiatives, combined with the cumulative effects of the armed struggle and, to a lesser degree, the effects of sanctions, that produced, among both blacks and whites, a more realistic attitude towards the Rhodesian problem.

There had been no answers for thirteen years, so Zimbabweans began to look for a solution, not beyond themselves, but within themselves.

They realised that they had to co-operate among themselves if the central issue was to be resolved at all.

That is the broad outline. The immediate stimulus for the internal talks which led to the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement was Mr. Smith's public commitment to the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote. This was something he had been denying the African people for thirteen years. His surrender on the fundamental issue was the key that opened the door to successful negotiation.

The more imaginative of the African nationalist leaders decided to test his word, and his sincerity, and when they did this Mr. Smith was not found wanting. On 3 March 1978 he and three African nationalist leaders signed a document which provided for a free, independent and democratic Zimbabwe to be inaugurated on 31 December 1978.

CHAPTER FIVE: THE RESULT OF INTERNAL TALKS

The internal negotiations which formally began on 2 December 1977 ended on 3 March 1978, when the following Agreement was formally signed by the heads of the four delegations:

Rhodesian constitutional agreement

Whereas the present constitutional situation in Rhodesia has led to the imposition of economic and other sanctions by the International Community against Rhodesia and to armed conflict within Rhodesia and from neighbouring territories;

And whereas it is necessary in the interests of our country that an agreement should be reached that would lead to the termination of such sanctions and the cessation of the armed conflict;

And whereas, in an endeavour to reach such an agreement, delegates from the Rhodesian Government, African National Council (Sithole), United African National Council and Zimbabwe United Peoples Organisation have met during the last two months in Salisbury and, having discussed fully the proposals put forward by the various delegations, have reached agreement on certain fundamental principles to be embodied in a new Constitution that will lead to the termination of the aforementioned sanctions and the cessation of the armed conflict;

Now, therefore:

A. It is hereby agreed that a Constitution will be drafted and enacted which will provide for majority rule on the basis of universal adult suffrage on the following terms—

1. There will be a Legislative Assembly consisting of one hundred members and the following provisions will apply thereto—

(a) there will be a common voters' roll with all citizens of eighteen years and over being eligible for registration as voters, subject to certain recognised disqualifications;

(b) seventy-two of the seats in the Legislative Assembly will be reserved for Blacks who will be elected by voters who are enrolled on the common roll;

(c) twenty-eight of the seats in the Legislative Assembly will be reserved for Whites (i.e. Europeans are defined in the 1969 Constitution) who will be elected as follows—

(i) twenty will be elected on a preferential voting system by White voters who are enrolled on the common roll;

(ii) eight will be elected by voters who are enrolled on the common roll from sixteen candidates who will be nominated, in the case of the first Parliament, by an electoral college composed of the White members of the present House of Assembly and, in the case of any subsequent Parliament, by an electoral college composed of the twenty-eight Whites who are members of the Parliament dissolved immediately prior to the general election;

(d) the reserved seats referred to in (c) above shall be retained for a period of at least ten years or two Parliaments, whichever is the longer, and shall be reviewed at the expiration of that period, at which time a Commission shall be appointed, the chairman of which shall be a judge of the High Court, to undertake this review. If that Commission recommends that the arrangements regarding the said reserved seats should be changed—

(i) an amendment to the Constitution to effect such change may be made by a Bill which receives the affirmative votes of not less than fifty-one members;

(ii) the said Bill shall also provide that the seventy-two seats referred to in (b) above shall not be reserved for Blacks;

(e) the members filling the seats referred to in (c) above will be prohibited from forming a coalition with any single minority party for the purpose of forming a Government.

2. There will be a justicable Declaration of Rights which will protect the rights and freedoms of individuals and, inter alia, will provide for protection from deprivation of property unless adequate compensation is paid promptly, and for protection of pension rights of persons who are members of pension funds.

3. The independence and qualifications of the Judiciary will be entrenched and judges will have security of tenure.

4. There will be an independent Public Services Board, the members of which will have security of tenure. The Board will be responsible for appointments to, promotions in, and discharges from, the Public Service.

5. The Public Service, Police Force, Defense Forces and Prison Service will be maintained in a high state of efficiency and free from political interference.

6. Pensions which are payable from the Consolidated Revenue Fund will be guaranteed and charged on the Consolidated Revenue Fund and will be remittable outside the country.

7. Citizens who at present are entitled to dual citizenship will not be deprived of their present entitlement.

8. The above-mentioned provisions will be set out or provided for in the Constitution and will be regarded as specially entrenched provisions which may only be amended by a Bill which receives the affirmative votes of not less than seventy-eight members.

B. It is hereby also agreed that, following the agreement set out above, the next step will be the setting up of a Transitional Government. The prime function of the Transitional Government will be—

(a) to bring about a ceasefire; and

(b) to deal with related matters such as—

(i) the composition of the future Military Forces, including those members of the nationalist forces who wish to take up a military career, and the rehabilitation of others;

(ii) the rehabilitation of those affected by the war.

C. It is also hereby agreed that it will be the duty of the Transitional Government to determine and deal with the following matters—

(a) the release of detainees;

(b) the review of sentences for offences of a political character;

(c) the further removal of discrimination;

(d) the creation of a climate conducive to the holding of free and democratic elections;

(e) the drafting of the new Constitution in terms of this Agreement;

(f) procedures for registration of voters with a view to the holding of a general election at the earliest possible date.

D. It is also hereby agreed that the Transitional Government will comprise an Executive Council and a Ministerial Council and the following provisions will apply thereto—

1. Executive Council—

(a) Composition: The Executive Council will be composed of the Prime Minister and three Black Ministers, being the heads of those delegations engaged in the negotiations. The members will take turns in presiding as chairman of the Executive Council in such sequence and for such period as that Council may determine. Decisions of the Executive Council will be by consensus.

(b) Functions: (i) The Executive Council will be responsible for ensuring that the functions given to, and the duties imposed on, the Transitional Government by the Constitutional Agreement are dealt with as expeditiously as possible. It will take policy decisions in connection with the preparations.

(ii) The Executive Council may refer the matters set out in Sections B and C of this Agreement, or any other matter, to the Ministerial Council for examination and recommendation.

(iii) The Executive Council will review decisions or recommendations of the Ministerial Council and may confirm such decisions or recommendations or refer them back to the Ministerial Council for further consideration.

2. Ministerial Council—

(a) Composition: The Ministerial Council will be composed of equal numbers of Black and White Ministers. The Black Ministers will be nominated in equal proportions by the heads of those delegations engaged in the negotiations. The White Ministers will be nominated by the Prime Minister. The chairmanship of the Ministerial Council will alternate between Black and White Ministers. The Prime Minister will nominate which White Minister shall take the chair and the heads of those delegations engaged in the negotiations will nominate which of the Black Ministers shall take the chair in the sequence and for the period determined by the Ministerial Council.

(b) Functions: (i) The Ministerial Council will operate on the cabinet system. For each portfolio, or group of portfolios, there will be a Black and a White Minister who will share responsibility.

(ii) The Ministerial Council will be responsible for initiating legislation and for supervising the preparation of such legislation as may be directed by the Executive Council.

(iii) The Ministerial Council will make recommendations to the Executive Council on all matters referred to it by the Executive Council and on any other matter it thinks fit.

(iv) Decisions of the Ministerial Council will be by majority vote and subject to review by the Executive Council.

3. Parliament.—

(a) Parliament will continue to function during the life of the Transitional Government and will meet for the following purposes as and when the Executive Council considers it should be summoned—

(i) to pass a Constitution Amendment Act enabling Ministers who have not been elected to Parliament to serve for periods in excess of four months;

(ii) to pass legislation for the registration of voters;

(iii to pass the 1978/79 Budget;

(iv) to enact any legislation or deal with any other matter brought forward by the Transitional Government (e.g. for the further removal of discrimination);

(v) to enact the new Constitution;

(vi) to nominate 16 Whites for election by voters on the common roll to eight of the seats reserved for Whites.

(b) The work of the various Select Committees and of the Senate Legal Committee will proceed as normal.

E. It is also hereby agreed that Independence Day shall be the 31st December, 1978.

Signed at Salisbury this third day of March, 1978.

N. SITHOLE,
African National Council.
CHIEF CHIRAU,
Zimbabwe United Peoples Organisation.
I. D. SMITH,
Rhodesia Government.
A. T. MUZOREWA,
United African National Council.

The Agreement was a deeply significant one, its implications far reaching.

It was the first ever to be made between blacks and whites in the country known as Rhodesia.

It marked the point where Rhodesia ceased to exist and Zimbabwe was created.

It represented the end of an 88-year period of white supremacy and black subjection.

It was a great and unique achievement by the African freedom fighters who, through the armed struggle, had brought about the necessary changes in the political climate of the country. They strengthened the armoury of the African nationalist politicians. War, in the hands of the African negotiators, produced the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement of 3 March 1978.

CHAPTER SIX: THE COURSE OF THE INTERNAL TALKS

When the internal negotiations, designed to resolve the Rhodesian problem, began in earnest on 2 December 1977, a lot of people, both inside and outside the country, raised objections. Let me examine these briefly so that the true nature of the talks may be revealed.

1. Smith the Constant Factor.—Many critics were quick to point out that, in view of the failures of the past thirteen years, nothing positive could be achieved by negotiating with Mr. Smith.

They rightly claimed that, in all the negotiations over those years, Mr. Smith had been the "constant factor", and all other parties had been the "variable factors". This was true, as the following list shows:

1965: Smith-Wilson negotiations.
1966: Smith-Wilson negotiations.
1968: Smith-Wilson negotiations.

1977: Smith-Anglo-American negotiations.

Thus the failure of these initiatives can right be attributed to the "constant factor" and not to the "variable factors".

The reason is obvious: Mr. Smith was consistent in his determination on no majority rule in my lifetime, whereas all the variable factors had demanded majority rule, either immediate or within the foreseeable future.

So long as Mr. Smith resisted majority rule Rhodesia's problem remained, short of direct military intervention, insoluble. Mr. Smith was the cause of the problem, and he was the solution to it.

Both the internal and external opposition to the 1977–1978 negotiations based their arguments on the fact that, over the past thirteen years, the world and the Africans of Zimbabwe had learnt to distrust Mr. Smith's word.

This distrust was understandable, but quite misplaced—as events were to prove.

The opposition failed to perceive that there were two Mr. Smiths. They failed to see this even after Mr. Smith had publicly committed his Government to majority rule based on one man, one vote. They were reluctant to give him the benefit of the doubt.

But in fact, Mr. Smith had undergone a real change of attitude. For more than a decade he had fiercely rejected the principle of majority rule. Now, reluctantly but with an honest and realistic appreciation that white authority could no longer be sustained, he had come to accept the democratic principle.

This failure to draw a distinction between the two Mr. Smiths provoked the opposition to the talks. While the outside world saw only the first Mr. Smith, the participants in the internal talks actually dealt with the second Mr. Smith—the one who could, finally, be trusted.

2. Preconditions for the Internal Talks.—

Most of the critics, internal and external, felt that no negotiations should be entered into before the following conditions had been met:

i. The release of all political detainees, and of political prisoners.

ii. The lifting of the ban on political parties;

iii. The ending of political hangings.

These were conditions which, it was said, would test Mr. Smith's sincerity in accepting the democratic principle of majority rule based on one man, one vote.

However, the internal African nationalist leaders felt that the acceptance of majority rule in itself constituted sufficient reason to begin negotiations. That acceptance was the only absolutely necessary pre-condition for the talks. The principle was not negotiable; everything else was.

These leaders felt very strongly that to lay down a series of supplementary and relatively minor pre-conditions would not help any sort of dialogue to get started, and a golden opportunity would be missed of putting Mr. Smith to the test—and surely his trustworthiness or otherwise would soon emerge in negotiation? Across the conference table, Mr. Smith either had to convince the African leadership that his Government genuinely wanted a peaceful and democratic settlement, or he had to justify an escalating war which was claiming more and more precious lives with each month that passed.

Let me say again: Mr. Smith was both the cause and the solution to the problem. The African nationalist leaders also believed that unnecessary pre-conditions would have had an adverse psychological impact on Mr. Smith. They preferred to begin the negotiations, concentrating initially on the constitutional issue (that is to say, on those areas of disagreement where the issues were not so sensitive) before looking into the questions of the bannings, detentions and hangings.

As it turned out, this policy paid handsome dividends. The conference did not—as had happened so often in the past—begin by the delegates accusing each other of making this unacceptable demand or refusing that acceptable one. They all agreed on the one absolutely necessary condition: universal suffrage for the people of Zimbabwe. The Conference had been convened to give practical effect to this principle, to work out the mechanics of the transition to majority rule. Once this had been done, all else could be resolved, including, above all, the de-escalation of the bloody war which had already claimed far too many lives.

So, although the critics of the negotiations, on the one hand, and the African nationalist leaders, on the other, wished to put Mr. Smith's integrity to the test, they chose different ways of doing so: the critics through prior conditions, the nationalist leaders through seeking a new constitutional arrangement which would automatically lead to the fulfillment of those conditions.

Criticism of the negotiations touched on the superficial rather than the fundamental.

The fundamental issue was whether or not the negotiations would lead to an acceptable constitutional arrangement ensuring transition to majority rule, the release of detainees, the review of sentences for political offences, the stopping of the hangings.

The superficial issue was whether or not these humane acts would really show that Mr. Smith could be trusted.

In brief, the African nationalist leadership believed that all that was wrong with the country—detention, death sentences, bannings, racial discrimination, the national state of emergency and so forth—stemmed from the imposition, by the Rhodesian Front Government, of an unpopular constitutional structure on the people of Zimbabwe. To have removed the symptoms would not have produced a cure—people in the past, for instance, had been detained, released, and then swiftly re-detained. But to change the constitutional structure would be to change all else, once and forever.

3. The True Nature of the Talks.—

i. Parties to the talks: Negotiations began in earnest on 2 December 1977, at the Government Civil Service Training Centre, Salisbury, and lasted for three months. Four Parties were represented: the Rhodesian Front Government (RF) led by Mr. Ian Smith; the Zimbabwe United Peoples Organisation (ZUPO) led by Senator Chief Jeremiah Chirau; the African National Council (ANC [Sithole]) led by the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole; and the United African National Council (UANC) led by Bishop Abel Muzorewa. Each Party had five delegates and four legal and political representatives.

ii. The aims of the talks: Over the months of negotiations the aims were defined in somewhat different ways by the various delegations. Perhaps I may briefly summarise:

During the first round of the talks Mr. Smith said: The intention of the Conference is to bring peace to our troubled country.' He said he wanted to put an end to 'years of misunderstanding and bitterness'. But it became increasingly clear in the course of the negotiations that uppermost in his mind was the question of safeguards for the white community. During the ninth meeting Mr. Smith said: 'The intention of the Conference when we accepted one man, one vote which you asked for. Now we insist on the basic confidence-builder for whites . . .'

Mr. Smith's 'basic confidence-builder for whites' comprised certain safeguards which he felt should be entrenched in the new Constitution when the country became independent. Briefly, these were: a justiciable Bill of Rights; an independent judiciary; a neutral Public Services Board; a public administration free from political interference; guarantees relating to the payment and transmission of pensions abroad, dual citizenship, white representation in Parliament.

Mr. Smith's insistence on white safeguards virtually proved his sincerity in accepting, publicly, the democratic principle of majority rule on the basis on one man, one vote. Only a leader who was renouncing his leadership would have tried to negotiate safeguards. Nevertheless the nationalist leaders remained aware, throughout the talks, of the possibility that Mr. Smith might be playing a double game, that he was intending to relinquish the shadow rather than the substance of power.

The Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole expressed the aim of his delegation in these phases: 'I came to this conference to stop the war . . . If ZANU and RF forces come to terms the war would be over . . . I believe one man, one vote can stop the war . . . I did not come here to play. We must stop the war. Mr. Smith, I order you to stop the war . . . What we want here, Mr. Prime Minister, is to stop the war which you and I started . . . .'

In another passage the Rev. Sithole stated: 'I am not saying that any one particular person can stop the war. The war was started for good reasons. Once one man, one vote is achieved, the war will stop. Even those who are physically involved in the war say that they want the war to stop only on one condition—one man, one vote majority rule.'

Throughout the negotiations it was clear that one man, one vote was regarded not only as the necessary instrument of genuine rule by the people of Zimbabwe but also as the only means of stopping the war. Franchise and war were two sides of the same coin. It was the denial of the vote to the Zimbabwean people that had caused the war; the institution of universal suffrage would stop the war.

iii. The Status of the delegations: The critics, both internal and external, of the negotiations, termed the nationalist leaders as 'puppets', 'stooges', 'Smith's runnings dogs' and so on. I comment as follows:

Throughout the deliberations all the representatives fiercely maintained the principle of the equality of the delegations. On occasion tempers flared and harsh words were exchanged. No single delegation had a monopoly on insulting language. All at various times expressed fear, doubt and suspicion—some of the sentiments were justifiable, some invalid.

During one session Deputy Prime Minister Mr. David Smith, well known for his lasting patience, erupted and he exclaimed that he couldn't 'sit here and listen to all these lies', and he prepared to leave the Conference room. That particular meeting came to an abrupt end when Bishop Muzorewa, wounded by Mr. David Smith's remarks, led his delegation out. During another meeting the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole strongly criticised Mr. Ian Smith for suggesting that some of the delegations were being less than honest, and at one session Mr. Ian Smith gave the whole Conference a dressing down for retraction, warning that nothing could be achieved by going back on what had been agreed upon.

And so it went on. My point is this: the negotiations were acrimonious at times because each Party was genuinely negotiating. None was a 'stooge'; each wanted to achieve a real solution to Rhodesia's problem, to introduce democracy to the people of Zimbabwe.

Despite the acrimony, the Conference succeeded because each of the Parties constantly kept in mind the overriding ingredients of success, namely:

The equality of the delegations;

Freedom and frankness in discussion;

The unrestricted capacity for hard bargaining;

A calculated spirit of give-and-take;

A determination not to fail, but to succeed;

Pragmatism and realism;

An awareness of national as against sectional interests;

An awareness of the profound significance of the issues under discussion;

A sense of unity for a higher purpose;

A readiness to learn from one another.

4. Contentious Points.—During the talks there were many bitterly expressed arguments on delicate issues, contretemps that almost destroyed the Conference.

Perhaps the most contentious debate centered on the question of white representation in the future Zimbabwean Parliament. The Rhodesian Front Government delegation demanded that whites should be represented, temporarily, as a racial group. But this would mean that racialism and, by definition perhaps, racial discrimination, too, would be prolonged into the new, independent Zimbabwe, whose essential nature is non-racial.

The Rhodesian Front Government delegation argued that such a provision would help retain the confidence of the whites, necessary if a mass exodus, with all its attendant economic damage, was to be avoided. The African delegates maintained their adherence to the principle of non-racialism, and the debate was both intense and protracted. But the African leaders are practical men and they eventually recognized the need to allow the white citizens of Rhodesia-Zimbabwe a period for readjustment.

The African leadership deliberately violated the letter of their own principle of non-racialism to honour its spirit. To have been stubborn on the point would have undermined white morale and therefore damaged the future Zimbabwe, perhaps beyond repair in a democratic context. To have given way on the point—as the African leadership did—ensured stability and the eventual but certain creation of a non-racial society.

Closely related to this issue was that of the duration of reserved minority representation in the future Zimbabwean Parliament. One African delegation felt that the arrangement should not last for more than five years—that is to say, for the life of one Parliament. The two other African delegations believed that ten years would be a reasonable period. The Rhodesian Front Government delegation pressed for a period of fifteen years.

After a heated, two-week argument, the Conference agreed on a period of ten years.

A further contentious issue concerned the number of Parliamentary seats allocated to the white community. The Rhodesian Front Government delegation initially demanded 34; two of the African nationalist delegations offered 20; the Conference finally settled for 28.

The internal negotiations were characterized—as are all genuine political negotiations—by a patchwork of disagreements and agreements; differences and similarities; cunning and honesty; insincerity and sincerity; illogicality and logic; emotionalism and objectivity. These are the human elements in all power struggles.

But the delegations were able to overcome these paradoxes, these inhibitions, because they recognize that a spirit of compromise was vital to success. They were deeply aware that:

There was no acceptable alternative to a successful Conference;

None of the problems facing the Conference was insurmountable;

The people of Zimbabwe expected the Conference to produce a solution, and failure to do so would have tragic consequences;

The most tragic of these consequences would be the continued escalation of the war.

In the following chapter I describe various reactions to this historic Agreement, whose effects are still, and increasingly, being felt throughout Rhodesia-Zimbabwe, and which are already influencing most of the freedom fighters in an encouragingly positive way.

CHAPTER SEVEN: CRITICISM OF THE AGREEMENT

As soon as the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement was published, its critics became vocal. It is worth examining five of their major arguments in some detail:

1. Exclusion of the Patriotic Front—

It was held by the critics that Patriotic Front, jointly led by Mr. Joshua Nkomo and Mr. Robert Mugabe, were deliberately excluded from the talks.

In fact this is simply not true. There was an open invitation to all Zimbabweans in exile to return home and take part in the democratic processes. Leading nationalists such as Mr. James Chikerema, Mr. George Nyandoro, Mr. Noel Mukono, Mr. Stephen Parirenyatwa, and other exiles, accepted the invitation, came back and contributed to the negotiations.

But Mr. Nkomo and Mr. Mugabe chose not to come home. They saw no need for power to be transferred to the people of Zimbabwe. They demanded that power be transferred only to the Patriotic Front. They demanded that there should be no elections before independence.

The vast majority of the people of Zimbabwe and of the freedom fighters, on the other hand, demanded pre-independence elections so that the Government of the new Zimbabwe should be born of the will of the people.

Within the country itself there was a desperate need for a just political settlement. The people—Africans, whites, Asians, and those of mixed descent—had grown weary of a war which was claiming many lives each day. Rather than give the people what they really wanted by taking part in the negotiations for the peaceful transfer of power, Mr. Nkomo and Mr. Mugabe chose to hold this country of seven million citizens to ransom. They elected to remain outside Zimbabwe and continue hostilities until the principle of 'power to the people' could be forcibly changed to 'power to the Patriotic Front'.

The internal leadership, on the other hand, chose not to impede the establishment of democracy in Zimbabwe by recognising the exclusive authority of the Patriotic Front.

Democracy and dictatorship cannot of course be reconciled. Each excludes the other, and people—the ordinary citizen as well as the politician—must make a fundamental choice between the two systems of government. The internal leaders of Zimbabwe and the people of Zimbabwe chose democracy. The representatives of the people negotiated, and reached a valid Agreement which will introduce truly democratic institutions to the country for the first time in its troubled history.

The Patriotic Front chose dictatorship, and thereby excluded themselves from negotiations which have resulted in a guarantee of majority rule on the basis of one man, one vote, and the full and unfettered independence of Zimbabwe on 31 December 1978.

Be that as it may, the invitation is still open to Mr. Nkomo and Mr. Mugabe and their followers, as indeed it is to all Zimbabweans, to return to Zimbabwe to participate in free elections based on the democratic principle of one man, one vote.

2. Rejection of the Anglo-American Proposals.—

The second major criticism leveled at the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement was that it rejected those proposals which the United Kingdom Government and the Government of the United States of America believed would provide the proper solution to Rhodesia's problem. The British Foreign and Commonwealth Office, in particular, believed strongly that the Agreement represented what amounted to a slap-in-the-face to Whitehall, and made an effort (and at the time of writing that effort is still continuing) to marry the Anglo-American Proposals with the Internal Agreement.

It is important at this juncture to present a Reconciliation Statement, so that this criticism can clearly be shown to have no substance whatsoever. At the very start, it should be noted that the Agreement closely observes the basic principles embodied in the Anglo-American Proposals, and that the only significant point of difference concerns the question of the transitional period—the nature of the Interim Government.

Reconciliation statement

| Item | Reconciliation Statement Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement | Anglo-American Proposals |
|---|---|---|
| 1. Monarchy or Republic | Republic | Republic |
| 2. Dictatorship or Democracy | Democracy | Democracy |
| 3. Executive or Ceremonial President | Executive | Executive |
| 4. Universal or Qualified Franchise | Universal | Universal |
| 5. Black or White Rule | Black | Black |
| 6. Majority or Minority Rule | Majority | Majority |
| 7. Free or Inhibited Elections | Free | Free |
| 8. Voting Age 18 or 21 | 18 | 21 |
| 9. Racial or Nonracial Society | Nonracial | Nonracial |
| 10. Independent or Political Judiciary | Independent | Independent |
| 11. Justiciable or Non-Justiciable Bill of Rights | Justiciable | Justiciable |
| 12. Neutral or Political Civil Service | Neutral | Neutral |
| 13. Dictatorial or Democratic Interim Government | Democratic | Dictatorial |
| 14. Independence 1978 or 1979 | 1978 | 1978 |
| 15. Independence within or without the Commonwealth | Within | Within |
| 16. Special or Common White Representation | Special | Special |
| 17. No. of Special White Representatives | 28 | 20 |
| 18. Orderly, peaceful transition | Acceptable | Acceptable |
| 19. Assets and Debts of Rhodesia | Inheritable by the Gvt. of Zimbabwe | Inheritable by the Gvt. of Zimbabwe |
| 20. Entrenched Clauses | Acceptable | Acceptable |

This list clearly shows that there are far more areas of agreement than disagreement between the negotiated Constitutional Agreement and the Anglo-American Proposals. There is disagreement only on Items 8, 13 and 17. The two sides are therefore 85 percent in agreement. If we take Item 13 as a non-constitutional issue, there is 90 percent agreement on constitutional matters.

What precisely is it, then, that provokes the argument of the external critics that the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement has run counter to the Anglo-American Proposals?

In the light of the above analytical list, the conclusion must be that the stimulus behind the opposition lies outside the orbit of political objectivity. In plain language, personalities, personal preferences and personal prejudices have intruded, to the detriment of the real interest of the people of Zimbabwe. It appears, for instance, that Dr. David Owen, the British Foreign Secretary, and Mr. Andrew Young, the United States Ambassador to the United Nations, cannot accept that Mr. Smith is relevant to the settlement of the Rhodesian constitutional problem.

The internal African nationalist leadership, however, concedes that Mr. Smith is a minority leader within Zambabwe—a significant minority in terms of economic contribution—and that he does have a place in the Interim Government. That is realistic.

This personality inhibition also helps to explain the extraordinary paradox of Item 13. The Anglo-Americans would rather have all power vested in one externally-appointed man during the transitional period, whereas the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement provides for the vesting of transitional power in a group of men resident inside and not outside Zimbabwe; representative of the people of Zimbabwe and not of any external elements.

What particularly amazes me, and for that matter all thinking people in Zimbabwe, is that dictatorship during the interim period is being advocated by those very Governments which are themselves historically democratic!

Both the Africans and the whites within Rhodesia-Zimbabwe know the truth behind this apparent contradiction. They know that the United Kingdom Government wants to place total power, during the transitional period, in the hands of a British Resident Commissioner—an 'independent' authority —in order then to transfer that power to the Patriotic Front. It will be remembered that the British Government, in collaboration with the Zambian Government, treated the Patriotic Front as though it was the key to the Rhodesian-Zimbabwean problem when it was not and that these Governments have given the PF increasing support since its inception.

The effort to reconcile the Proposals with the Agreement (and as we have seen they are perfectly reconcilable as they stand) is a gambit intended to keep the Rhodesian issue open so that a means can be found to accommodate the Patriotic Front—to impose dictatorship on the people of Zimbabwe.

For its part, the Patriotic Front has been nothing if not honest in its reaction to the Agreement: it has threatened to disrupt free elections and to unleash the dogs of civil war upon a free Zimbabwe. Whether it has the capacity to do this, especially in view of the changing attitudes within the ranks of the freedom fighters, remains to be seen. I very much doubt it. Our cause is just; that of the Patriotic Front is not. A free Zimbabwe will be strong and united Zimbabwe.

Clearly, then, the Anglo-American plan to keep the Rhodesian pot boiling is motivated by subjective rather than objective factors, and this is tragic. What matters is what the people of Zimbabwe want—peace, stability, prosperity, freedom to choose their own Government. What the Patriotic Front and the Governments of the United Kingdom and United States want is irrelevant to Zimbabwe's true interests.

3. The Smith Presence.—

Many critics have claimed that the Agreement would have been perfectly acceptable but for the presence of Mr. Smith in the Interim Government. They regard Mr. Smith as the only fly in the ointment.

But the policy adopted by the internal African leadership, I think, makes a great deal of good sense. It is to accept the ointment, refine it, and then to take the fly out. After all, one simply cannot remove impediments until one gets to grips with them. Mr. Smith is going to disappear from the arena on 31 December 1978. If the world has had to wait for Mr. Smith's departure for thirteen weary years, surely it can wait a further nine months.

For well over a decade the British Government, the United Nations, the Organisation for African Unity, the frontline states and various Zimbabwean liberation movements tried to remove Mr. Smith, but he stubbornly—and in human terms understandably—refused to assist them in their efforts. The internal African nationalist leaders, on the other hand, have succeeded where all others failed. In March 1978 they persuaded Mr. Smith to endorse his own political liquidation. That is no small victory. Mr. Smith will not be of any political significance after 31 December 1978.

It should also be explained that, in sheer practical terms, Mr. Smith's presence in the Interim Government is essential in the light of the radical political changes that are taking place in Rhodesia-Zimbabwe.

Apart from his value in helping supervise the complex mechanics of political transition, Mr. Smith has after all been the trusted leader of the white minority for fourteen years. If he had disappeared too quickly, this would have seriously undermined white confidence, and there would have been an exodus. In 1978 the economy is controlled by the white people. Mr. Smith had to be included in the Interim Government in order to ensure continuity and economic stability.

For the good of Zimbabwe, the internal African leadership recognised Mr. Smith's usefulness during the transitional period between white minority rule and majority rule based on one man, one vote.

4. A Paper Solution.—

The signing of the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement was an historic and dramatic event. Developments leading up to the formal signing gave the people of Zimbabwe a feeling of optimism—of excited optimism—and of course the ceremony itself was a splendid climax.

Yet for the next two weeks practically nothing appeared to be happening, and many people began to feel doubt, anxiety and disappointment. They had expected to see an Interim Government formed straightaway, and their expectation was not fulfilled. Critics of the Agreement were quick to capitalise on this: they said the Agreement was a paper solution, without substance.

But of course this particular criticism was silenced by the formal swearing-in of the Executive Council (on which African nationalists outnumber whites three to one) on 21 March 1978. The Agreement became an undeniable, and irreversible, reality on that date. Following this was the formation of a Ministerial Council (equivalent to the Cabinet) on 14 April 1978.

5. The 28 White Seats.—

The critics held that the allocation of 28 seats in a 100-Member Parliament to a community which comprises less than five per cent of the population was being too generous. Twenty, they said, would have been more equitable, and would have given an extra eight Africans the benefit of ten years' parliamentary experience. They also feared that the eight supernumerary whites could adversely influence the effectiveness of common roll elections.

To a point these criticisms are valid. But in a situation where only sensible compromise will succeed, no one section can achieve all it aspires to.

The sole objective of the African nationalist negotiators was to take power from the white man, who had held it for 88 years, but experience has taught the nationalists that those who hold power will fiercely resist any attempt to wrest it away without compensation, or at least without some sort of reassurance.

So the African negotiators persuaded the Rhodesian Front Government to relinquish its authority in return for 28 white seats for ten years. They felt that this was not too high a price to pay for freedom.

This concession was necessary in order to achieve majority rule based on one man, one vote. It was necessary in order to break the thirteen-year-old political deadlock. It was necessary in order to bring to an end the subjection of the black man to the white man. It was a means to a higher end.

Moreover, the people of Zimbabwe were suffering the ravages of war. Many were dying each day, many more were losing their homes. The concession meant agreement, and agreement opened the way to ending the war.

Finally, the 28 seats helped in the task of sustaining white confidence—essential to the stability of Zimbabwe, as I have explained.

Whatever criticism may be levelled against the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement of 3 March 1978, the fact remains that it represents the first and greatest victory—recognised as such and welcomed even by the freedom fighters—to be won by the people of Zimbabwe.

CHAPTER EIGHT: REACTION TO THE AGREEMENT

While the reactions to the internal settlement of those organizations and those people who are based outside Zimbabwe are of interest, it is the way that Zimbabweans themselves received news of the Agreement that really matters.

Zimbabweans do not regard their country as a political experimental station, nor as a battleground on which the superpowers can compete against each other. It is their country; it is they and they only who have to live with the decisions that are made. The domestic reaction to the Internal Agreement is therefore of paramount significance.

There were no popular demonstrations within the country when negotiations began, nor were there any during the three months it took to achieve an agreement—because the people of Zimbabwe wanted a peaceful settlement. They were weary of the war. They wanted only peace, and the right to guide their own destiny. They were optimistic of the final outcome.

Moreover, when the final terms of the Agreement were formally endorsed on 3 March 1978, there were no demonstrations against the concorde. On the contrary, a mood of euphoria, of immense relief, prevailed throughout the country—not only among the civilian populace but within the guerilla forces as well.

When the Interim Government was formed two weeks later, on 21 March, no angry crowds collected, no stones were thrown—but congratulatory messages arrived from all parts of Zimbabwe. The people had realized, suddenly, that there really was to be a genuine transfer of power, that true independence was within their grasp, and they reacted enthusiastically.

Let me give a few examples. On 11 March, ZANU (ANC [Sithole]) held a rally at Umtali, on the eastern border of Rhodesia-Zimbabwe, to explain the Agreement to the people. Over 15,000 attended. (This was the figure given by the newspapers, who have often been biased against ZANU.) They had arrived from all parts of the Eastern Highlands, from Chipinga, Melsetter, Makoni, Inyanga and from Umtali itself. These places are in the ultra-sensitive war zone, and it took courage for the people to travel. Others had come from even further afield: from Chiredzi, Fort Victoria, Salisbury, Hartley, Gatooma, Que Que, Gwelo.

The guerillas operating in the Eastern Highlands helped organise this rally. They publicised it, put up posters and so forth, and some of them actually stayed on to hear the addresses.

The main speaker was the Rev. Ndabaningi Sithole, President of ZANU, and among the questions put were the following:

SITHOLE. Do you accept the Agreement?

CROWD. Yes! (Prolonged cheers, whistling and ululating.)

SITHOLE. Hands up those who would like the war to stop. (All hands go up, and the cheering and whistling is deafening.)

SITHOLE. Hands up those who want independence on 31 December 1978.

CROWD. We want it yesterday! (All hands go up again; there is a roar of approval.)

SITHOLE. Hands up those who want our sons and daughters to return from the bush. (All hands go up again; there is wild cheering, whistling and ululating.)

SITHOLE. Are you prepared to defend the Agreement with your very lives?

CROWD. (With clenched fists.) Yes! Yes! (More than half the crowd stand up as if to go into action in defence of the Agreement.)

I am very satisfied that the Agreement was well received by the 15,000 Zimbabweans who attended that rally. Moreover, the guerillas implicitly endorsed the Agreement, for they could easily have stopped the people from attending. They chose not to do so.

On our way back to Salisbury we stopped at Rusape, where crowds estimated at between 5,000 and 6,000 gathered round to hear the terms of the Agreement. Their reaction was precisely the same as that at the Umtali rally. At Marandellas, 60 km from Salisbury, a crowd of between 6,000 and 8,000 received us with equal enthusiasm

On 18 March we—the ZANU (ANC [Sithole]) team—motored through the Fort Victoria area to Chiredzi. Among the 15,000 crowd that gathered were 30 guerrillas. The same questions were asked and the same answers given, and it was transparently clear that the people were in favour of the Agreement. At Fort Victoria, on our way back, 20,000 people listened to us, approved of what we had to say, danced, sang and mobbed us in their enthusiasm. By public acclamation the Agreement was accepted and we were enjoined to form an Interim Government immediately.

Bishop Muzorewa's rally in Salisbury, held on 19 March, attracted a crowd of between 65,000 and 100,000. This huge rally also endorsed the Agreement.

Up to the time of writing, the Agreement is receiving increasing support from the African people of Zimbabwe and from the whites, the Asians and those citizens of mixed descent. More guerillas have expressed their support for its terms, as have the more than three million people of the Tribal Trust Lands.

Perhaps the following memorandum from the ZANU detainees at the Wha Wha detention centre near Gwelo can best illustrate the general reaction to the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement:

THE PRESIDENT AND THE PARTY

Our Feelings on Settlement.—(i) A Settlement is essential and ought to be effected. This is the wish and aspiration of the people of Zimbabwe. So we find no reason why it should not be implemented by the leaders who have the support of the people. For a leader to ignore the call of the people is to ignore the wishes and aspirations of the masses.

(ii) Who are these people?—There are, first and foremost, the masses who bear the brunt of the war in the operational areas. They are the people who received the war.

Many are being hanged everyday in the prisons. Those kept in Concentration Camps are constantly dehumanised. They face the danger of losing their lives at any time.

The "free" masses, who support and organise the parties, are also in constant threat of abduction, arrest and death at the hands of the enemy.

(iii) Harm.—Already, harm has been caused to the families and property of those in exile, prisons, cells, remand prisons and in dententions.

Family life has been destroyed, marriages broken up, rejections, divorces, illegitimacies, deaths, losses agonies, lack of paternal care and a complete destruction of African culture and norms are taking place.

The children without parents lapse into "poverty culture" lack the confidence, hope, motivation, skills and free parental encouragement commonly provided by the parents.

(iv) Consensus.—The general consensus of all the people is that their political parties should settle now. What is lacking in many parties is an able dynamic leadership. In our ZANU, we have this energetic dynamic leadership, distinct direction and the support from the masses and from people of all walks of life. Why idling at the hour of need? Diplomacy, Comrades! Diplomacy!

1. A brief Historical Review: Many nationalists have attempted to settle but failed. Bishop A. T. Muzorewa tried it in 1974 but failed. The Bishop Muzorewa led all the nationalists at the Victoria Falls Bridge Constitutional Talks, which ended in a complete fiasco in 1975. In 1976, Mr. Joshua Nkomo tested it but failed completely.

The main point which causes the failure of these various settlement exercises—is the leaders' lack of vision and foresight. As such, our nation continues to suffer and perish. These leaders lacked the "win formula".

2. President's Decision to come home: The President's return has been motivated by a long foresight.

(a) A provision of direction to the nation. This, he has achieved through his message of Unity of purpose. He has organised rallies, toured the countryside, explained and provided guidance to the people. The 24–45 September and 5 November 1977 rallies are other great heroic deeds to achieve the Unity of Purpose by bringing together 42 associations which cut across many aspects of our national structure.

(b) The struggle for our liberation is almost over. The problem lies with our leaders who often fail to take a bold and decisive action to settle. In Latin America, they use the word "manana" meaning tomorrow. Mind: Manana and manana leads to the city of never.

(c) Fear is failure. With it one falls short of the standard required in a task to settle.

The leader, even the honest leader fears to be branded a sell-out if he settles this crisis. This is one kind of fear.

On the other hand, it is fear that makes the Patriotic Front intimidate the sincere and genuine leader. They fear to lose in a General Election based on One Man One Vote. Clearly, it is fear which makes a jackal bark. This is the second fear altogether.

A leader on the right course, with the mandate of the people should expel this fear and ignore idle threats from the opponents. Our success in the Constitutional Settlement is the P.F.'s failure.

3. Kind of Acceptable Settlement: Definition

(a)—INSTITIA OMNIBUS —JUSTICE TO ALL

(b) Stability: Strong leadership provides stability. Our leadership, has no doubt, the ability to provide a climate conducive to a settlement, by, at present, not giving overdue emphasis on atrocities being committed by the enemy on our people. "Chinonyenga chinowarara chinomusa musoro chawana." A stable leadership provides an immediate redress to the suffering of the people. The nation must experience the change.

International advice must be taken with reservation. The freedom is ours to choose what we need and ignore the rest.

The essential prerequisites of a settlement are its broadness. It should fulfill the aim of our struggle i.e. one person one vote.

(c) Integration of Security Forces: The principle of 'give-and-take' should be considered in the building of the National Army. We are aware that the question of the composition of the army has been a controversial issue. But integration of the various forces seems to be the most practical policy. Although much weight is to be attached to our side, the rest is negotiable

WHY WE NEED A SETTLEMENT

A settlement answers the human need to govern himself.

(i) To pay heed to the cries of the masses who bear the brunt of the war.

(ii) The reason of our struggle has been felt and accomplished but should not be hindered by the power hungry absolutists. It is clear that the struggle is now centred on power, not on liberation, at the expense of the masses and the freedom fighters.

(iii) Freedom is for the people, not for the soil without the people. So save the nation at the hour of need.

(iv) We have already liberated ourselves by bearing the sting of the bees, so we now want our honey.

(v) We feel we have organised enough, the people are ready to vote us into government. Delays are dangerous. There is something strange about the human mind—laissez faire—a going without an end tires the human mind. Patience has limits.

(vi) Settling now prevents the imposition of a leader with foreign and unwanted ideology. "Tiri veZimbabwe, tinoda zviro zveZimbabwe".

(vii) There is an urgent demand for the reconstruction of the nation, the country and its economy, education and culture.

We bank our wishes and aspirations with our leader, the Comrade President Ndabaningi Sithole to act and act with decisiveness and conclusiveness.

Those who know how critical, and suspicious, the people of Zimbabwe can be are quite satisfied that the Agreement has a great deal more support within the country than is realised by those living outside the country.

Foreigners are still trying to solve the Rhodesian problem. We believe we have solved it.

CHAPTER NINE: SUMMARY AND CONCLUSION

The foregoing is the rather complex, but very clear, case for the Rhodesian Constitutional Settlement of 1978. It remains merely to summarise.

If the true nature of the Rhodesian problem and its solution is to be properly perceived, it must be measured against a number of objective criteria:

Criterion No. 1: Is the Agreement in the interests of the people of Zimbabwe as a whole?

Over the years the Zimbabwean people have—by means of orthodox political pressure, by means of subversive activity and by means of protracted armed struggle—tried to achieve the following:

i. Majority rule;
ii. Independence on a specific date;
iii. A franchise based on one man, one vote;
iv. The elimination of all racial discrimination;
v. A sovereign republic of their own:
vi. Free elections;
vii. The right to choose their own leaders, who would be accountable to the people of Zimbabwe;
viii. Equality with men and women of other races;
ix. Adequate protection by the laws of their country;
x. Full enjoyment of the basic human freedoms and human rights without the restrictions imposed by white supremacy.

The Agreement does indeed give these benefits to the people of Zimbabwe. Its terms are comprehensive in their scope and depth and are capable of national application. They spell the death of white rule; they assure the birth of black rule—and that is all that African nationalism is about. That is all the present armed struggle is about.

CRITERION No. 2: Does the Agreement meet the demands of a modern state as conceived by the international community as it is embodied in and articulates through the United Nations?

On the negative side, the international community is wholly committed to the elimination of the following:

Colonialism and neo-colonialism;
Slavery and serfdom;
White supremacy and other herrenvolk doctrines;
Racial and ethnic discrimination;
War, violence, and their causes.

The Agreement does not provoke, promote or give encouragement to any of the above. The application of the principle of majority rule on the basis of one man, one vote does not, shall not, cannot in any way allow the roots of colonialism to flourish, or neo-colonialism to rear its ugly head, or slavery to return, or white supremacy to subsist, or racial discrimination to degrade the human spirit, or war and violence to continue unchecked.

The Agreement is inimical to all the above, and therefore it meets the negative demands of the international community.

On the positive side, the international community holds to the following ideals:

The right of self-determination for all people;
The sovereign independence of all countries;
Universal adult suffrage;
Free and fair elections;

The fundamental personal freedoms and inalienable rights, namely the right to life; the right to liberty of the person; freedom from slavery and forced labour; protection from inhuman treatment; protection from deprivation of property; the right to privacy of the home; the right to fair trial in civil and criminal proceedings; freedom of conscience; freedom of expression; freedom of association; freedom of movement.

The Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement, without shadow of doubt, meets each and every one of the international community's positive criteria. There is not a single clause in the Agreement that infringes any of these criteria.

It is clearly shown therefore that the African nationalist leaders who negotiated the Agreement were guided in their deliberations and decisions by these international criteria.

CRITERION No. 3: Does the Agreement meet the demands of the Organisation for African Unity?

The OAU is totally dedicated to the decolonisation, and by definition the liberation, of the rest of Africa.

Does the Agreement decolonise Rhodesia? Does it liberate Zimbabwe from the grasp of the white settlers? Will it bring majority rule? Will it terminate white supremacy and African subjection? In each case the answer is a resounding 'yes'.

The Agreement does indeed meet the requirements of the Organisation for African Unity.

CRITERION No. 4: Does the Agreement meet the demands of the Government of the United Kingdom?

Britain is, historically, the champion of democracy and fair play. Among the ideals her Government and people cherish are:

Parliamentary democracy;
Free and fair elections;
The sovereignty of the people;
The accountability of the legislators to the people;
The independence of the judiciary;
The neutrality of the Civil Service;
The honouring of pension and other assurance commitments;

The Agreement incorporates all the ingredients which the British people demand and maintain for themselves. The Agreement requires no more for the people of Zimbabwe than the British Constitution assures for the people of the United Kingdom.

Thus the Agreement meets all criteria. The following Reconciliation Statement is probably far more eloquent and persuasive of its acceptability than several pages of argument would be:

Reconciliation statement

| | Agreement | UN | OAU | UK |
|---|---|---|---|---|
| A. Rejected | | | | |
| Colonialism | X | X | X | X |
| Neo-colonialism | X | X | X | X |
| Slavery | X | X | X | X |
| Serfdom | X | X | X | X |
| Racialism | X | X | X | X |
| White supremacy | X | X | X | X |
| War | X | X | X | X |
| Violence | X | X | X | X |
| B. Accepted | | | | |
| Majority rule | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Adult suffrage | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Sovereign independence | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Free elections | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Non-racialism | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Human equality | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Basic human rights | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Basic human freedoms | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Self-determination | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Territorial integrity | √ | √ | √ | √ |
| Peace | √ | √ | √ | √ |

In Section A the Agreement rejects all eight items that are rejected by the UN, the OAU and the UK Government. In Section B the Agreement accepts all eleven items accepted by the UN, the OAU and the UK Government.

In the light of these undeniable facts one would have expected the United Nations, the Organisation for African Unity and the Government of the United Kingdom—as well as that of the United States of America—to be favourably disposed toward the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement.

It is at this point that the motives of the external forces, those who deny the validity of the Agreement, must be questioned. For these forces, the United Nations, the Organization for African Unity, the Governments of the United Kingdom, the United States and other countries, to reject a constitutional arrangement which embodies the values and principles which they themselves hold dear would appear to be a self-contradiction.

It is self-evident that the Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement cannot be repudiated on objective grounds. By this token therefore it can only be repudiated on subjective grounds, and here we see the sinister and dangerous introduction of double standards. The people of Zimbabwe ask no more and no less for themselves than do the people of the member states of the UN and OAU. These two bodies cannot afford, for the sake of their own futures, to indulge in double standards.

The message contained in the terms of the 1978 Rhodesian Constitutional Agreement is clear and simple: accept the democratic will of the people of Zimbabwe and forget personal preferences; listen to the people inside Zimbabwe and not to those outside Zimbabwe. Only then can Zimbabwe be helped to solve her own problems.●

Sidney I. Lezak, of Oregon, to be U.S. attorney for the district of Oregon for the term of 4 years (reappointment).

On behalf of the Committee on the Judiciary, notice is hereby given to all persons interested in this nomination to file with the committee, in writing, on or before Friday, July 28, 1978, any representations or objections they may wish to present concerning the above nomination with a further statement whether it is their intention to appear at any hearing which may be scheduled.●

DISPOSITION OF CERTAIN RECREATIONAL DEMONSTRATION PROJECT LANDS BY THE STATE OF OKLAHOMA

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 920.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill (S. 920) entitled "An Act relating to the disposition of certain recreational demonstration project lands by the State of Oklahoma", do pass with the following amendment:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert:

SECTION 1. That notwithstanding section 3 of the Act entitled "An Act to authorize the disposition of recreational demonstration projects and for other purposes", approved June 6, 1942 (56 Stat. 326; 16 U.S.C. 459t) the State of Oklahoma is hereby authorized to convey oil and gas mineral leases to the following described lands in Carter County, Oklahoma: those lands situated within the project designated and known as the Lake Murray Recreational Demonstration Area, said project lands being more particularly described in a quitclaim deed of the United States of America executed on February 1, 1943, by Harold L. Ickes, Secretary of the Interior approved on February 2, 1943, by Franklin D. Roosevet, President of the United States, and recorded in book 186, pages 312 through 320 of the records of Carter County, Oklahoma. Any conditions providing for a reversion of title to the United States that may be contained in the conveyance of such lands by the United States to the State of Oklahoma are hereby released as to oil and gas exploration and development affecting the lands herein authorized to be leased. The State of Oklahoma shall surrender the present deed of conveyance by the United States of the lands described in this Act and the United States shall issue a new deed to the State of Oklahoma for those lands, which new deed shall include oil and gas exploration and development as permitted uses of such lands: Provided, however, That it shall be a condition of such new deed that oil and gas exploration and development shall take place on the lands described in this Act only pursuant to plans which have been reviewed (such review to include preparation of a detailed statement of the type specified in section 2(a) of the National Environmental Policy Act of 1969 (42 U.S.C. 4332(a)), and approved by the Secretary of the Interior and which will assure that such exploration and development shall be carried out in a manner which to the maximum extent possible will assure the preservation of the natural, scenic, and recreational values of the Demonstration Area: Provided further, (i) That it shall be a further condition of such new deed that the State of Oklahoma, in consideration for the release of the conditions referred to in this section, shall hold all proceeds hereafter received from any oil and gas exploration and development of the lands described in this Act in a separate fund open to inspection by the Secretary of the Interior, and shall pay the Secretary each year from such fund 50 per centum of the gross income from such exploration and development, including rents, royalties, bonuses and any interest accruing thereon and all costs which the Secretary determines are included in his review of the oil and gas exploration and development plans and the operation of such fund; and (ii) That all amounts paid to the Secretary pursuant to this proviso shall be deposited in the general fund of the Treasury as miscellaneous receipts: And provided further, That the State of Oklahoma shall continue to use such lands in the Lake Murray Recreational Demonstration Area primarily for park, recreational, and conservation purposes.

SEC. 2. The issuance of the new deed described in section 1 of this Act shall take place only upon payment to the Secretary of the Interior by the State of Oklahoma for administrative costs of issuance of the new deed. Moneys paid to the Secretary of the Interior for administrative costs shall be paid to the agency which rendered the service, and deposited to the appropriation then current.

UP AMENDMENT 1469

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move, on behalf of Mr. JACKSON, that the Senate concur in the amendment of the House with an amendment which I send to the desk.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The legislative clerk read as follows:

The Senator from West Virginia (Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD), for the Senator from Washington (Mr. JACKSON), proposes unprinted amendment numbered 1469:

On page 2, line 19, strike 2(a) and insert the following: 102 2(c)

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The question is on agreeing to the motion.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS FOR 30 MINUTES

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate stand in recess for 30 minutes.

There being no objection, the Senate, at 2:33 p.m., recessed for 30 minutes; whereupon, at 3:03 p.m., the Senate reassembled when called to order by the Presiding Officer (Mr. MATSUNAGA).

BUDGET WAIVER RESOLUTIONS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the immediate consideration of the following budget waiver resolutions: Senate Resolution 494, which is to the public works employment bill; Senate Resolution 498, which is to the DOE authorization; Senate Resolution 499, which has to do with S. 1497, Calendar Order No. 894, cigarette racketeering; Senate Resolution 500, which goes to victims of crime; and Senate Resolution 505 to the DOE civilian authorization.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

The resolution (S. Res. 494) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 3243. Such waiver is necessary to allow for the authorization of funds for administrative expenses authorized by the Public Works Employment Act of 1977. Administrative funds provided in that legislation proved insufficient and an additional authorization is required. This authorization has been recommended by the Administration and the bill reported is as transmitted.

Compliance with section 402(a) was not possible by May 15, 1978, because the required legislation was not transmitted to the Senate until May 10, 1978. The committee was unable to move this legislation prior to the May 15 deadline because of the press of other legislation being considered at that time. The authorization contained in S. 3243 is consistent with the Environment and Public Works Committee March 15, 1977, report to the Committee on Budget.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

The resolution (S. Res. 498) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 2693 was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 2693, a bill to authorize appropriations to the Department of Energy for national security programs for fiscal year 1979, and for other purposes.

Such waiver is necessary because section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 provides that it shall not be in order in either the House of Representatives or the Senate to consider any bill or resolution which, directly or indirectly, authorizes the enactment of new budget authority for a fiscal year, unless that bill or resolution is reported in the House or the Senate, as the case may be, on or before May 15 preceding the beginning of such fiscal year.

It was impossible for the Armed Services Committee to properly prepare for and give adequate consideration to the annual military procurement authorization bill (S. 2571), the military construction authorization bill (S. 3079) and S. 2693 in time to report all three by May 15. The committee was able to complete action on S. 2571 and S. 3079 by the deadline, but had to defer action on S. 2693. Among the programs funded in S. 2693 are those relating to enhanced radiation weapon systems which are highly technical and complex. The committee felt it necessary to have a special hearing to better understand these systems which, due to the press of time on other matters, was unable to schedule until after May 15.

In addition, the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, because of the press of other business, was unable to complete its action on title II of the bill, which was jointly referred, until June 7, 1978.

For the foregoing reasons, pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to S. 2693 as reported by the Committee on Armed Services and the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources jointly.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

The resolution (S. Res. 499) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 1487 was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402 (c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of the Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 1487, a bill to eliminate racketeering in the sale and distribution of cigarettes, and for other purposes.

Such waiver is necessary to permit consideration of S. 1487, a bill to eliminate racketeering in the sale and distribution of cigarettes, which will cause the Secretary of the Treasury to set up a comprehensive interdiction program for this purpose. While the bill authorizes to be appropriated such funds as may be necessary, the Congressional Budget Office estimated the cost of the bill at $1,970,000 for the fiscal year beginning October 1, 1978.

Although the bill was reported by the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures to the Committee on the Judiciary on March 23, 1978, its consideration by that committee was inadvertently delayed by the press of business both within the committee and within the Senate.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

The resolution (S. Res. 500) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 551 was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of that Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 551, a bill to provide for grants to States for the payment of compensation to persons injured by certain criminal acts and omissions, and for other purposes.

Such waiver is necessary to permit consideration of S. 551, a bill which provides for grants to States for the payment of compensation of persons injured by certain criminal acts or omissions. This will complete congressional action on the corresponding bill, H.R. 7010, which passed the House on October 4, 1977. The bill authorizes to be appropriated $40,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979.

Although the bill was reported by the Subcommittee on Criminal Laws and Procedures to the Committee on the Judiciary on April 27, 1978, its consideration by that committee was inadvertently delayed by the press of business both within the committee and within the Senate.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

BUDGET ACT WAIVER

The resolution (S. Res. 505) waiving section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 with respect to the consideration of S. 2692 was considered and agreed to, as follows:

Resolved, That pursuant to section 402(c) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, the provisions of section 402(a) of such Act are waived with respect to the consideration of S. 2692. Such waiver is necessary because S. 2692, the Department of Energy Civilian Program Authorization Act for Fiscal Year 1979, authorizes appropriations for fiscal year 1979 for the civilian programs of the Department of Energy.

The authorizations contained in S. 2692 are consistent with the March 15, 1978, recommendations of the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources to the Committee on the Budget pursuant to section 301(c) of the Congressional Budget and Impoundment Control Act of 1974.

Compliance with the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 was not possible by May 15, 1978, with respect to these authorizations because of the large numbers of matters that needed to be considered by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources. Extensive hearings and markup sessions were necessary for full consideration of the President's first proposed budget for the new Department of Energy. As approved by the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources, S. 2692 reflects the decisions of the Senate-House conference on the National Energy Act bills, H.R. 4018, H.R. 5037, H.R. 5146, and H.R. 5289. Adjustments were made in S. 2692 as reported so as to be within the fiscal year 1979 Federal budget target for the energy function as approved in the first concurrent budget resolution.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

THE SISSETON-WAHPETON SIOUX TRIBE LAND CONSOLIDATION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 916.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 3069) to provide that members of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe may request the Secretary of the Interior to acquire certain lands, and to provide that the tribe shall have a preference right to purchase certain lands held in trust by the United States for tribal members.

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the bill which had been reported from the Select Committee on Indian Affairs with amendments as follows:

On page 2, line 10, strike "(1)";

On page 2, line 19, strike "(d)" and insert "(c)";

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That (a) the first section of the Act of October 26, 1974, Public Law 93-491 (88 Stat. 1468) is amended—

(1) by inserting "or upon the request of any member of the tribe" after "South Dakota" the first place it appears;

(2) by inserting "for the tribe or member thereof" after "gift, or exchange";

(3) by inserting "or member thereof" after "available to the tribe"; and

(4) by inserting "or for the individual member for whom the land is acquired" before the period at the end thereof.

(b) Section 2 of the Act of October 26, 1974, Public Law 93-491 (88 Stat. 1468) is amended by redesignating subsection (b) as subsection (c) and adding after subsection (a) the following new subsection:

"(b) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe of the Lake Traverse Reservation, acting through its governing body or its designated agent, shall have a preference right to purchase any land held by the United States in trust for any member or members of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe offered at public sale or auction. The tribe shall have thirty days from the date bidding is closed to match the high bid and the terms of the notice of sale.".

(c) The amendments made by this Act shall become effective on the date of the enactment of this Act.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 95–983), explaining the purposes of the measure.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE

S. 3069 amend the Act of October 26, 1974, Public Law 93–491 (88 Stat. 1468), which provides for the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe of the Lake Traverse Reservation to consolidate its landholding in North Dakota and South Dakota. The purpose of the amendments is twofold: (1) It authorizes the Secretary of the Interior to acquire lands within the boundaries of the Lake Traverse Reservation for individual members of the Sisseton-Wahpeton Sioux Tribe as well as for the Tribe itself (under existing law, only the Tribe could acquire land within the reservation); and, (2) It authorizes the Tribe to exercise a first right of purchase with respect to lands held in trust by the United States for tribal members when the lands are offered for sale at public sale or auction.

BACKGROUND AND NEED

The Lake Traverse Indian Reservation was established by the Treaty of February 19, 1867 (15 Stat. 505). The reservation is V-shaped and lies in the northeast corner of South Dakota with a small portion in the southeast corner of North Dakota. The original reservation contained 918,779.32 acres. The allotment of tribal lands to individual members and the sale of "surplus" tribal land for homesteading purposes has resulted in much of the land passing into non-Indian ownership.

The Indian lands are checker-boarded and scattered throughout the original reservation. Many of these trust allotments are badly fractionated into multiple ownership. Because of these factors, the Tribe and its members has had a very limited opportunity to manage its lands for the common good. To alleviate these problems, the Act of October 26, 1974, Public Law 93–491 (88 Stat. 1468) was passed. This Act authorizes the Tribe to sell, exchange or mortgage tribal lands for the purpose of acquiring other lands within the boundary of the reservation through purchase, gift or exchange. The lands so acquired may, in the discretion of the Secretary of the Interior, be taken in trust by the United States for the benefit of the Tribe. The effect of the Act is to permit the Tribe to consolidate its current tribally-owned lands into manageable units and to eliminate the debilitating effect of the fractionation of individual Indian lands through tribal purchase of the interests.

The existing Act is inadequate to respond to the demands of individual members to acquire land for homesites, businesses or to buy out other heirs. Problems also exist with individually owned Indian trust lands within the reservation passing out of Indian ownership at public sales or auctions as the result of foreclosure proceedings. Jerry Flute, tribal chairperson, has requested the amendments proposed in S. 3069 to alleviate these problems.

LEGISLATIVE HISTORY

S. 3069 was introduced by Senator James Abourezk on May 15, 1978, and referred to the Select Committee on Indian Affairs. The bill was cosponsored by Senator George McGovern.

Due to the noncontroversial nature of S. 3069, no hearing was held. The bill has the support of the Administration and the Governor of South Dakota, Richard F. Kneip.

A companion bill, H.R. 13096, was introduced in the House of Representatives on June 12, 1978, by Congressman Larry Pressler of South Dakota.

COST AND BUDGETARY CONSIDERATIONS

The Congressional Budget Office has reviewed the bill and reported that no additional cost to the government would be incurred as a result of the enactment of S. 3069.

INTERNATIONAL ENVIRONMENTAL ASSESSMENT

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 919.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A resolution (S. Res. 49) expressing the sense of the Senate that the U.S. Government should seek the agreement of other governments to a proposed treaty requiring the preparation of an International Environmental Impact Statement for any major project, action, or continuing activity which may be reasonably expected to have a significant adverse effect on the physical environment or environmental interests of another nation or a global commons area,

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution which had been reported from the Committee on Foreign Relations with an amendment on page 3, beginning with line 1, strike through and including page 7, line 22, and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"ARTICLE I

"Before a State Party to this treaty, including any nongovernmental entity within the territory of such a Party, undertakes any major project, action or continuing activity within its territory or within areas not subject to the jurisdiction of any nation (that is, a global commons area) which may be reasonably expected to have a significant adverse effect on the physical environment of another State or States Party to this treaty or on a global commons area, an International Environmental Assessment regarding the potential adverse environmental effects of such activity shall be prepared and submitted by the government of the initiating State to the affected Party or Parties and to the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP).

"ARTICLE II

"(1) A Party considering an activity subject to the provisions of Article I shall, upon request, consult with the affected Party or Parties or, in the case of a global commons area, with UNEP, with a view toward preventing or minimizing any potential adverse environmental consequences beyond its territory which might result from the proposed activity.

"(2) The Party considering the initiation of such an activity shall at the request of a Party potentially affected, or at the request of UNEP whenever a global commons area is potentially affected, refrain from initiating the project or activity for a period of not more than 90 days after submission of an international environmental assessment to permit consultation, unless in the opinion of the Party considering initiating the project, action or activity there is such urgency that any delay for the purposes of carrying out the provisions of this Article or Article III would involve serious risks to the safety of life or property or would otherwise be clearly infeasible. In such cases, the negative response to a request to refrain from initiating a project, action, or activity shall set forth fully the nature of the conditions requiring immediate action.

"ARTICLE III

"Any dispute arising between two or more of the States Parties concerning the interpretation or application of the present Treaty shall be settled by negotiation, inquiry, mediation, conciliation, arbitration, judicial settlement or other peaceful means of their own choice.

"ARTICLE IV

"Five years after the entry into force of this Treaty, a conference of Parties shall be held at Geneva, Switzerland, in order to review the operation of this Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the preamble and the provisions of the Treaty are being realized. Such review shall take into account relevant technological developments and consider the need for developing procedures for the assessment of liability regarding State responsibility for damage to the environment of other States or areas beyond national jurisdiction.

"ARTICLE V

"(1) Any Party may propose an amendment to this Treaty. The text of any proposed amendment shall be submitted to the Depositary Government which shall circulate it to all Parties to this Treaty. Thereafter, if requested to do so by one-third or more of the Parties, the Depositary Government shall convene a conference, to which it shall invite all the Parties, to consider such an amendment.

"(2) Any amendment to this Treaty shall be approved by a majority of votes of all the Parties to this Treaty. The amendment shall enter into force for those Parties accepting the amendment upon the deposit of instruments of ratification by a majority of all the Parties accepting the amendment upon the deposit of instruments of ratification by a majority of all the Parties.

"ARTICLE VI

"(1) This Treaty shall be of unlimited duration

"(2) Each Party shall have the right to withdraw from the Treaty upon 90 days notice to one or more of the Depositary Governments.

"ARTICLE VII

"(1) This Treaty shall be open to all States for signature. Any State which does not sign this Treaty before its entry into force in accordance with paragraph 3 of this Article may accede to it at any time.

"(2) This Treaty shall be subject to ratification by signatory states. Instruments of ratification and instruments of accession shall be deposited with ------ and ------ which are hereby designated the Depositary Governments.

"(3) This Treaty shall enter into force on the thirtieth day following the date of the deposit of the instruments of ratification or accession by one-fourth of the Signatory States.

"(4) For States whose instruments of ratification or accession are deposited subsequent to the entry into force of this Treaty, it shall enter into force on the date of the deposit of their instruments of ratification or accession.

"(5) The Depositary Government shall promptly inform all signatory and acceding States of the date of each signature, the date of deposit of each instrument of ratification of and accession to, this Treaty, the date of its entry into force, and the date of receipt of any requests for conferences or other notices.

"(6) This Treaty shall be registered by the Depositary Government pursuant to Article 102 of the Charter of the United Nations.".

The amendment was agreed to.

The resolution, as amended, was agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

Whereas there is a vast potential for human betterment through those projects, actions, and continuing activities that modify the Earth (its land, its waters, and its atmosphere) in environmentally sound ways that are consistent with the Earth's natural ecology and under careful controls designed to avoid or minimize any adverse environmental effects; and

Whereas there is potentially great danger to the world ecological system and to the well-being of individual nations if such activities are not controlled or conducted with sufficient regard to their potentially adverse effects on the physical environment or environmental interests of other nations or a global commons area: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved, That it is the sense of the Senate that the United States Government should seek the agreement of other governments to a treaty along the following general lines.

"The Parties to this Treaty,

"Recognizing the vast potential for human betterment through those projects, actions and continuing activities that modify the Earth (its land, its waters, and its atmosphere) in environmentally sound ways that are consistent with the Earth's natural ecology and under careful controls designed to avoid or minimize any adverse environmental effects; and

"Aware of the great danger to the world ecological system and to the well-being of individual nations if such activities are not controlled or conducted with sufficient regard to their potentially adverse effects on the physical environment or environmental interests of other nations or a global commons area,

The title was amended so as to read:

Resolution expressing the sense of the Senate that the United States Government should seek the agreement of other governments to a proposed treaty requiring the preparation of an International Environmental Assessment for any major project, action, or continuing activity which may be reasonably expected to have a significant adverse effect on the physical environment or environmental interests of another nation or a global commons area.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 95-990), explaining the purposes of the measure.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE

The purpose of this resolution is to make nations aware and responsive to the adverse transboundary environmental efforts of activities occurring within their territory. With this goal in mind, the resolution calls for the negotiation of a treaty which would require nations to prepare an environmental assessment of any activity which could reasonably be expected to have a significant harmful impact on the physical environment of another nation or a global commons area.

BACKGROUND

On January 24, 1977, Senate Resolution 49 was introduced by Senator Pell. The following is an excerpt from his introductory statement which explains the need for an international agreement in this area.

Last December 10 (1976), the United Nations General Assembly approved by a 96-to-8 vote—with 30 abstentions—a draft treaty to ban the use of environmental modification techniques in warfare. This development is a great source of satisfaction to me, as this treaty appears to have come about as a result of Senate Resolution 281, including a draft treaty, which I introduced in 1972. That resolution was endorsed unanimously by the North Atlantic Assembly on November 21, 1972, and, after being reintroduced as Senate Resolution 71, passed the Senate on July 11, 1973, by a vote of 82 to 10. With the entry into force of that treaty, a major step forward will have been taken to insure that the emerging sciences of environmental modifications will be used solely for peaceful purposes to benefit mankind. But the dedication of most of the nations of the world to peaceful uses of environmental modification techniques—weather and climate modificationf or example—by itself—will not insure that such techniques will be employed in such a way as not to cause harm to or even wreak devastation on another nation or on a global commons area as the oceans even if there is no aggressive military motive involved.

Similarly, and perhaps more important, large-scale economic projects—for example, dams, canals, nuclear reactors, waste disposal systems, and the clearing of virgin jungle and tropical rain forest land for agricultural development—could have unintended or unforeseen effects of a significant nature beyond the borders of the countries in which these projects are being conducted. In the most extreme case, a nation may adopt a self-serving policy and undertake a project of nonmilitary purposes knowing full well that it could have disastrous environmental consequences for a neighboring country.

That is why I am introducing today a Senate resolution calling upon the President to take the initiative in proposing multilateral negotiations on a treaty which would require the preparation of an international environmental impact statement for any activity which may reasonably be expected to have a significant effect on the environment of other nations or a global commons area.

It should also be noted that the 23d Meeting of the North Atlantic Assembly (September 1977) adopted a resolution urging its member governments "to begin the process of negotiating a treaty requiring the preparation of an international environmental analysis for any major project, action, or continuing activity which may be reasonably expected to have a significant adverse effect on the physical environmental interests of another nation or a global commons area." This action indicates that the nations of the North Atlantic Alliance are willing to negotiate an agreement similar to that proposed by Senate Resolution 49.

MAJOR PROVISIONS

The operative clause of Senate Resolution 49, as amended, urges the United States to seek the agreement of other nations to negotiate a treaty requiring the preparation of international environmental assessments for any major project, action or continuing activity within its territory or in a global commons area which could reasonably be expected to have a significant adverse effect on the environment of another nation or a global commons area.

The following is a summary of the major provisions of the draft treaty proposed by Senate Resolution 49.

This treaty:

Provides that no country party to this treaty nor nongovernmental entity within such country will undertake a major project which may have a significant adverse effect on the environment of another nation or global commons area unless it first files an International Environmental Assessment with the United Nations Environment Program (UNEP).

Requires, upon request, that parties undertaking major projects consult with the affected party or parties or in the case of a global commons area, with the UNEP, in order to prevent or minimize any potential adverse transboundary environmental effects.

Requires nations, upon request, to refrain for not more than 90 days for initiating a project or activity which might have adverse transboundary environmental effects in order to permit consultations. This 90-day waiting period may be waived for good reason by the party initiating the project or activity.

Imposes a responsibility for a good faith effort to settle disputes concerning the interpretation or application of this treaty.

Calls for an international conference 5 years after the treaty enters into force to review the operations of the agreement and to consider the need for developing procedures for the assessment of liability regarding state responsibility for damage to the environment of other states or areas beyond national jurisdiction.

JOZEF SWIDERSKI

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 947.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title.

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (S. 1951) for the relief of Jozef Swiderski.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed, as follows:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the periods of time Jozef Swiderski has resided in the United States and any State since his lawful admission for permanent residence on July 22, 1968, shall be held and considered to meet the residence and physical presence requirements of section 316 of the Immigration and Nationality Act, and his petition for naturalization may be filed in any court having naturalization jurisdiction under section 310 of such Act.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 95–1018), explaining the purposes of the measure.

The being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of the bill is to enable the beneficiary to file a petition for naturalization.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The beneficiary of the bill is a 61-year-old native of Poland who is stateless. He was Jozef Jacies, but changed his name to Jozef Swiderski in 1941 after his mother and sister lost their lives during the Nazi occupation. He resides in Rome, Italy, where he has been employed as the Acting Director of the United Nations Food and Agriculture Organization since March of 1966. His wife is a naturalized citizen of the United States. Their daughter is a lawful permanent resident of the United States. The beneficiary was admitted to the United States on July 22, 1968, as a lawful permanent resident and has approximately 3 years and 3 months physical presence in the United States in the aggregate since his admission for permanent residence.

UMBERTO RUFFOLO

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 946.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The bill will be stated by title:

The assistant legislative clerk read as follows:

A bill (H.R. 1420) for the relief of Umberto Ruffolo.

There being no objection, the bill was considered, ordered to a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, the Senator from Texas is so cantankerous that he moves to table every motion I make.

Mr. TOWER. And succeeds every time.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. He is quite right.

My scorecard is looking pretty poor by this time.

Mr. TOWER. The Senator from Texas would be delighted to have record votes on all of these.

BROADENING THE OBSERVANCE OF THANKSGIVING

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 944.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The resolution will be stated by title:

The concurrent resolution (S. Con. Res. 32) relating to broadening the observance of Thanksgiving to an occasion of sharing our plenty with the hungry of other lands.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection to the present consideration of the resolution?

There being no objection, the Senate proceeded to consider the resolution.

UP AMENDMENT NO. 1470

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, on behalf of Mrs. HUMPHREY I call up amendments at the desk and ask they be considered en bloc.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The amendment will be stated.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to read the amendment.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the reading of the amendment be dispensed with.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection it is so ordered.

The amendment is as follows:

On page 2, beginning on line one, delete all through "concurring)," and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring),". and

On page 3, line 3, delete "The Clerk of the House" and insert in lieu thereof the following:

"The Secretary of the Senate".

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the amendments are considered and agreed to en bloc.

Without objection, the resolution, as amended, was considered and agreed to.

The preamble was agreed to.

The concurrent resolution, with its preamble, is as follows:

Whereas since 1621 Americans have each year celebrated a day of gratitude for the bountiful harvests and blessings of our own land with feasts and family gatherings; and

Whereas Americans have a long-demonstrated history of compassion for those less fortunate; and

Whereas compassionate Americans seek a vehicle through which to translate their concerns into constructive action; and

Whereas there is a need to help combat world hunger beyond what governments are providing; and

Whereas in a world where hunger is haunting an ever-growing proportion of the human family, it is appropriate that Americans should express their thankfulness by sharing with the hungry of other countries; and

Whereas this observance should serve to rekindle the original spirit of sharing and give our people the pride and satisfaction of contributing toward a better-fed world; and

Whereas this observance should add a practical aspect and broaden the ethical aspect of Thanksgiving: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate (the House of Representatives concurring), That it is the sense of the Congress, that—

(1) the national observance of Thanksgiving should include a voluntary practice called "Thankful Giving", whereby Americans are invited to share with those abroad who are hungry;

(2) before starting their Thanksgiving meal, family members should be invited to make personal donations to combat hunger abroad as a way of giving thanks for the feast that follows:

(3) the sums so collected should be forwarded to the charities their donors chose, either religious or secular;

(4) schools, churches, clubs, labor organizations, and the media should disseminate and promote the concept of "Thankful Giving", and provide lists of appropriate charities;

(5) the President, the Governors of the several States, and local public officials should consider recommending the observance of "Thankful Giving" in their Thanksgiving proclamations.

SEC. 2. The Secretary of the Senate is directed to transmit copies of this resolution to the President, the Secretary of State, the Secretary of Agriculture, and the Governors of the several States.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the resolution was agreed to.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 95–1015), explaining the purposes of the measure.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE OF THE RESOLUTION

The purpose of the resolution is to designate Thanksgiving as the day of "Thankful Giving" on the part of Americans. The resolution calls upon the American people to dedicate part of their day on Thanksgiving to thinking about the problems of world hunger, learning about its consequences, and contemplating the ways in which this tragic problem can be solved. It invites American families to share their bounty with the hungry abroad through donations to private and voluntary organizations which play a key part in overseas development.

The resolution also urges that elected officials across the Nation should consider recommending the observance of "Thankful Giving" in their Thanksgiving Day proclamations.

ORDER PERMITTING THE COMMITTEE ON ENERGY AND NATURAL RESOURCES UNTIL 5 P.M. TO FILE A REPORT ON H.R. 6900

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Committee on Energy and Natural Resources may have until 5 p.m. today to file a report on H.R. 6900, the National Trail Systems Act.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

PAIUTE AND SHOSHONE TRUST LANDS

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask that the Chair lay before the Senate a message from the House of Representatives on S. 785.

The PRESIDING OFFICER laid before the Senate the following message from the House of Representatives:

Resolved, That the bill from the Senate (S. 785) entitled "An Act to declare that all right, title, and interest of the United States in two thousand seven hundred acres, more or less, are hereby held in trust for the Paiute and Shoshone Tribes of the Fallon Indian Reservation and Colony, Fallon, Nevada, to promote the economic self-sufficiency of the Paiute and Shoshone Tribes, and for other purposes", do pass with the following amendments:

1. Page 2, line 6, strike out "section 33;" and insert "section 33,"

2. Page 2, line 19, strike out "from the date of enactment of this Act," and insert: "beginning on October 1, 1978."

3. Page 2, line 25, strike out all after "entitled," over to and including "Act," on page 3, line 1, and insert: "beginning on October 1, 1978."

4. Page 3, line 19, after "Nevada.", insert: "Nothing in this Act shall be construed to permit the transfer of water rights from lands within the existing Fallon Indian Reservation to lands added to the reservation by this Act."

5. Page 4, line 12, strike out "subsection 4(b)" and insert: "section 4".

6. Page 4, line 18, strike out "subsection 4(b)" and insert: "section 4".

7. Page 4, line 19, strike out "subsection 4(b)" and insert: "section 4".

8. Page 4, line 21, strike out "of" and insert: "or".

9. Page 4, line 22, strike out "subsection 4(b)" and insert: "section 4".

10. Page 5 strike out lines 16 through 19, inclusive.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate will proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move the Senate concur in the amendments of the House.

The motion was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I yield the floor.

WE NOW HAVE DOUBLE-DIGIT INFLATION

Mr. HARRY F. BYRD, JR. Mr. President, the Department of Commerce announced today that during the second quarter inflation was at an annual rate of 10.1 percent, so now the United States is back to double-digit inflation.

I am convinced that we will not get the cost of living under control in this country until we get the cost of Government under control. Spending for the current fiscal year will increase by approximately 13 percent over the past year. Under the budget the Congress is now considering, a further 10- to 11-percent increase in spending will be expected.

I think the most dangerous problem facing our country today is that of inflation, and if inflation is to be adequately attacked the attack must be begun right here in Washington, and there must be cooperation in this endeavor by both Congress and the President.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there further morning business?

THE CALENDAR

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate proceed to the consideration of Calendar Order No. 937.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

CÉSAR B. IBAÑEZ II, M.D.

The Senate proceeded to consider the bill (S. 2067) for the relief of César B. Ibañez II, doctor of medicine, which had been reported from the Committee on the Judiciary, with amendments on page 1, beginning with line 3, strike "That, notwithstanding the provisions of section 212(a)(14) of the Immigration and Nationality Act, for the purposes of such Act," and insert "That, for the purposes of the Immigration and Nationality Act,";

On page 2, line 5, after "under" insert "paragraphs (1) through (8) of";

So as to make the bill read:

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That, for the purposes of the Immigration and National Act, César B. Ibañez II, doctor of medicine, shall be held and considered to have been lawfully admitted to the United States for permanent residence as of the date of the enactment of this Act upon payment of the required visa fee. Upon the granting of permanent residence to such alien as provided for in this Act, the Secretary of State shall instruct the proper officer to reduce by one number, during the current fiscal year or the fiscal year next following, the total number of immigrant visas and conditional entries which are made available to natives of the country of the alien's birth under paragraph (1) through (8) of section 203 (a) of the Immigration and Nationality Act.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the amendments be considered and agreed to en bloc.

The amendments were agreed to en bloc.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed for a third reading, read the third time, and passed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the bill was passed.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent to have printed in the RECORD an excerpt from the report (No. 95–1008), explaining the purposes of the measure.

There being no objection, the excerpt was ordered to be printed in the RECORD, as follows:

PURPOSE OF THE BILL

The purpose of the bill, as amended, is to grant the status of permanent residence in the United States to César B. Ibañez II, doctor of medicine. The bill provides for the payment of the required visa fee and for an appropriate visa number deduction. The bill has been amended in accordance with established precedents.

STATEMENT OF FACTS

The beneficiary of the bill is a 29-year-old native and citizen of the Philippines who was admitted to the United States as a nonimmigrant temporary worker of distinguished merit and ability on July 26, 1974. He currently resides with his wife and two children in Dunbar, W. Va. One child is a U.S. citizen. Dr. Ibañez is currently employed at Thomas Memorial Hospital in South Charleston, W. Va.

ORDER TRANSFERRING S. 2068 TO CALENDAR OF SUBJECTS ON THE TABLE

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, is it not correct that measures may be moved from Subjects on the Table just as easily as they can be moved from the General Orders Calendar?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The Senator is correct.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that Calendar Order No. 938 be transferred to the Calendar of Subjects on the Table.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDENT OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I as unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

EXECUTIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate go into executive session to consider nominations on the Executive Calendar.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate is in executive session.

NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of John Francis Ahearne, of Virginia, to be a member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for the remainder of the time expiring June 30, 1978; and a member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for the term of 5 years expiring June 30, 1983.

● Mr. DOLE. Mr. President, on Thursday of this week, the Environment and Public Works Committee approved the nomination of John Ahearne to the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. The Senator from Kansas would urge his colleagues to move on this nomination promptly.

INDECISION

Mr. President, the Nuclear Regulatory Commission licenses domestic nuclear powerplants and exports of nuclear materials. For over a year now, this five man Commission has operated with only four members, resulting in split votes on several major decisions. The fifth seat on the NRC is considered pivotal for the future of America's energy development. John Ahearne has the broad-based support of both environmental groups and nuclear industry organizations.

ENERGY FUTURE

Mr. President, the single most serious obstacle to the implementation of a nuclear energy policy is indecision on the part of the Federal Government. Our country is at a crossroads. Last year, our energy needs spawned a $27 billion balance of trade deficit, inviting inflation and jeopardizing our jobs. Our indecision on energy matters is crippling the dollar on money markets in Europe and Japan. President Carter has just returned from Bonn, where the criticism he most often heard was of America's lack of a comprehensive energy policy.

REDTAPE

Certainly America's energy problem is much broader than the problems with nuclear energy. But in no other sector of the energy industry does bureaucratic bungling and redtape play the disastrous role that it does with nuclear power. The nuclear reactor at Seabrook, N.H. is the most illuminating example. Regulatory delays in the building of the Seabrook plant have resulted in lost wages of $114 million. They have increased the cost of the facility by a minimum of $419 million, to date, and they have resulted in a loss of over one-half of a billion dollars lost to the New England economy.

SEABROOK

While the Seabrook reactor has received much coverage in the news recently, it is just one of a number of instances in which the Federal Government has exacerbated the already significant problems of building a nuclear power plant. Because of government regulations, it now takes 10 to 12 years to license and construct a nuclear plant in the United States, roughly twice the length of time it takes in other countries. The Senator from Kansas finds it hard to believe that a country which must now pay four times as much for a barrel of oil as it did 5 years ago, would not only accept, but endorse this policy.

Mr. President, John Ahearne has served for 13 years with the Department of Defense, including a position as Deputy Assistant Secretary. He is currently serving as a Deputy Assistant Secretary at the Department of Energy. I have no delusions about the ability of a single appointment to affect the administration's energy policy, but I do believe that the consideration of Mr. Ahearne would be a step in the right direction.●

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was confirmed.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION

The assistant legislative clerk read the nomination of Roy T. Sessums, of Louisiana, to be a member of the Mississippi River Commission for a term of 9 years.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection the nomination is considered and confirmed.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I move to reconsider the vote by which the nomination was confirmed.

Mr. TOWER. I move to lay that motion on the table.

The motion to lay on the table was agreed to.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the President be immediately notified of the confirmation of the nominations.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

LEGISLATIVE SESSION

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the Senate return to legislative business.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, the Senate is now in legislative session.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I suggest the absence of a quorum.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. The clerk will call the roll.

The assistant legislative clerk proceeded to call the roll.

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that the order for the quorum call be rescinded.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

THE GENOCIDE CONVENTION—IN CONFORMITY WITH AMERICA'S HIGHEST IDEALS

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, it is well recognized that the United States played an influential role in creating the United Nations and fashioning the 30 tenets which collectively became known as the United Nations Universal Declaration on Human Rights.

Since the declaration was adopted 30 years ago this December, it has become a significant force in promoting respect for, and observance of, human rights in all parts of the globe. It has evolved into what the General Assembly in 1948 referred to as "a common standard of achievement for all peoples and all nations."

What is less familiar about the declaration is that the vast majority of its articles correspond to America's most cherished ideals. Article 3, perhaps the most important of all the articles, asserts that "Everyone has the right to life, liberty, and security of person."

Mr. President, the similarity between that phrase and the words of our own Declaration of Independence is striking. All men, agreed the Founding Fathers, "are endowed by their Creator with certain unalienable rights, that among these are life, liberty, and the pursuit of happiness." Two hundred years later, we continue to recognize the right to live as basic to the existence of any civilization, and certainly any nation.

At the same time, the United Nations has expressly given recognition to the right to live by expanding upon the declaration and making genocide an international crime under the Convention on the Prevention and Punishment of the Crime of Genocide, which entered into force on January 12, 1951.

But despite the manifest harmony of the right to live tenets of the Declaration of Independence and the Universal Declaration of Human Rights, the United States has refused to join 83 other nations in ratifying the Genocide Convention. Ever since President Truman submitted the treaty to the Senate for approval in 1949, every chief executive has tried in vain to secure ratification.

Through its failure to become a party to this convention, this country has become increasingly isolated from the development of international human rights law. This failure impairs both our participation in the United Nations work in human rights, and our bilateral efforts to persuade governments to respect international human rights standards.

Worst of all, our refusal to ratify the Genocide Convention signifies a failure to uphold for all people the cornerstone of our democracy—the dignity of man.

Mr. President, we must end this diplomatic embarrassment and protracted compromise of our integrity. If we are ever to condemn mass murder, we must become a contracting party to the treaty against genocide.

We cannot speak for human rights at home unless we speak for them everywhere.

ORDER FOR RECESS UNTIL 11:30 A.M., MONDAY, JULY 24, 1978

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that when the Senate completes its business today it stand in recess until the hour of 11:30 a.m. on Monday next.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, are there any orders for the recognition of Senators on Monday?

The PRESIDING OFFICER. No, there are not.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. I thank the Chair.

ORDER FOR CONSIDERATION OF S. 2850

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that after the two leaders or their designees have been recognized under the standing order on Monday, the Senate proceed to the consideration of S. 2850, a bill to amend the Elder Americans Act to provide for improved programs for the elderly and for other purposes.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Without objection, it is so ordered.

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, this would mean that the bill S. 3075, Calendar Order No. 772, the Foreign Assistance bill, would not be laid down until sometime late during the afternoon, or possibly even at the close of the day, but there will be rollcall votes, I anticipate, on the Older Americans Act and on amendments or motions with relation thereto, on Monday.

Mr. TOWER. Will the distinguished majority leader yield for a question?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes.

Mr. TOWER. Will he consider getting consent to hold votes until after a certain time on Monday afternoon?

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Yes; does the Senator have a suggestion?

Mr. TOWER. Oh, say, 3 o'clock.

ORDER FOR NO ROLLCALL VOTES BEFORE 3 P.M. ON MONDAY, JULY 24, 1978

Mr. ROBERT C. BYRD. Mr. President, I ask unanimous consent that no rollcall votes occur on Monday, if ordered prior thereto, until the hour of 3 o'clock p.m.

The PRESIDING OFFICER. Is there objection? Without objection, it is so ordered.

RECESS UNTIL 11:30 A.M. ON MONDAY

Mr. PROXMIRE. Mr. President, I move, in accordance with the previous order, that the Senate recess until 11:30 a.m. on Monday next.

The motion was agreed to; and at 3:20 p.m. the Senate recessed until Monday, July 24, 1978, at 11:30 a.m.

NOMINATION

Executive nomination received by the Senate July 21, 1978:

U.S. RAILWAY ASSOCIATION

W. K. Smith, of Minnesota, to be Chairman of the Board of Directors of the United States Railway Association for a term of 6 years, vice Arthur D. Lewis, resigned.

CONFIRMATIONS

Executive nominations confirmed by the Senate July 21, 1978:

NUCLEAR REGULATORY COMMISSION

John Francis Ahearne, of Virginia, to be a member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for the remainder of the term expiring June 30, 1978.

John Francis Ahearne, of Virginia, to be a member of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission for the term of 5 years expiring June 30, 1983.

The above nomination was approved subject to the nominee's commitment to respond to requests to appear and testify before any duly constituted committee of the Senate.

MISSISSIPPI RIVER COMMISSION

Roy T. Sessums, of Louisiana, to be a member of the Mississippi River Commission for a term of 9 years.

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Friday, July 21, 1978

The House met at 10 o'clock a.m. and was called to order by the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BRADEMAS).

DESIGNATION OF SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore laid before the House the following communication from the Speaker:

WASHINGTON, D.C.,
July 21, 1978.

I hereby designate the Honorable JOHN BRADEMAS to act as Speaker pro tempore for today.

THOMAS P. O'NEILL, Jr.,
Speaker of the House of Representatives.

PRAYER

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward G. Latch, D.D., offered the following prayer:

Unto Thee, O Lord, do I lift up my soul. Lead me in Thy truth and teach me, for Thou art the God of my salvation.—Psalms 25: 1, 5.

O God, our Father, we pray for the leaders of our Nation in these critical days. Grant unto them insight to see the right way to take, the inspiration to want that way, and the industry to walk on it to achieve the high goals we set for our country. Strengthen them and our people across this great land that they may seek to lift human life here and everywhere to a higher plane of good living.

"Lead us, O Father, in the paths of right;
Blindly we stumble when we walk alone,
Involved in shadows of a darksome night;
Only with Thee we journey safely on."
Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Without objection, the Journal stands approved.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment bills of the House of the following titles:

H.R. 1751. An act for the relief of Lucy Davao Jara Graham;

H.R. 2555. An act for the relief of Michelle Lagrosa Sese;

H.R. 2945. An act for the relief of Mrs. Amelia Doria Nicholson;

H.R. 3995. An act for the relief of Habib Haddad;

H.R. 4607. An act for the relief of William Mok; and H.R. 5928. An act for the relief of Miss Coralia Raposo.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 12933) entitled "An act making appropriations for the Department of Transportation and related agencies for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for other purposes."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the House amendments to the Senate amendments Nos. 14, 31, 32, and 33 to the foregoing bill.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the report of the committee of conference on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses on the amendments of the Senate to the bill (H.R. 11504) entitled "An act to amend the Consolidated Farm and Rural Development Act, provide an economic emergency loan program to farmers and ranchers in the United States, and extend the Emergency Livestock Credit Act."

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House to the Senate amendment No. 2 to a bill of the House of the following title:

H.J. Res. 945. Joint Resolution making an urgent supplemental appropriation for the black lung program of the Department of Labor for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1978.

The message also announced that the Senate disagrees to the amendments of the House to the bill (S. 3040) entitled "An act to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to extend the authorizations of appropriations for an additional fiscal year, to provide for public consideration and implementation of a rail passenger service study, and for other purposes," requests a conference with the House on the disagreeing votes of the two Houses thereon, and appoints Mr. CANNON, Mr. LONG, Mr. RIEGLE, Mr. DANFORTH, and Mr. SCHMITT to be the conferees on the part of the Senate.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 2899. An act to amend the Endangered Species Act of 1973 to establish an Endangered Species Interagency Committee to review certain actions to determine whether exemptions from certain requirements of that act should be granted for such actions; and

S. 3084. An act to amend and extend certain Federal laws relating to housing, community, and neighborhood development and preservation, and related programs, and for other purposes.

POSTAL SERVICE ACTIONS WILL RESULT IN SIGNIFICANT DETERIORATION OF MAIL SERVICE TO SMALL COMMUNITIES AND RURAL AREAS

(Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend her remarks.)

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to alert my colleagues to actions now being taken by the U.S. Postal Service which would result in a significant deterioration of mail service to smaller communities and rural areas.

The Postal Service has formulated a policy for its 13-State central region to halt the movement on Sundays of mail from its sectional centers to certain smaller communities. This action would have the effect of delaying by at least 1 or 2 days the delivery of mail, which already is slow in these areas.

I protested this action to the Postmaster General after I was alerted that 10 of the largest communities in my congressional district are no longer receiving mail on Sunday. Not only was I not informed of this change in policy, neither were my constituents. Seven of the ten affected cities are county seats of government. All are hubs of commerce for the areas surrounding them. The delay in mail service could have serious, negative effects on Government activities, business transactions, the delivery of newspapers, as well as the delivery of private correspondence.

Rural areas and small communities should not have to tolerate second-rate service. I am sure it is no coincidence that all 13 of the States in the Postal Service's central region have large rural areas.

My colleagues will remember that this body overwhelmingly approved H.R. 7700 to reorganize the Postal Service. One of the provisions of that bill requires the Postal Service to submit to Congress for approval significant changes in nationwide service. While that bill is not law, I contend that the Postal Service has violated the spirit in which that bill was passed by the House. While it may not be a policy of nationwide impact at the present time, if expanded throughout the 13-State central region and then into other areas, it soon will be.

For the benefit of my colleagues who would like to find out from the Postal Service which communities in their congressional districts will be or already are receiving second-rate mail service, the following are the affected States: Nebraska, South Dakota, North Dakota, Kansas, Minnesota, Iowa, Missouri, Wisconsin, Illinois, Michigan, Indiana, Ohio, and Kentucky.

HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1978

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill (H.R. 12433) to amend and extend certain Federal laws relating to housing, community and neighborhood development and preservation, and related programs, and for other purposes.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHLEY).

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 268, nays 6, not voting 158, as follows:

Mr. McDONALD changed his vote from "nay" to "yea."

So the motion was agreed to.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the further consideration of the bill H.R. 12433, with Mr. BENNETT in the chair.

The CHAIRMAN. When the Committee rose on Thursday, July 20, 1978, title III had been considered as having been read and open to amendment at any point. Pending is the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. ABDNOR).

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I will not take the full 5 minutes because I think this matter has been thoroughly debated. I think that probably most Members have made up their minds. However, a couple of points need to be stressed in view of the discussion that occurred last evening.

First of all, even assuming that the Department's criteria for the reorganization actions taken were correct, those criteria have not been equally and equitably and consistently applied with respect to the reorganizations that the Department has ordered.

Secondly, in looking at the cost benefits or the cost benefit analysis of these moves which would justify the moves in the reorganization, we find that the Department has looked primarily at its own budget and how these moves would be cost effective from the Department's standpoint, but the Department has not adequately analyzed the cost benefit to the private sector, for people who utilize the services of these different offices.

Mr. Chairman, let me just cite as an example the Grand Rapids office in Michigan. The Grand Rapids office has been doing a wonderful job in the multifamily insuring function. The Detroit office has a terrible record. Nevertheless, that function would be shifted to Detroit.

Mr. Chairman, what does this mean—I say to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHLEY), whom I highly respect—in the context of mileage? The Grand Rapids office in Michigan, for instance, covers 57 of the 83 counties, probably three-fourths of the geographical area of Michigan.

What would be the case if the Grand Rapids function were eliminated? One would have to go farther to contact the HUD office from the Upper Peninsula of Michigan by going to Detroit, some 100 miles or more, than would people in the Detroit area if they had to go to Washington. It is some 550 miles from the point in the Upper Peninsula to Detroit.

Mr. Chairman, this does not make any sense if we really are trying to get HUD services out to the people, which is the whole thrust of the HUD programs.

Again, there has not been an attempt to really analyze the additional costs and inconveniences that will occur to those who use HUD services if this reorganization goes through.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I urge all of my colleagues to support the Abdnor amendment.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. LUKEN. Mr. Chairman, I also support the Abdnor amendment.

In my district in Cincinnati, Ohio, this reorganization has thrown the situation into chaos, and I am not speaking on behalf of the employees except to say that they cynically observe that they think the reorganization will be reorganized back within a few years, and they will be back at the same location, which will be at an additional cost rather than at a saving.

However, from the standpoints of the developer, of the city of Cincinnati, and of others who are interested in housing, in going ahead with development, they are the people whose arguments I have listened to; and I think this has been a tragic mistake.

Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to join with my colleague from South Dakota in supporting his amendment to restore the HUD structure to that which existed prior to the October 13, 1977, announced reorganization.

We have already heard a number of excellent arguments against this reorganization and I wish to expand upon those remarks.

Foremost, this issue is one which deserves the direct consideration of the Congress. HUD has a proposed budget in fiscal year 1979 of over $68 billion and it is our responsibility to see that it runs effectively.

GAO recommended that this matter be brought before the appropriate committees last year, however, HUD proceeded independently. To correct such situations hearings should be held prior to the completion of this plan or any subsequent plans. Much of what we are suffering now is a result of lack of congressional involvement.

The reorganization represents only the Department's viewpoint. Their elimination of field office handling of multifamily functions in many areas does not improve the ability of HUD to serve multifamily construction needs. What is more it will cost over $12 million to implement.

This inefficient change will directly affect developers, mortgage companies, nonprofit sponsors, public accountants, and architects to name a few. Their representatives have pointed out that HUD multifamily consolidations will reduce the quality and speed of HUD operations in planning and construction phases.

A recent GAO report corroborates this opinion. In this report examples of distant offices' making serious mistakes because of lack of sufficient local knowledge have been cited. A housing official in Albuquerque, N. Mex., stated that HUD projects in New Mexico have been approved where designs have not been compatible with climatic conditions and projects sites have been approved for which the cost of construction grossly exceeded the improved value.

Further, in instances where great distances are involved between local sponsors and HUD multifamily services, operating costs will increase substantially. It is not unusual for a developer to make more than 20 one-person trips to a local office prior to the start of construction of a project. These added costs could ultimately result in developers refusing to do business with HUD.

Twelve million dollars is a lot of money for a move that estimates show will be only marginally successful in solving administration and processing problems and that a real threat to multifamily building activities and project management exist.

I believe that this money could be better spent to upgrade and streamline their processing and organizational procedures without this massive and costly change.

For all their attempts at being more efficient HUD proposed completion of this reorganization by March 20. Now, estimates are that the full plan will not be in place until sometime in the fall.

The most expensive part of this reorganization relates to the handling of affected personnel. Over 1,000 persons will be affected—many of whom will resign or retire, creating costs for separation pay as well as early retirement programs. Aside from dollar costs, the loss of trained and quality personnel cannot be computed.

For each individual that is transferred the average cost to the taxpayer will be $6,000. The question is, is it worth it? It is not.

The administration's proposal is a critical blow to redevelopment efforts in my district. Cincinnati, for some time, has been struggling to get new housing within its corporate limits, particularly the downtown areas. These efforts are just now bearing fruit and much of this success has been attributed to constant contact between the HUD multifamily personnel in Cincinnati and the developer. This reorganization will eliminate that crucial factor and is seen as a great threat.

The Senate Banking, Housing, and Urban Affairs Committee has included in their version of this bill a ban on the use of any appropriated funds for the transfer of multifamily functions from any area, field, or insuring office within HUD. This move came after careful review of the GAO report which concluded that—

HUD's projected cost savings resulting from the reorganization are not well supported" and that consolidation of multifamily functions to a limited number of area offices will result in "a deterioration of HUD's project management capabilities because of increased distance and reduced project monitoring.

In conclusion, I urge my colleagues to join in this effort to halt the reorganization plan and to see that this issue be brought before the Congress for appropriate review. We should not continue to pump money into a plan which is opposed in the private sector and which stands to create added problems in the effort of providing adequate housing to all Americans.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. LUKEN) for his comments. I think what the gentleman has said applies throughout this Nation. Therefore, I urge my colleagues to support the Abdnor amendment.

Mr. CLEVELAND. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I do not intend to speak for the full 5 minutes because this matter was rather carefully debated yesterday, and I do not want to take the time of the committee.

However, in reading over the RECORD of yesterday, there is some information that was not stressed yesterday which I think the Members should have.

First of all, I do not think it is too apparent from the RECORD of yesterday, although it may be, that what the Abdnor amendment attempts to do is something which the GAO specifically recommended that we do. The GAO recommended that the "Congress request the Secretary of the Department of Housing and Urban Development"—and I am now reading from the report—"to submit to appropriate committees the reorganization plan * * * before implementing the plan."

Mr. Chairman, that is what the GAO suggested.

The question of whether or not it is too late is still open to debate, but we stand on the position that only 24 percent of the reorganization has been completed. I think the House should know that in the Senate-passed bill, there is a similar amendment, so that this is not any wild-eyed idea.

The GAO report, as I understand it, says the reorganization would not result in in any substantial savings—no substantial savings, as was argued yesterday. The GAO report indicates that, if anything, there would be a diminution of services to the taxpayers and to the people who are using these programs.

Finally, I think we should know that most of the users—those are the town fathers and city fathers and the local people in areas affected—strongly support this amendment. I cannot speak for the entire country, but I certainly can speak for northern New England. I have had a great many letters from Vermont, New Hampshire, and Maine, and there is a strong grassroots supports for the Abdnor amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I urge that we adopt the Abdnor amendment.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman mentioned earlier that there is some question about how complete this reorganization is. The fact is that it is about 90 percent complete, virtually complete. The Abdnor amendment, I think a lot of people are not aware of, will require the taxpayers and all of us to pick up the expense of moving all these employees who have been transferred, their mortgages, everything else, and put them back in place, which is an absolutely incredible thing. I cannot believe that we would be sitting here seriously debating moving this whole process back and paying the freight. Is that not true?

Mr. CLEVELAND. That is the gentleman's argument. He made it yesterday, and in conflict with the gentleman's argument is the statement of Mr. ABDNOR, the principal author of this amendment. His facts do not substantiate the statement the gentleman just made, so there it is, an honest difference of opinion.

Mr. BLANCHARD. Is it not true that the Abdnor amendment would require us to pay the entire expense of moving people back in place, personal as well as governmental?

Mr. CLEVELAND. The gentleman totally ignores what I consider to be a most important point, that some of these people have quit rather than move. Some of these people have built up skills which they have acquired over the years. They are not moving; they are quitting. Some of these people might come back on board and that might even things out. The fact of the matter is that, although the gentleman says it costs a little, the fact of the matter is that doing it in the first place was a mistake. It was done without consulting Congress; it was done improperly; it was done unwisely, and this is the time to take a mistake like this and nip it in the bud.

Yesterday, when we were arguing about this, the gentleman was unaware that the Senate had a similar provision in its bill. If he wants to cast aspersions on the intelligence of the Senate, as sometimes we feel like doing, he can do it. The fact is that this is an amendment whose time has come, and Congress is going to tell HUD that if they are going to change things around all over again, we want to be in on the decision before not after, as the GAO report recommended.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I do not know where the gentleman from Michigan gets his facts, but in his district, the Grand Rapids–Detroit situation, the gentleman should know that not a single person in Grand Rapids involved in that transfer, although it involves 50 of some 82 employees, not a single person has made any kind of commitment to move to Detroit. Stopping of the reorganization would not affect them whatsoever.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New Hampshire has expired.

(At the request of Mr. ASHLEY and by unanimous consent, Mr. CLEVELAND was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, is it not a fact that the Secretary, in something of the nature of a special dispensation for the gentleman from Michigan, agreed not to have people moved until the end of the year? Is that not a fact?

Mr. CLEVELAND. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. No, that is not a fact. To the contrary, the reason it has not been carried out is because Detroit has not been ready to handle it. That is what HUD told me.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from South Dakota (Mr. ABDNOR).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 133, noes 160, not voting 139, as follows:

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. GRASSLEY

Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

I ask unanimous consent to modify my amendment to title I previously adopted in the Committee of the Whole on June 28. My modification is at the desk.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. GRASSLEY: Page 9, after line 2, insert the following:

(e) Title I of such Act is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"FAIR ACCESS FOR SMALLER COMMUNITIES"

"SEC. 120. The Secretary shall not establish requirements that limit or exclude the access of any community from assistance under this title on the basis of the population of such community except as expressly authorized by statute."

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GRASSLEY) to return to title I for the consideration of his amendment?

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, I would like to say that the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GRASSLEY) has discussed this amendment with the majority side. The purpose of the unanimous-consent request is to take care of an inadvertent mistake that was made.

Mr. Chairman, there is no objection to the unanimous-consent request or the amendment on this side, and I withdrew my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Iowa?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. GRASSLEY).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. BROWN OF MICHIGAN

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. BROWN of Michigan: Page 29, line 20, section 307 is amended by striking subsection (b) and relettering each succeeding subsection accordingly.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, basically, my amendment strikes the so-called Holtzman amendment. In doing so, it continues the policy of the Federal Government with respect to FAIR insurance programs that has persisted up to this time.

FAIR plans provide fair access to insurance requirements, and FAIR plans are State insurance programs encouraged by the Federal Government. The plans are not Federal insurance programs. To date, 26 States, the District of Columbia, and Puerto Rico have seen fit to adopt FAIR plans. Federal law merely requires that a FAIR plan be adopted by a State in order for insurance companies within a State to be eligible for riot reinsurance.

Now, indeed the law says:

Such plans must be approved by, and administered under the supervision of, the State insurance authority, or be authorized or required by State law * * *;

And the law further says that—and I quote:

Such plans may vary in detail from State to State because of local conditions * * *.

Mr. Chairman, the reason that we have this issue before us today is because the State of New York has seen fit to surcharge the high-risk policies with the full amount of the high-risk premium. This is possible under a FAIR plan. However, it is not contemplated by the FAIR plan; rather, under the FAIR plan, each State can determine for itself how the additional cost of this high-risk insurance shall be paid.

A State may directly subsidize this FAIR program so as to keep the rates to high-risk properties at least down somewhere near the voluntary market. A State can decide spread the full amount of the high-risk plan in the high-risk areas across the whole voluntary market. A State can determine that 50 percent shall be surcharged on the high-risk premium cost, or it can provide a 50 percent spread or a 50 percent subsidy, or it can use a formula of 80–20 or perhaps 75–25. All of those things are available under the plan.

The whole idea, though, is that a State shall determine how it will handle this high-risk program.

The State of New York, as I have said, surcharges the full amount, and I suppose that in later speeches there will be an allegation of redlining.

But if there is an allegation of redlining, it is not the Federal Congress that is redlining. It is the State of New York and its legislature.

We should not, because there is a problem in the State of New York, be passing a Federal law which in effect will dictate in an extremely rigid way how the other 49 States shall handle the rating of their insurance policies.

Mr. Chairman, I respectfully suggest that if we start this precedent of our moving in—especially it is bad because there is only one State involved—and telling State insurance commissioners and State legislatures how they are going to rate their insurance costs for all of their insurance companies, we are indeed in trouble.

Under this theory, I can see where we could just as well tell the States how they should handle their assigned auto risks, and all kinds of matters such as that.

Mr. Chairman, this is not a proper area for the Federal Government to impose itself. It is not needed. A remedy exists at the State level in New York, and we should not be adopting a Federal solution for what is one State's problem.

And let me point out that the State of New York is doing something. I think the State Assembly on June 5, of this year, passed legislation which would give up to $17 million of immediate relief to FAIR plan policyholders. The State decided to directly subsidize it. And that is the way it should be. The States should decide how to handle it.

Let me point out also that the Justice Department, in a letter to OMB dated February 22, this year, with respect to a report that was filed, said this:

> A strong argument may be made that the States, rather than being compelled to rely on a rigid rate structure and crude system of subsidization, should have the flexibility to experiment with new methods of pricing FAIR Plan Insurance and of subsidizing FAIR Plan risks, to the extent necessary, in light of the particular needs of consumers within the State.

Mr. Chairman, this is one amendment that, if we have any consistency in our philosophy of government, we should vote yes on.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment offered by the very distinguished ranking minority member of the Subcommittee on Housing and Community Development, my colleague and friend, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. Chairman, the issue involved here, in all truth, has been debated at great length over the past year in the conference on last year's housing and community development bill, in oversight hearings that the Subcommittee on House and Community Development conducted last November, in hearings that the Federal Insurance Administration held in December and January of last year, in the subcommittee's legislative hearings in March and subsequent markup sessions in the subcommittee and full Committee on Banking and, of course, now we are here today during floor consideration of this year's housing bill.

Mr. Chairman, we are not plowing new fields this morning. The issue is clear. It concerns the FAIR plan premiums and the way that these premiums are calculated. Based on the experience of FAIR plan policies alone, these premiums are simply too high for people to afford. For instance FAIR plan policies for people in the State of New York are four or five times higher than similar policies in the voluntary market. That is where the problem is. Because companies for a variety of reasons do not want to insure properties in certain urban areas, FAIR plan coverage was provided some 10 years ago. FAIR plan coverage is a carefully balanced program of private, State, and Federal cooperation. But what has happened in New York State and what is beginning to happen in nine other States as well is that FAIR plan policies more and more are simply beyond the reach of most homeowners.

The bill before us seeks to keep insurance available under the FAIR plan concept by insisting that the FAIR plan costs be no greater than private insurance available in the voluntary market.

Mr. Chairman, the administration supports this approach. So does the committee chairman.

Mr. Chairman, I would urge the defeat of the Brown of Michigan amendment.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin, the distinguished chairman of the full committee.

Mr. REUSS. I thank the subcommittee chairman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I want to thoroughly endorse everything the subcommittee chairman has said. I am 100 percent for that provision in the bill before us.

Mr. Chairman, I have had occasion to become aware of the views of our distinguished State insurance commissioners, Mr. Harold Wilde, who happens to be Wisconsin State commissioner. He heartily endorses this provision for two very commonsensible reasons. One, he points out that it is not going to affect the rate structure, which is on a statewide basis anyway. Of course, all insurance companies would just love to insure the superior risks and let the rest of the world go by. However, that is not how our great American private insurance industry business became great. They did it based on the principle of shared risk.

Mr. Wilde also points out that in both small communities and large communities—and they all have this selectivity problem—if the individual building for which insurance is sought has a condition problem, if it is fire-prone, for example, then, of course, a surcharge can be made, whether it is in millionaires' row or in the center of a tiny pocket of rural poverty.

Finally, he indicates that there should be a more forceful way of drawing the attention of our great insurance industry to the necessity that it stay with the problem of offering insurance on all homes to Americans generally and not continue the quasi-redlining that goes on.

Therefore, Mr. Chairman, I hope that the language in the bill before us will be retained, and I thank the gentleman for his forceful statements.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate very much the comments and the contributions of the chairman of the full committee, the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS).

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHLEY. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman's yielding.

I, too, want to strongly associate myself with his remarks.

I would indicate that I have copies of correspondence from the Commissioner of Insurance in the Commonwealth of Massachusetts, vigorously supporting this provision. I also have correspondence from the Commissioner of Insurance in the State of New Jersey.

The point that I would like to make, Mr. Chairman, is how in the world can we talk about new neighborhoods, revitalizing neighborhoods, providing housing for people, and still ignore the problem of redlining which devastates our neighborhoods?

Mr. Chairman, I vigorously support the remarks made by the chairman of the subcommittee.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHLEY) has expired.

(On request of Mr. BROWN of Michigan and by unanimous consent, Mr. ASHLEY was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ASHLEY. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

There has been some talk about insurance commissioners, and there probably are insurance commissioners who have not had the courage or have not been able to be persuasive enough to get their State legislatures to avoid the very things which the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. MITCHELL) is talking about.

However, what about all the other commissioners? The National Association of Insurance Commissioners of all the 50 States adopted a resolution, and the letter to me says that they "adopted a position of strong opposition to the Holtzman amendment."

In the letter they point out the following:

> Such congressional legislation would directly impact upon the insurance ratemaking process thereby usurping the traditional insurance legislative and regulatory authority responsibilities which have been vested in the States.
> Congress should not establish a fundamental adverse precedent of mandating a Federal insurance regulatory role for all States, especially to solve a perceived problem which may be applicable in only one or at most in only a very few states.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, let me say to the gentleman that with respect to the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, it is a divided question. We are not claiming that there is unanimity as far as those commissioners are concerned. It is a divided question, but I am sure the gentleman is convinced of the merits of the position of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. If the gentleman will yield further, this was a majority of the National Association of Insurance Commissioners, a majority of the commissioners, at least.

Mr. ANNUNZIO. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman and my distinguished colleagues, as one of the authors of the original FAIR plan legislation, I rise to most vigorously oppose the amendment.

The original thrust of the FAIR plans was to provide insurance to businesses and homeowners who were being denied insurance. In many cases, the denial was based on factors which could not be controlled by those seeking insurance.

However, the insurance industry is now using FAIR plans as a dumping grounds designed to funnel more money into their companies' pockets.

I know there are Members of this body who feel this problem is associated only with major metropolitan areas. I want to warn every Member of this House that what is happening in FAIR plan cities in this country will soon spread to the suburbs and even the rural areas unless we stop it here this morning. Every day more and more homeowners with good insurance records are being told that their policies are not being renewed and they must seek coverage under the FAIR plan where, of course, the rates are double and triple normal premiums. You can be certain that this will happen in your community whether you live in New York, Chicago, Los Angeles, or rural America.

If we do not stop this insurance overcharge right now, in a few years the only thing the insurance industry will want to insure against is floods on the Nevada desert.

I am deeply concerned about the report prepared by the General Accounting Office which suggests that FAIR plans are being used by the criminal element to burn down buildings and then to collect insurance. While there is evidence that arson for profit is occurring, the evidence also weighs heavily that it is taking place primarily in the private insurance market rather than in FAIR plan States.

It is strange to me that the General Accounting Office would not even ask the Federal Insurance Administration to comment on their report before it was published. It is also strange that this report was issued at almost the exact time that this legislation was being considered. I hope that this highly questionable report will not tarnish an otherwise good reputation of the General Accounting Office.

In conclusion, I want to ask the Members of the House not to look at FAIR plans as only a major city problem. If you think that is true, just ask your constituents about their insurance problems and then explain to them how this body had an opportunity to solve those problems but did not act.

In 1969, BILL MOORHEAD of Pennsylvania, who was then chairman of the Financial Institutions Subcommittee of the House Banking and Currency Committee, and I conducted hearings on the effects of the FAIR plans on the cities of America. During these hearings, we discovered that the first major exodus out of the cities of this country was due directly to redlining by the insurance companies—and do not ever forget that. And they are still redlining. In view of that fact, the people left the cities of America. The second exodus out of the major cities of America was avoided only because the grandparents who remained behind in their homes, in their old neighborhoods, were able to get coverage under the FAIR plans. What we must do is to make the FAIR plans more honest, more reasonable, so that your constituents and my constituents can be able to buy insurance, not at these exorbitant rates of four and five times the normal rates, but at reasonable rates through these plans.

I have enough faith in the Members of this House to know that they will not turn their backs on FAIR plan States, over 26 States, on millions and millions of homeowners who are being shanghaied by the insurance companies by paying these astronomical rates, and to put a few extra dollars into the pockets of the insurance companies of America who really have too damn much money.

Mr. Chairman, I urge my colleagues to vote down the Brown amendment and vote for the people of their districts.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise not in criticism of the General Accounting Office or in criticism of our insurance companies, nor even in criticism of the commissioners who may have written against this very sound bill. I think it is natural that they try to preserve their prerogatives. We have seen enough of that here in the House to understand exactly what they are doing; and without being too condemnatory we can understand it is part of human nature.

But what we have in the bill is something that is fair, something that is just. We do not need to impugn the motives of those who oppose it to say that we believe that in the United States the insurance risks will be shared equally by all in the State.

There is no need to try to suspect wrongdoing here. We are simply saying that the bill provides a more fair, a more just, and a more equitable situation. The bill is good as it stands.

I hope the amendment will be defeated.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in vigorous support of the Brown of Michigan amendment.

The Holtzman amendment, adopted by the House in the 94th Congress by a voice vote, was passed on the assurance that the Holtzman amendment would apply only to New York City and would have no impact on any other city or State. When we went to conference with the Senate, we found that those assurances were not quite accurate. There is no implication intended here, but we found that the Holtzman amendment would have a direct impact on ratemaking authority, which has traditionally and wisely been left to the States. The amendment is clearly, purely, and simply Federal intervention in a State matter.

Congress is once again being asked to solve a problem for New York City that can be resolved at the State and local level and should be resolved at the State and local level.

Please do not misunderstand. I understand the position of the gentlewoman from New York and I respect her for it. She is representing her district, but I do not think we should be forever passing special legislation for New York City, and that is what this amendment amounts to.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield at that point?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is well aware of course that FAIR plans operate on a statewide basis and are not limited to any particular city, so under no circumstances could any assurance have been made that only one city would be affected nor could it have been accepted by anyone.

Mr. WYLIE. I understand the operation of it.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. As the gentleman well knows, this provision in the bill in no way imposes any rate structure on a State. All the provision requires is that whatever rate is set by the State for insurance in the private market must apply as well in the FAIR plan. I would add that the entire riot reinsurance program is voluntary. If a State does not wish to participate, it does not have to establish a plan at all.

Mr. WYLIE. I respectfully disagree.

I would like to continue for just a moment with my statement, because I want to address that point.

The Congress of the United States passed the Federal Riot and Crime Reinsurance Act to encourage the States to establish FAIR plans to provide access to the insurance market for people in businesses that might fall victim of riots. That was the purpose of it. Most States, including my own State of Ohio, charge no more than 25 percent differential to those who cannot obtain insurance in the open market. New York State's FAIR plan has rates which are up to 4 times that of the general property insurance rates, above the rate which is charged for other areas of the State, and that is based on the casualty experience in riot and other crime areas.

The Holtzman amendment would require that such casualty experience not be treated as a special case, as it is in New York, and it would require that FAIR plans charge the same rates for innercity neighborhoods as for other areas. This would raise the rate for people in other low-risk areas, I submit.

But the worst impact to me of the Holtzman amendment is that it puts HUD in the insurance ratemaking business, a role traditionally left to the States.

I believe the insurance industry across the country will withdraw from the numerous state plans now in existence at the State level, including my own State of Ohio, if this amendment passes.

It is clear that New York City is a special problem for casualty insurance companies because of the experience the city had just recently, just last summer, with the power blackouts that originated in New York State. Lightning reportedly struck several different key power facilities in New York State at different times in the night and a subsequent series of human and/or equipment failures in New York State plunged New York City into darkness for an entire night. The police had orders not to shoot, and the word spread among the potential looters who then turned out en masse. New York State did not bring out the National Guard and crime continued throughout the night.

The Holtzman amendment would require that the insurance companies charge the same rates for properties in the path of the looters in New York City as are charged for those in the rest of New York State. I do not see why the Federal Government has to get involved in this parent/child problem in New York. Let New York City take its problems to Albany and leave the rest of the country alone.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. WYLIE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, it does not seem fair to me for New York City to expect the U.S. Congress to be continually acting as the city council for New York City, or to play the role of "in loco parentis" when New York State walks away from New York City's problems. I feel that New York State should do more than it has, and that New York City should accept its condition in life which includes parentage by New York State. Those two political levels should get together for their common good and stop coming to Congress for endless special treatment for New York City, especially when special treatment is going to be costly and perhaps economically destructive for my constituents and to those of most of the representatives in this House.

I have a letter, too, from a State insurance director from the State of Ohio and he is vigorously in opposition to the Holtzman plan.

I urge an aye vote for the Brown of Michigan amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I was very much interested in the gentlewoman from New York's response to the gentleman from Ohio when she said this amendment does not force the insurance upon anybody because the FAIR plans are voluntary. That is a fine position to take. It is, of course, true, but if the States who are subject to this legislation withdraw from the program there would not be any FAIR plans and this provision would not have any application to any State for there would be no program.

That is a fine response to the gentleman's question.

Mr. WYLIE. I agree with the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. Brown). I made the point that the State of Ohio might well if this amendment passes, just withdraw from the FAIR plan.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) seems to think that there is a very unique principle involved here. But, as we are all aware, the Federal Government routinely insists on conditions when it extends benefits—as it is doing in this case when it extends the benefit of the riot reinsurance program to the States. It certainly can expect something in return for that.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, what is the benefit from the Federal Government that these States have derived? The Federal Government has been the beneficiary under the FAIR program since its inception.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

(On request of Ms. HOLTZMAN, and by unanimous consent, Mr. WYLIE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. WYLIE. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. The gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) asked a question to which I will give him the following answer:

Riot reinsurance for States is backed by the Federal taxpayers. First, the Federal Insurance Administration has borrowing authority of up to $250 million to pay for riot losses. Second, the total exposure of the taxpayers of the United States is $500 billion for all the properties covered by riot insurance. Do you not think the taxpayers are entitled to something in return for that? I think the gentleman is incorrect when he suggests the Federal Government has no basis on which to impose conditions on participation in the riot reinsurance program.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, let us look at the facts. There has been a net gain in the Federal budget for each of the years under the riot reinsurance plans; the Federal Government has gotten for this reinsurance a net benefit, a plus, the budget books are here, you can look at them.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank both of you for your contributions.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman has again expired.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I just want to say a few words extemporaneously about the amendment and also about a situation in my city of Cleveland, Ohio. Last summer we had Select Committee on Aging hearings in the city—all of the areas of the city including an older community, an ethnic community, where many seniors live, including many widows who are trying to maintain their homes and who do not want to go into high-rise complexes. The No. 1 issue, to my surprise, on their minds was the fact that certain insurance companies after 20 and 30 years had canceled their policies arbitrarily. Then, of course, the seniors tried to receive the FAIR plan because naturally, they want to be protected. These were people who were from older residential neighborhoods which did not have disorders of any kind. Most of these people had never had a claim against an insurance company. They could not understand the redlining and unfairness of the companies. Under the FAIR plan in the great State of Ohio, which I also proudly represent, they found that the FAIR plan was much higher than what they had been paying in premiums beforehand. So, in many cases these elderly people could not afford insurance. I feel very, very strongly that this is a great disregard for our older Americans who have tried to maintain older communities, who have lived in these communities for many years. I think that what the solution found in the bill is fair. Why has the Federal Government stepped in? Because the State legislatures have done nothing about it, and it is about time we use and exercise our influence in that regard to protect people like the elderly who want to stay in their homes, to protect people who are of moderate to middle income who, unfortunately, have been redlined by insurance companies.

Therefore, I think that this amendment is very unfortunate, and I hope, for the sake of all the older Americans in our country, we defeat it soundly.

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of this amendment. As a member of the State senate, I was deeply involved in drafting the FAIR plan legislation in Ohio. We have had great success with it, and the issue today is whether we are going to impose Federal regulations on the decision of the State legislatures to deal with the problem as provided for in the FAIR plan law.

I would like to quote from a telegram I received from the Ohio Superintendent of Insurance, Mr. Harry Jump, and I quote:

> We would like to emphasize that the Ohio law already requires the Ohio FAIR plan to use the rates for basic property insurance used in the voluntary insurance market. In fact, since November 1977 the Ohio FAIR plan has stopped imposing condition charges on owner-occupied dwellings. Therefore, the rates for basic property insurance charged by the Ohio FAIR plan will be no more than, and will often be less than, the rate established for basic property insurance by insurance services offices.

Mr. Jump continues:

> Ohio does not have the problem addressed by Section 307(b) of H.R. 12433. We do not believe that Federal involvement is justified in the area of insurance to solve a problem of New York State. We repeat that Ohio does not have this problem.

Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to the gentlelady from Ohio.

Ms. OAKAR. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

As the gentleman knows, I respect the work that he does as a legislator and also as a member of the Select Committee on Aging, but I must tell him—and certainly this is no reflection on him—that that is not true. That is absolutely not true. If we are to believe the people who are the so-called recipients of the Ohio FAIR plan, the people in the communities will tell us that in Cleveland at least it is 40 to 60 percent more, and it is out of the market for them. So the moderate-income people such as the elderly cannot afford that, so I really take issue with that statement.

Mr. REGULA. As the gentlelady knows, I was at the hearings conducted in Cleveland. These are the facts as outlined by the superintendent of insurance in Ohio, saying in effect that Ohio is not now imposing extra charges.

I think the real issue is whether or not we are going to substitute ourselves for the New York State Legislature. We dealt with the problem in Ohio. The State of New York ought to deal with the problem in that State, and I do not think we should be legislating something for many States which in fact is directed solely toward the problem in New York State. It goes even to the issue of Federal versus State responsibility for insurance.

I think there is one other element in this and that is that if the States are not responsible, or at least if the legislatures are not taking responsibility and the departments of insurance likewise you get careless underwriting. I think we invite that with this kind of legislation.

The reason the Ohio plan has worked is that the insurance companies and the insurance departments have gone into areas and made a very sustained effort to reduce the losses and to reduce the risks; so, in effect, they are no longer required to impose a surcharge to provide insurance coverage in high-risk areas.

If we pass this legislation, if we take away the element of responsibility in New York State, there will no longer be the incentive, as we have had in Ohio, as I am sure there has been in other States, to make an effort to reduce the high-risk areas, because otherwise you are passing the losses along to those who are more careful and, in effect, not having the kind of administration in the underwriting programs that is so necessary for FAIR rates for everyone.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. REGULA. I yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, I want to compliment the gentleman for an excellent statement and for putting this issue in proper perspective, to my way of thinking, and also I want to compliment the gentleman for his part as a State senator in Ohio for taking a leadership role in making the Ohio FAIR plan possible.

I have a letter here from one of our insurance executives. He says that the cost burden and higher insurance risk faced by urban residents and property owners would be placed on the shoulders of the average taxpayer by an amendment such as the Holtzman amendment, if enacted into law.

From the gentleman's experience and knowledge, would the gentleman say that is a fair statement?

Mr. REGULA. Mr. Chairman, I think it would depend on how the legislatures in the respective States chose to handle the problem. In Ohio, rather than have a State subsidize the rate, losses were spread over the market. The real problem was to develop a careful program of underwriting.

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words. I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, it is my judgment that there is a very clear need for this provision. It has been well documented carefully by hearings and studies, ordered by this Congress. The history of this matter relatively recently is that the gentlewoman from New York did obtain passage of an amendment, the Holtzman amendment, in the House last year.

We went to conference with the Senate, which had no similar provision, and the outcome of that conference was that a study would be initiated and a report back would be made. That study resulted in the report entitled, "New Crisis in Urban America."

Let me emphasize that, "Insurance Crisis in Urban America," not in Urban New York State. In fact, 10 States of the United States have fair rate plan rates, exceeding those in the voluntary insurance market. Those are Connecticut, Delaware, Illinois, Iowa, Kansas, Minnesota, Missouri, Virginia, and Wisconsin, as well as New York State.

I say we should listen to that report and that this amendment is clearly not an intrusion upon the States' ratemaking prerogatives. They will not be unduly eroded by this approach.

First, this is a Federal program with considerable reinsurance risk and it is voluntary on the part of the States. Why should we not then have some ability to set some reasonable level of standards for the people in these areas who could not otherwise obtain insurance?

There are States which have parity, and if that is the case in Ohio and in other States, they have no problem. In other words, if they are charging the same rates, as my colleague on the committee, the gentleman from Ohio, alleges, then they are in no problem; they are in compliance with this amendment.

This is not a New York State problem. Ten States have it. And it is not a city problem. Upstate areas, as well as city areas, are a factor in this, and that is well documented in the report.

As a matter of fact, the amendment is supported by the National Rural Housing Coalition. We had testimony before the committee which indicated that a new practice is going on now, setting a limit on the value of houses which will qualify for insurance in the voluntary market, so anything under a $20,000 house automatically goes into the FAIR plan. In many areas, including the rural areas of upstate New York I represent, a lot of people live in safe, sanitary, decent houses costing less than $20,000, and they are being thrown into the FAIR plan and are now required to pay four and five times the usual amount just for basic fire insurance.

I have been accused of demagoguery for having said that this is redlining. If that is the case, I want to repeat my tendency. It is not the States that are redlining; this is the insurance companies who are making a determination that some properties will be insured in the voluntary market at certain rates while others are going to pay four and five times as much under the FAIR plans.

If that is not redlining, then I do not know what that word means. To me it simply means that in terms of insurance, people in ghetto areas and poor people in rural areas are being priced out of the insurance market.

Mr. Chairman, I ask my colleagues to defeat the Brown amendment and keep a reasonable standard so that people in the FAIR plan areas will be encouraged to own their own homes and will in fact be able to afford insurance on their own homes.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDINE. I would be pleased to yield to my colleague, the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The gentleman from New York (Mr. LUNDINE) knows that if there has been any redlining, if there has been a surcharging of all the high-risk premiums, it has been done under the authority and direction of the particular State involved, primarily in this case New York; it has not been done by the insurance companies.

The gentleman knows that insurance companies do not set the rates; the rates are set by the insurance commissioner.

How much time has the gentleman from New York (Mr. LUNDINE) and the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. HOLTZMAN) spent with their New York Legislature to get them to do what the Holtzman amendment does? Not a bit, I will bet.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. LUNDINE) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. LUNDINE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Chairman, it is true that the States set the rates, but it is also true that the insurance companies make the determinations as to which properties are going to fall under the FAIR plan and which properties are going to fall without that plan and go in the voluntary market.

There are these 10 States—not 1 but 10 States—which have allowed for higher rates in those particular areas where the insurance companies have determined that they are going to throw these people into a poor people's category. Those poor people then have to pay a higher premium, and the result of that is, in my judgment, redlining.

Mr. Chairman, I ask that the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan be defeated.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDINE. I yield to the gentlewoman from New York.

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, I think it is important to note that the gentleman from New York (Mr. LUNDINE) is absolutely correct when he says redlining is undertaken by insurance companies. Indeed it is very interesting to note that the attorney who now represents and writes letters on behalf of the American Insurance Association was once a Federal Insurance Administrator, and he put out a report called "Full Insurance Availability," the whole first part of which deals with the fact of redlining. In that report he talked about the stigma attached to redlining and redlining as it relates to insurance companies.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. LUNDINE) has again expired.

(On request of Mr. BROWN of Michigan, and by unanimous consent, Mr. LUNDINE was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDINE. I yield to the gentleman from Michigan.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Once again, the State insurance commissioner, under authority of the State legislature, can maintain control over the insurance companies, can bring them in, and can control and supervise the operation of the whole insurance industry in a State. The gentleman knows that. So the fault once again lies with the State, and if there are other States besides New York that have a problem, it is a State problem within those States.

If there is redlining being done, it is being done by the State, not by the Federal Government, and we should not impose and assume that every State is redlining and, therefore, adopt the Holtzman amendment, which in effect accuses them all of redlining, because it is not true.

Mr. LUNDINE. Mr. Chairman, if I may reclaim my time just briefly, I would like to say that this is a problem that should be cured at the State level. Unfortunately, many of them have not done so. The enormous burden of maybe $2 additional premium on other people, apparently, has not. But the fact is that there is $500 billion of Federal reinsurance, and we have not only the right but, I maintain, the responsibility to see that it is distributed in an equitable fashion.

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDINE. I yield to the gentleman from Maryland.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. LUNDINE) has expired.

(On request of Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland and by unanimous consent, Mr. LUNDINE was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman in the well is absolutely right. In my own State of Maryland there was an attempt made to increase the FAIR plan rates by 35 percent. Fortunately, our State Insurance Commissioner recognized that this was another attempt to shaft the poor, who are the victims of redlining, by the insurance companies; and he denied the request.

What happened was that the insurance industry, with its battery of lawyers, went into court and got our insurance commissioner overruled, and the court has sanctioned this insidious increase against the poor and the senior citizens in my community.

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman is absolutely right.

Mr. LUNDINE. That is a good reason why the Federal Government should take this action, which does not set rates but simply sets a standard which will mean there is going to be fair premiums.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LUNDINE. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, would the gentleman agree that the original concept of this FAIR plan was to have the States regulated?

Mr. LUNDINE. Yes. And I would also say that the understanding in 1968 and the clear congressional intent was that the rates being paid in these areas would be similar to those paid throughout the voluntary market.

Mr. WYLIE. If the gentleman agrees that the original plan was to be regulated by the various States—and it clearly was—then why is this not properly a problem for the New York State General Assembly rather than a problem for the U.S. Congress?

Mr. LUNDINE. Because after 10 years of experience with a Federal program, we found out that not only in New York but other States are charging higher rates.

The intent of Congress is being thwarted, and now it is time to take action.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that all debate on this amendment and all amendments thereto close at 5 minutes to 12.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Members standing at the time the unanimous-consent request was agreed to will each be recognized for approximately 1 minute.

(By unanimous consent, Messrs. ASHLEY, MITCHELL of Maryland, REUSS, and ANNUNZIO yielded their time to Ms. HOLTZMAN.)

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. HOLTZMAN).

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, I would like to begin by commending the subcommittee and the Committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs for their recognition of the serious problem of redlining across the United States and for their willingness to act on it.

I think the facts of redlining are indisputable. It has been documented in HUD reports. It has been documented in other reports through the Nation—in Michigan, in Illinois, in New York. Redlining is often done by zip code, and it often has a racial component.

Mr. Chairman, redlining means the doom of urban areas. It means widespread building abandonment and neighborhood deterioration. It means that people cannot get mortgages to rebuild properties, to improve properties, or to purchase properties.

In 1978 the Federal Government recognized that redlining was a serious problem; and in 1968 the Federal Government recognized that States, on their own, were unable to solve the problem. Consequently, the Federal Government set up through the riot reinsurance program an incentive for States to create FAIR plans to assure that everyone had access to insurance.

The Congress stated clearly that the purpose of the 1968 act was to make insurance available at "reasonable cost"—and I am quoting directly from the statute.

Mr. Chairman, section 307(b) of this act carries out the 1968 congressional intent of reasonable rates. All that it says is that no one can price-gouge victims of redlining. It is a very simple principle. It is a matter of equity. After all what right is there for an insurance company to arbitrarily stigmatize anybody by saying, "We will not give you property insurance because we do not like your zip code" or "We do not like your race"?

Enactment of section 307(b) is also an absolute prerequisite to an effective urban policy. Insurance has been called the cornerstone of credit, and if it is not available, mortgage financing is unobtainable and people cannot buy, improve, or expand homes or businesses. In short, without passage of 307(b), the commitment of billions of dollars in funding and mortgage financing to our urban areas will be meaningless.

Mr. Chairman, let me say that the arguments that have been raised time and time again against this proposal are baseless and inaccurate. First this is not an amendment that affects New York State alone. There are 10 States in this country that have insurance rates that are higher in FAIR plans than in the private market. Indeed, the trend is clearly toward higher FAIR plan rates nationwide: in 1975 there were only three States which had FAIR plan rates higher than the private market; now there are 10 States. Furthermore, within the last year increases were sought in FAIR plans in seven States. In one of those States, Illinois, an increase of 157 percent was requested on certain properties.

Second, nothing in this provision intrudes on the States prerogative to set insurance rates. All that 307(b) says is whatever rates the States set for property insurance in the private market, must apply in the FAIR plan as well. States continue to be able to set whatever rates they believe are justified.

Third, this is not an unwarranted imposition on a purely State program. As I emphasized earlier, the riot reinsurance program is a Federal program and the establishment of a State-administered FAIR plan is a condition of eligibility for Federal benefits.

Mr. Chairman, if anyone wants to say there is no Federal regulation of FAIR plans, I would just like to draw his attention to the present statute, which has several pages of conditions that are imposed by the Federal Government with respect to FAIR plans, including annual statements, inspections and numerous other requirements.

Fourth, this provision will not result in signficant cost increases in the private insurance market. In 9 of the 10 States with FAIR plan rates in excess of the private market, it will cost the average policyholder only 25 cents per year to make FAIR plan rates the same as those in the conventional market. In New York, private rates will rise about $3 if 307(b) is enacted, but FAIR plan premiums will be reduced by about $160 on the average dwelling.

Fifth, this is not a problem the States can solve themselves. This trend is against it, as I have already noted. Furthermore, even in cases where State insurance commissioners have rejected FAIR plan increases, the industry has often gone to court to reverse the State determination. In Maryland, for example, a circuit court recently overruled the denial of a 35-percent increase, claiming nothing in Federal or State law prohibited such exorbitant rates. In Massachusetts, an industry court appeal of the State insurance commissioner's denial of a 50-percent increase is pending. If the House does not act to pass my legislation today, it will be a clear signal to the courts that there is no Federal prohibition against the exploitation of innocent victims of redlining forced into the FAIR plans.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. HOLTZMAN) has expired.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from California (Mr. LAGOMARSINO).

Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Chairman, I take this time to bring to the attention of the House the fact that the insurance commissioner of the State of California, who, I think, has done a very excellent job in administering the FAIR program, is in strong opposition to the provision that is in the bill and therefore supports the Brown amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to read his letter into the RECORD at this point.

He says the following:

DEPARTMENT OF INSURANCE,
Los Angeles, Calif., June 21, 1978.

Re: H.R. 12433, Housing and Community Development Amendments for 1978.

Hon. ROBERT LAGOMARSINO,
House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR CONGRESSMAN LAGOMARSINO: It is my understanding that this bill is scheduled for a vote in the House of Representatives, possibly as early as June 23. The bill contains a provision known as the "Holtzman amendment". That amendment relates to "FAIR Plans" and would severely limit the right of an individual state to regulate the rates for risks in the "FAIR Plan".

The mix of risks which find their way into FAIR Plans varies considerably from state to state. In California, a significant number of properties are in the Plan because of the brush fire hazard and the almost unlimited dollar loss which might be incurred in a conflagration. Other properties in the Plan are commercial and industrial risks in the inner city, residential properties in the inner city, and low-valued properties not necessarily in the inner city but in communities which are designated for FAIR Plan eligibility. The California FAIR Plan does not charge a rate higher than the advisory rate set by the largest state-licensed rating organization. It might be said that the California Plan is in full compliance with the proposed Holtzman amendment.

There is no present plan to change the manner in which California FAIR Plan risks are rated. However, because of the unusual mix of business in our Plan, I can envision conditions which might cause the State Legislature to provide for surcharges on one or more of the classes of business in the Plan. It is my belief that the State Legislature is in a far better position to make that determination than is the Congress. For that reason, I would urge that you vote to eliminate the Holtzman amendment from H.R. 12433 when the bill comes before you.

It is my understanding that the Justice Department is opposed to the amendment and that the Office of Management and Budget is not supportive of the amendment. Having served for more than three years as Commissioner and for two years earlier as Chief Deputy Commissioner, it is my firm conviction that the Holtzman amendment is not consistent with the best interests of Californians.

Sincerely,

WESLEY J. KINDER,
Insurance Commissioner.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from New York (Mr. GARCIA).

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, I yield 10 seconds to the gentlewoman from New York (Ms. HOLTZMAN).

Ms. HOLTZMAN. Mr. Chairman, I just want to make the point that passage of the Brown amendment would waste Federal taxpayers' dollars because these exorbitant FAIR plan rates are often paid for under the section 8 housing program.

If one is against price gouging of redlining victims and against wasting Federal tax dollars, one is against the Brown amendment.

Mr. GARCIA. Mr. Chairman, first I would like to associate myself with the statements made by the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANNUNZIO). I think he made a strong and important statement.

I would like to add one thing. If we check our own States, the fact of the matter is that there is frequently a relationship between superintendents of insurance in the various States and the insurance industry. One year they are superintendents of insurance, and the next year they are with the industry. If Members will check their own States, they will find that to be so, and that makes it virtually impossible for the consumers, in the long run, to actually get the value that they are entitled to when they insure their homes.

Mr. Chairman, I want to place that on the record, and ask each Member of the House to check the superintendents of insurance, in their respective States, over the last 20 years, and find out how much time they have spent with insurance companies.

I would like to commend my colleagues on the Subcommittee on Housing, and on the full committee on Banking, Finance, and Urban Affairs as well, for the work they have done on this year's Community Development Act. The bill, with some exceptions, is a good bill and I am proud that I have been able to be part of the process.

Over the past few weeks, I reviewed the amendments which will be offered today. Needless to say, I am concerned that some of these amendments will only serve to lessen the impact of the commitment which has been made time and time again—to increase access to decent living places for those who are unable to afford them. A young author recently said, when asked about the struggles she experienced before writing a bestseller, "Poverty is not a self-discipline." I am sure that we here today do not want to make it that either.

I would like to point out some of the successes of the Community Development Act rather than focusing on its failures. Part of my optimism about our community development program grows from the people that I know who have struggled for and won the battles to provide safe, decent, and affordable housing in my district.

It is people like Ramon Rueda of the People's Development Corp. who has organized a group of people on Washington Avenue to renovate and reconstruct not only the housing in the community, but the hopes and spirits of the community as well.

It is people like Hip Kourakos and Aureo Cardona who have sponsored innovative housing like Borinquen Plaza, which has not only meant new housing and jobs for the communtiy, but also a new philosophy—a workable philosophy—in which people participate in the planning, construction, and management of their homes.

It is people like Paul Muscillo of Neighborhood Engaged, Inc., an antipoverty agency, who not only responds to the physical needs of the community, but also the more elusive and equally important community spirit.

It is people like John Patterson of the South Bronx Overall Economic Development Corp. who struggle to attract industry and jobs to our district when others have given up on the idea. These are only a few examples of the kind of progress that feeds my hope and optimism.

I would also like to commend my New York colleague, STAN LUNDINE, my chairman in the Hispanic Caucus, ED ROYBAL, the esteemed chairman of the Select Committee on the Aging, Congressman CLAUDE PEPPER, and all those others who worked so diligently to develop and support title V of this bill, which, for the first time, will provide a viable alternative to nursing homes for our older citizens through the consolidation of section 202 housing programs, public housing programs, and congregate services under the umbrella of a single Federal agency.

The psychological and physical impact of having little or no control over how they live, as all aware and caring people know, a condemnation to a life without personal dignity for our senior citizens. We know all too well, as many of those who testified before the Select Committee on the Aging reported, that this loss of self-esteem and self-control is often a contributing factor to the shorened lifespans of the aged in nursing homes and other long-term care facilities.

Title V will enormously enhance and broaden the scope of the congregate housing services described in the National Housing Act of 1970, and for that every American who will potentially avail themselves of those services in the years ahead must be grateful.

In a historic press conference yesterday, members of the Congressional Hispanic Caucus and members of the Congressional Black Caucus came together for the first time to show their support of the struggle of Native Americans to maintain their sovereignty and rights. Their statement ended with the line "We insist on the same respect for Native American dignity and sovereignty that we ask for all Americans, no matter what their race or national origin." I add now "or age." The congregate housing component of this bill will help immeasurably in assuring their individual sovereignty and dignity to America's older citizens.

The Community Development Act is just a part of the solution of the giant puzzle which is the urban problem. It is not the panacea for all urban ills, but it is an important ingredient. We must be sure not to dilute its intent, but we must continue to work and strengthen its goals.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Chairman, to me this issue has nothing at all to do with redlining. If this amendment stays in the bill, it is my judgment that the cost of casualty insurance will surely rise, or Federal subsidies will have to be instituted. Then, the Federal Government will really be in the insurance ratemaking business. Ten States have higher rates for FAIR plans. I imagine the thought here is that, "Misery loves company, let us give Ohio some of the misery."

I say no thanks, and vote for the Brown amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, the kinds of arguments that are used to oppose my amendment are almost incredible. The last statement by the gentlewoman from New York that the Federal Government would have to pay the higher premium costs under section 8 programs is totally inconsistent with her great concern expressed earlier when she pleaded for the poor who would have to pay the premiums. Either the Federal Government pays the premiums or the poor do; she cannot have it both ways.

The basic question is, shall we adopt a Federal plan for the pricing of insurance policies when that authority has always been traditionally, fundamentally, and should continue to be, a function of the States? That is the issue. The answer is "no" and, therefore, you should vote "yes" on my amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

RECORDED VOTE

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was ordered.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—ayes 119, noes 185, not voting 128, as follows:

The Clerk announced the following pairs:

On this vote:

Mr. Teague for, with Mr. Phillip Burton against.

Mr. Nichols for, with Mr. Jenrette against.

Mr. Mottl for, with Mr. Richmond against.

Mr. Lent for, with Mr. Addabbo against.

Mr. VOLKMER changed his vote from "no" to "aye."

So the amendment was rejected.

The result of the vote was announced as above recorded.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other amendments to title III? If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read title IV.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I did have a technical amendment to title III.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, the parliamentary situation is that we have to return to title III, is that not correct, by unanimous consent?

The CHAIRMAN. That is correct.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to title III to offer this technical amendment.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I will not object to the gentleman's unanimous-consent request to return to title III for the gentleman's amendment, so long as title III remains open.

Mr. ASHLEY. Well, wait a minute, Mr. Chairman. The gentleman is reserving the right to object. I would like to know what the gentleman has in mind.

My amendment is entirely technical in nature and merely brings the bill into compliance with the Budget Act. This is the same as other conforming amendments I have offered. I was merely talking to the staff when I should have been listening to the Chair. It is not a fair trade, I will say. I am perfectly open about what I am doing. What does the gentleman from Michigan have in mind by keeping title III open?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, continuing my reservation to object, I think the gentleman was not quite ready when the Chair moved on to title IV.

Mr. ASHLEY. I have acknowledged that.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I think others have amendments that were caught similarly. I would think, that being the case, the gentleman would be willing to return to title III and let those who were similarly situated have the same opportunity.

Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

First, the Chair will inquire, does the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHLEY) continue to make his unanimous-consent request?

Mr. ASHLEY. Yes, Mr. Chairman, and I will renew my request.

Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent to return to title III for the purposes of offering a technical amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

Mr. GAMMAGE. Mr. Chairman, reserving the right to object, as the gentleman across the aisle, the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN), pointed out a moment ago, there were some other Members also who were not prepared to move from title III. I am one of those Members. I have an amendment to title III, and I did not have an opportunity to offer it because of this hasty move.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I withdraw my unanimous-consent request.

The CHAIRMAN. The gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHLEY) withdraws his unanimous-consent request, and the Clerk will proceed to read title IV.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE IV—RURAL HOUSING

AUTHORIZATIONS

SEC. 401. (a) Section 513 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended—

(1) by striking out "September 30, 1978" in clauses (b) and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979";

(2) by striking out "not to exceed $105,000,000" in clauses (b) and (c) and inserting in lieu thereof "$150,000,000" in clause (b) and "$115,000,000" in clause (c); and

(3) by striking out clause (d) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "(d) not to exceed $1,000,000 for research and study programs pursuant to subsections (b), (c), and (d) of section 506 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979;".

(b) Section 514 of such Act is amended by striking out "$25,000,000" in subsection (d) and inserting in lieu thereof "$38,000,00 (subject to approval in an appropriation Act)".

(c) Section 515 (b)(5) of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979".

(d) Section 517(a)(1) of such Act is amended by striking out "September 30, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979".

(e) Section 523(f) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "October 1, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "October 1, 1979";

(2) by striking out "September 30, 1978" and inserting in lieu thereof "September 30, 1979"; and

(3) by striking out "$10,000,000" and inserting in lieu thereof "$16,500,000".

(f) Section 525(c) of such Act is amended by inserting after the first sentence the following new sentence: "There are also authorized to be appropriated for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, not to exceed $5,000,000 for the purposes of subsection (a) and not to exceed $5,000,000 for the purposes of subsection (b).".

RURAL HOUSING RESEARCH

SEC. 402. (a) Subsections (b) and (c) of section 506 of the Housing Act of 1949 are amended to read as follows:

"(b) The Secretary is further authorized and directed to conduct research, technical studies, and demonstrations relating to the mission and programs of the Farmers Home Administration and the national housing goals defined in section 2 of this Act. In connection with such activities, the Secretary shall seek to promote the construction of adequate farm and other rural housing, with particular attention to the housing needs of the elderly, handicapped, migrant and seasonal farmworkers, Indians, and other identifiable groups with special needs. The Secretary shall conduct such activities for the purpose of stimulating construction; improving the architectural design and utility of dwellings and buildings; and utilizing new and native materials, economies in materials and construction methods, and new methods of production, energy conservation, distribution, assembly, and construction. In addition, the Secretary shall conduct such activities for the purpose of reducing the cost of such dwellings and buildings and adapting and developing fixtures and appurtenances for more efficient and economical farm and other rural housing use.

"(c) The Secretary is further authorized to carry out a program of research, study, and analysis of rural housing in the United States for the purpose of developing data and other information on—

"(1) the adequacy of existing rural housing;

"(2) the nature and extent of current and prospective needs for rural housing, including needs for financing, subsidies, improved design, utility, comfort, and the best methods of meeting such needs;

"(3) the adequacy of the rural housing stock to meet the special needs of the elderly, the handicapped, farmworkers, and Indians and the best methods of meeting such needs;

"(4) problems faced by rural people, including farmers, eligible under section 501 for purchasing, constructing, improving, altering, repairing, and replacing their housing;

"(5) rural growth patterns and the interrelation of rural housing problems and the problems of housing in urban and suburban areas;

"(6) the status of community facilities and services in rural areas, problems resulting from inadequate facilities and services, and recommendations to alleviate such problems; and

"(7) any other matters relating to the provision of adequate rural housing and related community facilities."

(b) Section 506 of such Act is amended by adding the following new subsection at the end thereof:

"(f)(1) The Secretary shall conduct a study of housing which is available for migrant and settled farmworkers. In conducting such study, the Secretary shall—

"(A) determine the location, number, quality, and condition of housing units which are available to such farmworkers and the cost assessed such farmworkers for occupying such units;

"(B) recommend legislative, administrative, and other action (including the need for new authority for such action) which may be taken for the purpose of improving both the availability and the condition of such housing units; and

"(C) determine the possible roles which individual farmworkers, farmworker associations, individual farmers, farmer associations, and public and private nonprofit agencies can perform in improving the housing conditions of farmworkers.

"(2) The Secretary shall transmit the results of the study described in paragraph (1) to each House of the Congress within one year after the date of the enactment of this subsection."

NOTIFICATION REQUIREMENT

SEC. 403. Section 510 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by redesignating paragraph (i) as paragraph (j) and by inserting after paragraph (h) the following new paragraph:

"(i) provide, and shall provide, to any applicant which has been denied assistance under this title adequate written notice of the reasons for which such assistance was denied; and".

RURAL RENTAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 404. (a) Section 521(a)(2)(A) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting after "rental" the second time such term appears in the first sentence the following: ", congregate, or cooperative".

(b) Section 521(a)(2)(A)(i) of such Act is amended by inserting "or by a loan under section 514," immediately after "section 515 for elderly or handicapped housing".

STUDY OF PROBLEMS CAUSED BY REMOTE CLAIMS

SEC. 405. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to in this section as "Secretary") shall make a detailed study of the problems associated with obtaining title insurance by persons in rural areas with respect to real property encumbered by remote claims or other remote encumbrances which prevent such persons from receiving the full benefit of the use of such property, including the benefit assistance provided under this title. The Secretary shall, in making such study, consider and develop findings and conclusions with respect to—

(1) the extent of such problems as they pertain to the lawful rights of such persons;

(2) the location and amount of land affected by such problems;

(3) the nature, extent, and effectiveness of remedies to such problems presently available, or proposed, under State law;

(4) the potential impact (with respect to existing Federal, State, and local laws) of such remote claims and encumbrances and of any reasonable remedies determined necessary for resolving the problems created for persons by such remote claims or encumbrances;

(5) the liability and losses which might accrue to the Federal Government as a result of each of the remedies considered in the study conducted under this section; and

(6) other issues which the Secretary determines shall be considered; after consulting with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(b) The Secretary shall, no later than one year after the date of the enactment of this Act, transmit a report to each House of the Congress. Such report shall contain the findings and conclusions of the Secretary with respect to the study made under this section. In addition such report will include—

(1) recommendations for Federal legislative actions necessary to implement reasonable remedies to the problems studied under this section; and

(2) recommendations for legislative actions which may be undertaken by State and local governments for the purposes of providing such remedies.

ASSISTANCE TO PERSONS RECEIVING LOANS TO PROVIDE OCCUPANT-OWNED, RENTAL, AND COOPERATIVE HOUSING

SEC. 406. (a) Section 521(a)(1) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended—

(1) by inserting "(A)" after "SEC. 521. (a) (1)";

(2) by striking out everything in the first sentence after "one-eighth of 1 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof a period; and

(3) by inserting the following at the end thereof:

"(B) From the interest rate so determined, the Secretary may provide the borrower with assistance in the form of credits so as to reduce the effective interest rate to a rate not less than 1 per centum per annum for such periods of time as the Secretary may determine for applicants described in subparagraph (A) if without such assistance such applicants could not afford the dwelling or make payments on the indebtedness of the rental or cooperative housing.

"(C) For persons of low income under section 502 or 517(a) whom the Secretary determines are unable to afford a dwelling with the assistance provided under subparagraph (B) the Secretary may provide additional assistance, pursuant to amounts approved in appropriation Acts and for such periods of time as the Secretary may determine, which may be in an amount not to exceed the difference between (i) the amount determined by the Secretary to be necessary to pay the principal indebtedness, interest, taxes, insurance, utilities, and maintenance, and (ii) 25 per centum of the income of such applicant.

"(D) With respect to borrowers under section 502 or 517(a) who have received assistance under subparagraph (B) or (C), the Secretary shall provide for the recapture of all or a portion of such assistance rendered upon the disposition or nonoccupancy of the property by the borrower. In providing for such recapture, the Secretary shall make provisions to provide incentives for the borrower to maintain the property in a marketable condition, and the Secretary in appropriate cases may make provision for the borrower to receive from the sales proceeds a relocation allowance. Notwithstanding any other provision of law, any such assistance whenever rendered shall constiute a debt secured by the security instruments given by the borrower to the Secretary to the extent that the Secretary may provide for recapture of such assistance.

"(E) The assistance rendered to any borrower under subparagraphs (B) and (C) shall not be considered to be income or resources for any purpose under any Federal or State laws including, but not limited to, laws relating to welfare and public assistance programs.

"(F) Loans subject to the interest rates and assistance provided under this paragraph (1) may be made only when the Secretary determines the needs of the applicant for necessary housing cannot be met with financial assistance from other sources including assistance under section 235 or 236 of the National Housing Act.

"(G) Interest on loans under section 502 or 517(a) to victims of a natural disaster shall not exceed the rate which would be applicable to such loans under section 502 without regard to this section.".

(b) Section 517(j) of such Act is amended by striking out "(2)" in paragraph (4).

Mr. ASHLEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title IV be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 40, strike out the quotation mark at the end of line 7 and insert the following after line 7:

"(g)(1) In order to assist in reducing deaths caused by unsanitary water and waste disposal systems in rural areas, the Secretary shall conduct a study for the purposes of determining—

"(A) the approximate number of rural housing units without access to sanitary waste disposal facilities and potable water or without access to either sanitary waste disposal facilities or potable water; and

"(B) the cost of implementing an emergency program to provide sanitary waste disposal facilities and potable water supplies for such housing units within a two-year period.

"(2) The Secretary shall, no later than 6 months after the date of enactment of this subsection, transmit a report to both Houses of the Congress containing the findings, conclusions, and recommendations of the Secretary with respect to the study conducted pursuant to this subsection."

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

Mr. AuCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining committee amendments to title IV be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Oregon?

There was no objection.

The remaining committee amendments to title IV are as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 43, line 15, after "(B)", insert the following: "and when the Secretary determines that assisted rental housing programs (as authorized under this title, the National Housing Act, and the United States Housing Act of 1937) would be unsuitable in the area in which such persons reside."

Page 44, line 5, strike out ", and" and all that follows through "allowance" on line 7.

Page 44, line 13, strike out "The" and insert in lieu thereof "Except for Federal or State laws relating to taxation, the".

Page 44, lines 22 and 23, strike out "section 235 or 236 of the National Housing Act." and insert in lieu thereof "the National Housing Act and the United States Housing Act of 1937.".

Page 45, line 2, strike out the quotation mark and the last period and insert the following after line 2:

"(H) The aggregate principal amount of loans made to borrowers receiving assistance pursuant to subparagraph (C) shall not exceed $440,000,000."

The committee amendments were agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there any other amendments to title IV?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE V—CONGREGATE SERVICES

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 501. This title may be cited as the "Congregate Housing Services Act of 1978".

FINDINGS

SEC. 502. The Congress finds that—

(1) congregate housing, supplemented by supportive services, offers a proven and cost-effective means of enabling temporarily disabled or handicapped elderly and handicapped individuals to maintain their dignity and independence and to avoid costly and unnecessary institutionalization;

(2) a large and growing number of residents of public housing face premature and unnecessary institutionalization because of deficiencies in the availability, adequacy, coordination, or delivery of the supportive services required for the successful development of adequate numbers of congregate public housing units; and

(3) supplemental supportive services, available on a continuing basis, are essential to a viable congregate housing program.

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 503. For purposes of this title—

(1) the term "congregate housing" means (A) low-rent housing which, as of January 1, 1979, was built or under construction, with which there is connected a central dining facility where wholesome and economical meals can be served to such occupants; or (B) low-rent housing constructed after, but not under construction prior to, January 1, 1979, (i) in which some or all of the dwelling units do not have kitchen facilities, and (ii) connected with which there is a central dining facility to provide wholesome and economical meals for such occupants;

(2) the term "congregate services programs" means programs to be undertaken by a public housing agency to provide assistance, including personal assistance and nutritional meals, to eligible project residents who, with such assistance, can remain independent and avoid unnecessary institutionalization;

(3) the term "elderly" means sixty-two years of age or over;

(4) the term "eligible project resident" means handicapped elderly individuals, nonelderly handicapped individuals, or temporarily disabled elderly individuals, who are residents of congregate housing projects administered by public housing agencies;

(5) the term "handicapped" means an impairment which (A) is expected to be of long-continued and indefinite duration, (B) substantially impedes an individual's ability to live independently, and (C) is of such a nature that such ability could be improved by more suitable housing conditions; such impairment may include a functional disability or frailty which is a normal consequence of the human aging process;

(6) the term "personal assistance" means service provided under this title which may include, but is not limited to, aid given to eligible project residents in grooming, dressing, and other activities which maintain personal appearance and hygiene;

(7) the term "professional assessment committee" means a group of at least three persons appointed by a local public housing agency and shall include qualified medical professionals and other persons professionally competent to appraise the functional abilities of elderly or permanently disabled adult persons, or both, in relation to the performance of the normal tasks of daily living; and

(8) the term "temporarily disabled" means an impairment which (A) is expected to be of no more than six months' duration, (B) substantially impedes an individual's ability to live independently, and (C) is of such a nature that such ability could be improved by more suitable housing conditions.

AUTHORIZATION TO ENTER INTO CONTRACTS

SEC. 504. The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to enter into contracts with local public housing agencies under the United States Housing Act of 1937 (hereinafter referred to as "public housing agencies") utilizing sums appropriated under this title, to provide congregate services programs for eligible project residents in order to promote and encourage maximum independence within a home environment for such households capable of self-care with appropriate supportive congregate services. Each contract between the Secretary and a public housing agency shall be for a term of not less than three years or more than five years and shall be renewable at the expiration of such term.

CONGREGATE SERVICES PROGRAM

SEC. 505. (a) Congregate services programs assisted under this title must include full meal service adequate to meet nutritional needs, and may also include housekeeping aid, personal assistance, and other services essential for maintaining independent living.

(b) No services funded under this title may duplicate services which are already affordable, accessible, and sufficiently available on a long-term basis to eligible project residents under programs administered by or receiving appropriations through any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Federal Government or any other public or private department, agency, or organization.

(c) A public housing agency applying for assistance shall consult with the Area Agency on Aging (or, where no Area Agency on Aging exists, with the appropriate State agency under the Older Americans Act of 1965) in determining the means of providing services under this title and in identifying alternative available sources of funding for such services.

(d) Prior to the submission of a final application for either new or renewed funding under this title, a public housing agency shall present a copy of a proposed application to the Area Agency on Aging (or, where no Area Agency on Aging exists, to the appropriate State agency under the Older Americans Act of 1965) for review and comment. The public housing agency shall consider such review and comment in the development of its final application for either new or renewed funding under this title.

(e)(1) When nonelderly handicapped individuals are included among the eligible project residents, the public housing agency shall consult with the appropriate local agency, if any, designated by applicable State law as having responsibility for the development, provision, or identification of social services to permanently disabled adult individuals, for the purpose of determining the means of providing services under this title and of identifying alternative available sources of funding for such services.

(2) Such public housing agency shall also, prior to the submission of a final application for either new or renewed funding under this title, present a copy of the proposed application to such appropriate local agency for review and comment. The public housing agency shall consider such review and comment in the development of its final application for either new or renewed funding under this title.

(f) Any public housing agency receiving assistance under this title may provide congregate services directly to eligible project residents or may, by contract or lease, provide such services through other appropriate agencies or providers.

(g) Public housing agencies receiving assistance for congregate services programs under this title shall be required to maintain the same dollar amount of annual contribution which they were making, if any, in support of the provision of services eligible for assistance under this title before the date of the submission of the application for such assistance unless the Secretary determines that the waiver of this requirement is necessary for the maintenance of adequate levels of services to eligible project residents. If any contract or lease entered into by a public housing agency pursuant to subsection (f) of this section provides for adjustments in payments for services to reflect changes in the cost of living, then the amount of annual contribution required to be maintained by such public agency under the preceding sentence shall be readjusted in the same manner.

(h) Each public housing agency shall establish fees for meal service and other appropriate services provided to eligible project residents. These fees shall be reasonable, may not exceed the cost of providing the service, and shall be calculated on a sliding scale related to income which permits the provision of services to such residents who cannot afford meal and service fees. When meal services are provided to other project residents, fees shall be reasonable and may not exceed the cost of providing the meal service.

(i) The Secretary shall establish standards for the provision of services under this title, and, in developing such service standards, the Secretary shall consult with the Secretary of the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare and with appropriate organizations representing the elderly and handicapped, as determined by the Secretary.

ELIGIBILITY AND SELECTION

SEC. 506. (a) The identification of eligible project residents who may participate in a congregate services program assisted under this title, and the designation of the services appropriate to their individual functional abilities and needs, shall be made by a professional assessment committee utilizing procedures which insure that the process of determining eligibility of individuals for services under this title shall accord such individuals fair treatment and due process.

(b) Other residents may participate in a congregate meal service program assisted under this title if the local public housing agency determines that the participation of these individuals will not adversely affect the cost-effectiveness or operation of the program.

APPLICATION PROCEDURES

SEC. 507. (a) An application for assistance under this title shall include—

(1) a plan specifying the types and priorities of the basic services the public housing agency proposes to provide during the term of the contract; such plan must be related to the needs and characteristics of the eligible project residents and, to the maximum extent practicable, provide for the changing needs and characteristics of all project residents; such plan shall be determined after consultation with eligible project residents with the professional assessment committee;

(2) a list of the names and professional qualifications of the members of the professional assessment committee;

(3) the fee schedule established pursuant to section 505(h) of this title; and

(4) a statement affirming (A) that the public housing agency has followed the consultation procedures required in subsections (c), (d), and (e) of section 505, and (B) that such application complies with subsection (b) of such section.

(b) The Secretary shall establish appropriate deadlines for each fiscal year for the submission of applications for funding under this title and shall notify any public housing agency applying for assistance under this title of acceptance or rejection of its application within ninety days of such submission.

(c) Within twelve months prior to the submission of an application for renewed funding under this title, each public housing agency shall review the performance, appropriateness, and fee schedules of its congregate services program with eligible project residents and with the professional assessment committee. The results of such review shall be included in any application for renewal and shall be considered in the development of the application for renewal by the public housing agency and in its evaluation by the Secretary.

EVALUATION OF APPLICATIONS AND PROGRAMS

SEC. 508. (a) In evaluating applications for assistance under this title, the Secretary shall consider—

(1) the types and priorities of the basic services proposed to be provided, and the relationship of such proposal to the needs and characteristics of the eligible residents of the projects where the services are to be provided;

(2) how quickly services will be established following approval of the application;

(3) the degree to which local social services are adequate for the purpose of assisting eligible project residents to maintain independent living and avoid unnecessary institutionalization;

(4) the professional qualifications of the members of the professional assessment committee; and

(5) the reasonableness of fee schedules established for each congregate service.

(b) In evaluating programs receiving assistance under this title, the Secretary shall—

(1) establish procedures for the review and evaluation of the performance of public housing agencies receiving assistance under this title, including provisions for the submission of an annual report, by each such public housing agency, which evaluates the impact and effectiveness of its congregate services program; and

(2) publish annually and submit to the Congress, a report on and evaluation of the impact and effectiveness of congregate services programs assisted under this title. Such report and evaluation shall be based, in part, on the evaluations required to be submitted pursuant to paragraph (1).

SEC. 509. (a) The Secretary shall establish procedures—

(1) to assure timely payments to public housing agencies for approved assisted congregate services programs with provision made for advance funding sufficient to meet necessary startup costs;

(2) to permit reallocation of funds approved for the establishment of congregate services in existing public housing projects if the services are not established within six months of the notification date of funding approval;

(3) to assure that where such funding has been approved for the establishment of congregate services for public housing projects under construction or approved for construction, these services shall be in place at the start of the project's occupancy by tenants requiring such services for maintaining independent living;

(4) to establish accounting and other standards in order to prevent any fraudulent or inappropriate use of funds under this title; and

(5) to assure that no more than 1 per centum of the funds appropriated under this title for any fiscal year may be used by public housing agencies for evaluative purposes as required by section 508(b)(1).

(b) The Secretary shall establish a reserve fund, not to exceed 10 per centum of the funds appropriated in each fiscal year for the provision of services under this title, in order to supplement grants awarded to public housing agencies under this title when, in the determination of the Secretary, such supplemental adjustments are required to maintain adequate levels of services to eligible project residents.

MISCELLANEOUS PROVISIONS

SEC. 510. (a) Each public housing agency shall, to the maximum extent practicable, utilize elderly and permanently disabled adult persons who are residents of public housing projects, but who are not eligible project residents, to participate in providing the services assisted under this title. Such persons shall be paid wages which shall not be lower than whichever is the highest of—

(1) the mininum wage which would be applicable to the employee under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, if section 6(a)(1) of such Act applied to the resident and if he or she were not exempt under section 13 thereof;

(2) the State or local minimum wage for the most nearly comparable covered employment; or

(3) the prevailing rates of pay for persons employed in similar public occupations by the same employer.

(b) No service provided to a public housing resident under this title, except for wages paid under subsection (a) of this section, may be treated as income for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law.

(c) Individuals receiving services assisted under this title shall be deemed to be residents of their own households, and not to be residents of a public institution, for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law.

(d) The Secretary may issue regulations to carry out the provisions of this title.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 511. To carry out the provisions of this title, there are authorized to be appropriated—

(1) for fiscal year 1979, not to exceed $20,000,000;

(2) for fiscal year 1980, not to exceed $25,000,000; and

(3) for fiscal year 1981, not to exceed $35,000,000.

Any sums appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

AMENDMENT TO UNITED STATES HOUSING ACT OF 1937

SEC. 512. Section 7 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by striking out the second sentence and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "As used in this section, the term 'congregate housing' means (1) low-rent housing which, as of January 1, 1979, was built or under construction, with which there is connected a central dining facility where wholesome and economical meals can be served to such occupants; or (2) low-rent housing constructed after, but not under construction prior to, January 1, 1979, (A) in which some or all of the dwelling units do not have kitchen facilities, and (B) connected with which there is a central dining facility to provide wholesome and economical meals for such occupants. Such occupants of congregate housing may also be provided with other supportive services appropriate to their needs under title V of the Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978.".

Mr. ASHLEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title V be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there other amendments to title V?

If not, the Clerk will read.

The Clerk read as follows:

TITLE VI—NEIGHBORHOOD REINVESTMENT CORPORATION

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 601. (a) The Congress finds that—

(1) the neighborhood housing services demonstration of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force has proven successful as a program to assist in revitalizing older urban neighborhoods by mobilizing public, private, and community resources at the neighborhood level; and

(2) the demand for neighborhood housing services programs in cities throughout the United States warrants the creation of a public corporation to institutionalize and expand the neighborhood housing services program and other programs of the present Urban Reinvestment Task Force.

(b) The purpose of this title is to establish a public corporation which will continue the joint efforts of the Federal financial supervisory agencies and the Department of Housing and Urban Development to promote reinvestment in older neighborhoods by local financial institutions working cooperatively with community people and local government and which will continue the nonbureaucratic approach to the Urban Reinvestment Task Force, relying largely on local initiative for the specific design of local programs.

ESTABLISHMENT OF A CORPORATION

SEC. 602. (a) There is established a National Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation") which shall be a body corporate and shall possess the powers, and shall be subject to the direction and limitations specified herein.

(b) The corporation shall implement and expand the demonstration activities carried out by the Urban Reinvestment Task Force.

(c) The corporation shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia or at such other place the corporation may from time to time prescribe.

(d) The corporation, including its franchise, activities, assets, and income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States, by any territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority; except that any real property of the corporation shall be subject to State, territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS; ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 603. (a) The corporation shall be under the direction of a board of directors made up of the following members:

(1) the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board who shall be the chairman of the board of directors;

(2) the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development;

(3) a member of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to be designated by the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System;

(4) the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

(5) the Comptroller of the Currency; and

(6) the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administration.

(b) Each director of the corporation shall serve ex officio during the period he holds the office to which he is appointed by the President.

(c) The directors of the corporation, as full-time officers of the United States, shall serve without additional compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties as directors of the corporation.

(d) The directors of the corporation shall adopt such bylaws, policies, and administrative provisions as are necessary to the functioning of the corporation and consistent with the provisions of this title.

(c) The presence of a majority of the board members shall constitute a quorum.

(f) The corporation shall be subject to the provisions of section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

(g) All meetings of the board of directors will be conducted in accordance with the provisions of section 552b of title V, United States Code.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 604. (a) The board shall have power to select, employ, and fix the compensation and benefits of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this title, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, classification, and General Schedule pay rates, except that no officer, employee, attorney, or agent of the corporation may be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the highest rate provided for GS–18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) The directors of the corporation shall appoint an executive director who shall serve as chief executive officer of the corporation.

(c) The executive director of the corporation, subject to approval by the board, may appoint and remove such employees of the corporation as he determines necessary to carry out the purposes of the corporation.

(d) No political test or political qualification shall be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking any other personnel action with respect to any officer, agent, or employee of the corporation or of any recipient, or in selecting or monitoring any grantee, contractor, or person or entity receiving financial assistance under this title.

(e) Officers and employees of the corporation shall not be considered officers or employees of the United States.

POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 605. (a)(1) The corporation shall continue the work of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force in establishing neighborhood housing services programs in neighborhoods througnout the United States, supervising their progress, and providing them with grants and technical assistance. For the purpose of this paragraph, a neighborhood housing services program may involve a partnership of neighborhood residents and representatives of local governmental and financial institutions, organized as a State-chartered nonprofit corporation, working to bring about reinvestment in one or more neighborhcods through a program of systematic housing inspections, increased public investment, increased private lending, increased resident investment, and a revolving loan fund to make loans available at flexible rates and terms to homeowners not meeting private lending criteria.

(2) The corporation shall continue the work of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force in identifying, monitoring, evaluating, and providing grants and technical assistance to selected neighborhood preservation projects which show promise as mechanisms for reversing neighborhood decline and improving the quality of neighborhood life.

(3) The corporation shall experimentally replicate neighborhood preservation projects which have demonstrated success, and after creating reliable developmental processes, bring the new programs to neighborhoods throughout the United States which in the judgment of the corporation can benefit therefrom, by providing assistance in organizing programs, providing grants in partial support of program costs, and providing technical assistance to ongoing programs.

(4) The corporation shall continue the work of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force in supporting Neighborhood Housing Services of America, a nonprofit corporation established to provide services to local neighborhood housing services programs, with grants to expand its national loan purchase pool and may contract with it for services which it can perform more efficiently or effectively than the corporation.

(5) The corporation shall, in making and providing the foregoing grants and technical and other assistance, determine the reporting and management restrictions or requirements with which the recipients of such grants or other assistance must comply. In making such determinations, the corporation shall assure that recipients of grants and other assistance make available to the corporation such information as may be necessary to determine compliance with applicable Federal laws.

(b) To carry out the foregoing purposes and engage in the foregoing activities, the corporation shall have the following powers:

(1) to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal;

(2) to have succession until dissolved by Act of Congress;

(3) to make and perform contracts, agreements, and commitments;

(4) to sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any State, Federal, or other court;

(5) to determine its necessary expenditures and the manner in which the same shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and appoint, employ, and fix and provide for the compensation of consultants, without regard to any other law, except as provided in section 607(d);

(6) to settle, adjust, and compromise, and with or without compensation or benefit to the corporation to release or waive in whole or in part, in advance or otherwise, any claim, demand, or right of, by, or against the corporation;

(7) to invest such funds of the corporation in such investments as the board of directors may prescribe;

(8) to acquire, take, hold, and own, and to deal with and dispose of any property; and

(9) to exercise all other powers that are necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this title.

(c)(1) The corporation may contract with the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment of the Federal home loan banks for all staff, services, facilities, and equipment now or in the future furnished by the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment to the Urban Reinvestment Task Force, including receiving the services of the Director of the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment as the corporation's executive director.

(2) The corporation shall have the power to award contracts and grants to—

(A) neighborhood housing services corporations and other nonprofit corporations engaged in neighborhood preservation activities; and

(B) local governmental bodies.

(3) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve Board and the Federal home loan banks, the System and the Federal Reserve banks, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Comptroller of the Currency, the National Credit Union Administration or any other department, agency, or other instrumentality of the Federal Government are authorized to provide services and facilities, with or without reimbursement, necessary to achieve the objectives and to carry out the purposes of this title.

(d)(1) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stocks, or to declare or pay any dividends.

(2) No part of the income or assets of the corporation shall inure to the benefit of any director, officer, or employee, except as reasonable compensation for services or reimbursement for expenses.

(3) The corporation may not contribute to or otherwise support any political party or candidate for elective public office.

REPORTS AND AUDITS

SEC. 606. (a) The corporation shall publish an annual report which shall be transmitted by the corporation to the President and the Congress.

(b) The accounts of the corporation shall be audited annually. Such audits shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards by independent certified public accountants who are certified by a regulatory authority of the jurisdiction in which the audit is undertaken.

(c) In addition to the annual audit, the financial transactions of the corporation for any fiscal year during which Federal funds are available to finance any portion of its operations may be audited by the General Accounting Office in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

(d) For any fiscal year during which Federal funds are available to finance any portion of the corporation's grants or contracts, the General Accounting Office, in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States, may audit the grantees or contractors of the corporation.

(e) The corporation shall conduct or require each grantee or contractor to provide for an annual financial audit. The report of each audit shall be maintained for a period of at least five years at the principal office of the corporation.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 607. (a) There is authorized to be appropriated to the corporation to carry out this title not to exceed $8,500,000 for fiscal year 1979.

(b) Funds appropriated pursuant to this section shall remain available until expended.

(c) Non-Federal funds received by the corporation, and funds received by any recipient from a source other than the corporation, shall be accounted for and reported as receipts and disbursements separate and distinct from Federal funds.

(d) The corporation shall prepare annually a business-type budget which shall be submitted to the Office of Management and Budget, under such rules and regulations as the President may establish as to the date of submission, the form and content, the classifications of data, and the manner in which such budget program shall be prepared and presented. The budget of the corporation as modified, amended, or revised by the President shall be transmitted to the Congress as a part of the annual budget required by the Budget and Accounting Act, 1921. Amendments to the annual budget program may be submitted from time to time.

Mr. ASHLEY (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that title VI be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Ohio?

There was no objection.

COMMITTEE AMENDMENTS

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the first committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 70, line 6, strike "who shall" and all that follows through "directors" on line 7.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will report the next committee amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Committee amendment: Page 61, insert the following after line 18 (and redesignate subsections (b), (c), (d), (e), (f), and (g) on pages 61 and 62 as subsections (c), (d), (e), (f), (g), and (h), respectively):

(b) The Board shall elect from among its members a chairman who shall serve for a term of two years, except that the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board shall serve as Chairman of the Board of Directors for the first such two-year term.

The committee amendment was agreed to.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the remaining committee amendments to title VI be considered as read, printed in the RECORD, and considered en bloc.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Michigan?

There was no objection.

The remaining committee amendments to title VI are as follows:

Committee amendments: Page 64, line 25, strike out "grants to expand" and insert in lieu thereof "support which may include grants and technical assistance to assist in the development of"; and on page 65, line 1, insert "demonstration" after "pool"

APPLICATION OF GOVERNMENT CORPORATION CONTROL ACT

Sec. 608. Section 101 of the Government Corporation Control Act is amended by inserting "National Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation;" after "Federal Housing Administration;".

The committee amendments were agreed to.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the chairman of the subcommittee and the chairman of the full committee for title VI, the establishment of a Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation. This grows out of the work of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force which—I think the chairman of the subcommittee would agree with me—has been one of the most successful programs in which substantial private funds have been attracted to the work of preserving many of our neighborhoods with a minimum of Government interference and a minimum of Government investment. Now the step is taken to put this program on a more permanent basis with a greater status under the Urban Reinvestment Corporation.

I take it that the chairman of the subcommittee would agree with me that this does reflect on the part of the committee a recognition of the effectiveness of this program, which involves the banks, the private sector, and the Government in a coordinated way.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ASHLEY. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I am in complete accord with the views expressed by the gentleman from New York. The program in question was initiated in 1974. In many respects, it was a demonstration program, under the aegis of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

The program has been extremely well run. It has been an ambitious program, in terms of what it has sought to achieve. It has been a modest program in terms of establishing a firm base from which to proceed.

Until a few years ago, there were only two dozen cities, or so, in which the Urban Reinvestment Task Force was operating, in which the services of the task force were being made use of. Now it is my understanding that there are some 47 cities that are participating in this program.

Inasmuch as the Urban Reinvestment Task Force has in every respect been a credit to the housing efforts of the United States, particularly in areas in need of rehabilitation, it has seemed to the committee that the task force well deserves a somewhat firmer structure from which to operate. And it is for that reason that the provision is in this year's housing bill, to give it a more permanent structure and status.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the chairman for his comments.

I had considered offering an amendment to increase the authorization for the Neighborhood Investment Corporation; but in view of the committee's action and the late hour at which this is being considered, I will not offer that amendment.

I would like to call attention to the fact that the Senate approved a 3-year authorization of $65 million for the Corporation as against the 1-year House authorization of $8.5 million. I hope that the conferees on the part of the House will look sympathetically at the idea of increasing the total authorization for the Corporation above the House figures.

Mr. ASHLEY. If the gentleman will yield further, Mr. Chairman, I think it is worthy of note that the task force, now the Corporation, was funded last year at a level of $4.5 million.

Mr. BINGHAM. I am well aware of that.

Mr. ASHLEY. The Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs and the Subcommittee on Housing have not been penurious. We have said that amount should essentially be doubled because of the capacity of the Corporation to continue an expanded role.

There is, of course, a limit beyond which the capacity of the Corporation simply will not permit effective work; and this has been discussed with Mr. Whiteside and with others who have been so prominent in the leadership of the task force, now the Corporation.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) has expired.

(By unanimous consent, Mr. BINGHAM was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I just want to assure the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) that the House takes the same sympathetic view of the activities of this entity, now a corporation, as does the gentleman from New York. We are not unmindful of the capacity of the Corporation and of the amount of money which should be made available to the Corporation so that it can continue its work on a sound basis.

Mr. Chairman, I can assure the gentleman from New York that these thoughts will be in our minds as we go to conference with the other body.

Mr. BINGHAM. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for his comments.

Let me just say that I do hope that the House conferees will be flexible in their approach, particularly in view of the fact that a substantial part of the additional Senate authorization would go for the development of the neighborhood preservation project component of the task force, which is directed toward more severely deteriorated urban neighborhoods, such as exist in my district.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I am delighted to hear all this massive support for my amendment, I must say to the gentleman. I had a little more difficulty in getting it through the committee than I seem to have now, considering the ringing endorsements for it today.

In any event, it seems to me in my city of Bridgeport, Conn., this type of program has had the leverage which we have not been able to get through any other type of Federal program. It has had the greatest amount of private participation, and it has had the greatest amount of community involvement. It has been able to take an area of the city of Bridgeport, which was, in the words of bankers, government, and others "doomed" and bring it back not only to a decent place to inhabit but to a place where there is pride on the part of the citizens who live there. There is safety on the streets again, and there is a whole renewed feeling of neighborhood interest, which is where I think all of our programs have to be if they are going to succeed.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) has expired.

(On request of Mr. McKINNEY and by unanimous consent, Mr. BINGHAM was allowed to proceed for 2 additional minutes.)

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Connecticut.

Mr. McKINNEY. Mr. Chairman, it is my feeling that we needed to take this kind of program and let it act as a spearhead, as a separate entity, free from the tremendous amount of Government paper and all of the other things which we put into programs and which slow them down and make them almost incomprehensible to the average, ordinary citizen.

It is always interesting to me that this program appears to work with just a few citizens, one or two people, doing the liaison with the banks. We do not need the grant writers; we do not need the reams of Federal employees. Far more importantly, we do not frighten the citizen away by all of the problems that we set up through the programs.

Mr. Chairman, that is one of the reasons I want to separate this out, within its ability to perceive without wasting money, and everyone may rest assured that I will be delighted to see that it has the proper funding.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the gentleman. I congratulate him for his contribution.

May I just say that similar success has been recorded in the city of Yonkers, which is not in my district but which is nearby. I hope we can bring this program into my district.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BINGHAM. I yield to the gentleman from Wisconsin.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Chairman, I simply want to add my complete concurrence to what the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. ASHLEY), who has been out front on this from the beginning, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. McKINNEY), and the gentleman from New York (Mr. BINGHAM) have said. I have seen the plan work in Baltimore, in Bridgeport, and in a number of other places. It is a marvelous example of cooperation. The Federal Reserve and the Home Loan Bank Board are in there with their heavies, making it the chic and in thing to do in communities which would not otherwise do it. The locals get involved. The hand of the bureaucracy is very light indeed, and it gets things done.

Mr. Chairman, it is eminently something to be encouraged. I want to thank the gentleman for not offering his amendment, because he has got some pretty good converts right here on what will be the conference committee. I think we will have the flexibility to do something like that the gentleman wants.

Mr. BINGHAM. I thank the chairman very much for his comments.

In conclusion, Mr. Chairman, I would just like to say that the Urban Reinvestment Task Force has been one of the few bright lights shining in the inner-city darkness. The virtues of the task force's approach to neighborhood revival are numerous. The program is nonbureaucratic, it gets the maximum bang out of the Federal Government buck, and each neighborhood project is run at the local level by neighborhood people. Districts such as mine in the Bronx are desperately in need of such innovative programs. The task force has earned the more permanent status that would be afforded by the creation of the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation. I only hope the new Corporation is granted the funds necessary to carry out its programs on a larger scale.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. DUNCAN OF TENNESSEE

Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee: At the end of the bill, and the following new title:

TITLE VII—TREATMENT OF SOCIAL SECURITY BENEFIT INCREASES UNDER CERTAIN FEDERAL HOUSING LAWS

SEC. 701. (a) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, social security benefit increases occurring after May 1978 shall not be considered as income or resources or otherwise taken into account for purposes of determining the eligibility for or amount of assistance which any individual or family is provided under the United States Housing Act of 1937, the National Housing Act, the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, or the Housing Act of 1949. For purposes of this subsection, the term "social security benefit increases occurring after May 1976" means any part of a monthly benefit payable to an individual under the insurance program established under title II of the Social Security Act which results from (and would not be payable but for) a cost-of-living increase in benefits under such program becoming effective after May 1978 pursuant to section 215(1) of such Act, or any other increase in benefits under such program, enacted afer May 1978, which constitutes a general benefit increase within the meaning of section 215(1) (3) of such Act.

(b) Subsection (a) of this section shall be effective only with respect to assistance which is provided under the Acts referred to in the first sentence of such subsection) for periods after September 30, 1978.

Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, before the July Fourth district work period, the House of Representatives voted 297 to 5 to adopt H.R. 10173, the Veterans' and Survivors' Pension Improvement Act of 1978. In doing so, we assured our non-service-connected veterans that they would no longer have VA benefits reduced solely as a result of cost-of-living increases in social security payments.

I feel that this was a long-overdue reform, and wish at this point to offer an amendment to the bill before us to do the same thing for another group of our deserving citizens. These are our social security recipients who live in public housing. Everytime a social security beneficiary receives a cost-of-living increase, his or her public housing rent is raised. This actually provides a windfall for the local housing authority and deprives the social security recipient of the benefit of the increase which is needed for other living requirements.

My amendment would assure these social security recipients who reside in public housing that they would no longer have their rent increased solely as a result of a cost-of-living increase, occurring after May 1978, in social security benefits. The cost-of-living increase would not be considered as income or resources for determining the eligibility or amount of assistance an individual might receive under housing laws.

Mr. Chairman, I am sure that I am not alone in receiving many inquiries and complaints from constituents about social security increases resulting in raised public housing rents or even the termination of eligibility for public housing assistance. I feel that this is blatantly unfair, and must make many of our citizens wonder why we are giving with one hand and then taking away with the other.

My amendment offers a solution to this problem. It is a solution which has been proposed in this Congress by at least 20 of our colleagues. It is a solution which will bring much relief to our many citizens who currently find themselves caught in this "catch-22" situation.

Finally, Mr. Chairman, I offer this amendment as a separate title as it is applicable to many provisions in the legislation before us, and not just to any one title.

I would, therefore, urge my colleagues' support of this important amendment.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee. Mr. Chairman, I yield to the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mrs. FENWICK. Mr. Chairman, I rise in most hearty support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee. I have long hoped we might achieve some sensible and fair arrangement such as this. It is ridiculous to have a cost-of-living rise and immediately have a penalty for those who live in public housing.

I thank the gentleman from Tennessee.

Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee. I thank the gentlewoman from New Jersey.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr .Chairman, I rise in opposition to this amendment which would prevent social security cost-of-living increases from being counted as income when calculating rents in assisted housing. In essence, what the amendment would do is to prevent rent increases for people in assisted housing who get their income from social security.

I am perfectly sympathetic with what the gentleman is trying to accomplish here, but his amendment I am afraid raises far more problems that it solves.

I think it is important to point out that the very purpose of the social security cost of living increases is to help meet a variety of needs, including rent increases. It does not seem reasonable to me to say that cost of living increases are supposed to cover rent increases and then turn around and prevent their use for those rent increases.

What I am getting at is: How does the gentleman define the cost of living increases and what is the purpose of cost of living increases? It is to cover the increases in basic costs in the economy. The gentleman says that is not fair. If there is a cost increase in the social security prorgam, there are increases to cover those costs. He says, well, that is fine except not for purposes of shelter, that is for purposes of increases in rent.

Why not go into the grocery store and tell the grocer he cannot charge higher for groceries to any recipients of the social security cost of living increases they are getting?

Briefly, Mr. Chairman, what troubles me most about the proposal is that it gives special treatment to a particular group simply because of their source of income. Someone who does not receive social security income would continue to have rent increases, while someone with the identical level of income but who receives it from social security would have no rent increases.

The amendment as drafted would even treat that social security recipient differently based on when he gets into the program. A person who was in public housing today would have essentially their rent frozen based on this year's social security benefit level. Someone who came in under the program next year would have to pay higher rent although the amount of social security received would be identical. They would have to pay a higher rent since the rent would be based on the 1979 benefit level, even though they both would be getting the same social security payment.

In addition to the amendment being inequitable, it would be extremely costly. Projections by the Department of Housing and Urban Development show that by 1980 the cost of the amendment would be $80 million and that in the years after 1980 the costs would grow dramatically.

It seems to me if the gentleman wishes to mitigate rent increases in public housing, there are far more effective and fair ways of doing this.

If it is the gentleman's concern to increase the value of benefits under social security, again there are certainly more equitable ways of accomplishing that end.

In short, Mr. Chairman, the proposed amendment would create an inequitable and extremely costly result. For these reasons I urge my colleagues to join me in opposing the amendment.

Mr. QUILLEN. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the last word.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment offered by the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN). It is a terrible thing to give our elderly citizens a social security increase, and then force them to pay more rent if they live in public housing. The Government gives with one hand and takes away with the other. I simply do not think this is fair and I support the amendment.

● Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Chairman, I support the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee, Congressman JOHN DUNCAN, to correct one of the injustices that have occurred in Federal means tested programs.

This amendment would provide that administrators of housing programs disregard increases in monthly social security benefits in determining eligibility for and the amount of assistance available through public housing programs for social security recipients. The bill would apply to the 6.5-percent increase they received this month.

Under current law, public housing benefits are reduced for social security recipients whenever they receive a cost-of-living increase in their benefits. This problem has impeded the effective delivery of a variety of needed Federal services to the poor and elderly since 1972, when Congress approved an automatic cost-of-living increase provision to the Social Security Act. The whole point of the law was to provide some relief to older people and others living on fixed incomes who were being hardest hit by inflation.

Instead of receiving and benefiting from the cost-of-living increases, however, social security recipients found their benefits in other means-tested programs—including public housing, food stamps, and medicaid—reduced or eliminated entirely because of the "increased income" provided by the annual social security cost-of-living increases. The effect of this cost-of-living provision—which Congress enacted to help the elderly and others who rely on social security to replace income lost through death, disability or retirement—has been for the Government to give with one hand while taking away with the other.

The amendment before us would eliminate this injustice in the public housing program, which assists only those whose incomes are already so low that they cannot be expected to pay for housing at fair market rates. The elderly and others receiving social security make up about half a million of those receiving housing assistance. In many cases, social security is their income, from which they must pay for food, medicine, clothing and all their other living expenses. Yet the law says that they must pay higher monthly rents when they receive annual increases in social security benefits. In some cases, the cost-of-living increases terminates a recipients' eligibility for subsidized housing, thus forcing that person to pay an even greater proportion of monthly income on housing.

Congressman CHARLES WHALEN and I introduced legislation in this Congress to eliminate this effect of social security cost-of-living increases in seven Federal programs, including public housing. Recently, the House prohibited these cost-of-living increase from reducing veterans' benefits, so we have recognized this problem, and the need to make clear Congress' intent in passing this law. But we should establish this principle in every program which provides necessary services to persons on fixed incomes. I recognize that this one amendment does not cure all the injustices or eliminate all the problems, but it will help tens of thousands of our senior citizens who are barely able to survive. Surely we can do no less.●

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN).

The question was taken; and on a division (demanded by Mr. DUNCAN of Tennessee) there were—ayes 8, noes 9.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FLORIO

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FLORIO: Page 79, after line 10, add the following new title:

TITLE VII—HOUS'NG PROGRAM PAPERWORK REDUCTION

FINDINGS AND AUTHORITY

SEC. 701. (a) The Congress finds and declares—

(1) that various departments, agencies, and instrumentalities of the Federal Government with responsibilities involving housing and housing finance programs require, approve, use or otherwise employ a variety of different forms as residential mortgages (or deeds of trust or similar security instruments), as notes secured by those mortgages, and for applications, appraisals and other purposes, and that such duplication of forms constitutes a paperwork burden that adds to the costs imposed on the Nation's homeowners and home buyers;

(2) that unnecessary paperwork impairs the effectiveness of Federal housing and housing finance programs;

(3) that both single-family and multifamily programs are affected; and

(4) that simplification of paperwork imposed by Federal housing and housing finance programs would contribute to achieving the Nation's housing goals by reducing housing costs.

(b)(1) Insofar as it is practicable and to the extent permitted by law and to the extent that such action would result in a reduction in paperwork and regulatory burden, the Department of Housing and Urban Development and the Veterans' Administration shall employ in their respective programs—

(A) uniform single-family and multifamily note and mortgage forms;

(B) a uniform application form for mortgage approval and commitment for mortgage insurance;

(C) a uniform form of computation of the monthly net effective income of applicants;

(D) a uniform property appraisal form;

(E) a uniform settlement statement which shall satisfy the requirements of the Real Estate Settlement Procedures Act; and

(F) such other consolidated or simplified forms, the consolidation or simplification of which the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development and the Aministrator of Veterans' Affairs mutually agreed would contribute to a reduction in the paperwork and regulatory burden of housing and housing finance programs administered by the agencies.

(2) Each agency may employ riders, addenda, or similar forms of modification agreements to adapt such uniform forms to its respective programs and policies, consistent with the goals of minimizing the use and extent of such modification agreements and of maximizing the suitability of such forms for the use of all participants, public and private.

(3) To the extent permitted by law, the President may require the Farmers Home Administration and the Administrator of the Farmers Home Administration to comply with the requirements of this section if such compliance will contribute to a reduction in the paperwork and regulatory burden of housing and housing finance programs administered by the agency.

(c) The Director of the Office of Management and Budget shall coordinate and monitor the development and implementation by Federal departments and agencies of the efforts required by subsection (b) and shall report to the Congress on such development and implementation as part of each report required under Public Law 93-556.

Mr. FLORIO (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the amendment be considered as read and printed in the RECORD.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Chairman, one of the primary concerns in my district, and in the State of New Jersey, is the inflationary cost of housing. Our average home is now beyond the reach of 80 to 85 percent of all New Jerseyians. Families whose incomes have not kept pace with fast-rising housing prices are being "priced out" of the housing market. This is particularly true of young families attempting to purchase their first house. No improvement in this situation is in sight and the building industry in my State is shrouded by clouds of uncertainty.

There are many contributing components to the inflationary housing costs dilemma. Some cannot be controlled on a short-term basis. For example, the structure of the Federal Reserve System makes it difficult for Congress to have much influence over mortgage interest rates.

One controllable component, however, which merits our careful consideration is homeownership regulatory cost reduction. Excessive governmental regulation costs can and must be controlled by Congress before the unnecessary costs of bureaucratic paperwork and requirements contribute even more than they do now to pricing new decent housing out of the reach of millions of deserving American families. Jan Janis, the Under Secretary of HUD, has identified the cost of overregulation as one of the greatest threats to achieving the national goal of decent housing.

Today, I am introducing legislation to alleviate the problem of excessive Government paperwork and regulation in the form of an amendment to H.R. 12433, the Housing Community Development Amendments of 1978.

My amendment would accomplish two purposes. First, it would reduce the paperwork burden facing homebuilders, homebuyers, and homesellers by requiring the Federal Housing Administration and the Veterans' Administration—as well as other Federal agencies with FMHA responsibilities in the housing and housing finance areas—to eliminate paperwork duplication by adopting the same forms for the same purposes in their various housing, finance and loan guarantee programs. Second, it would require OMB to monitor these efforts of the various housing and housing finance agencies in this area.

This amendment is based almost entirely on the findings and recommendations of the Commission on Federal Paperwork. This Commission was set up in 1975, following House and Senate passage of the enabling legislation late in 1974. The Commission was given a 2-year mandate to "study Federal statutes, policies, rules, regulations, and procedures relating to information gathering, processing, and dissemination, and the management and control of these activities," and control of these activities," and to present Congress with its findings and recommendations for assuring the availability of necessary information to Federal officials while minimizing the paperwork burden on others, reducing the duplication of information gathering by various levels of Government, and reducing the costs of Federal paperwork.

In its 2-year life, the Commission published more than 30 separate studies, including a June 10, 1977, report on paperwork in our Federal housing and housing finance programs. The report contained 58 recommendations for reducing the paperwork burden of these programs.

In its analysis, the Commission on Federal Paperwork found that "redtape in the form of excessive paperwork imposed on program participants" was a major reason why "builders, developers, mortgage bankers, and other clients of the major Federal housing agencies—HUD, VA, and FMHA—are turning away from the housing programs of these agencies."

As a result, today, fewer than 5 percent of all the members of the National Association of Home Builders participate in Federal housing programs. The percentage of housing starts that are federally assisted through mortgage loan guarantees and other programs has fallen during the last 20 years from more than 50 percent to less than 10 percent.

The overall conclusion of the Federal Paperwork Commission was that "unless steps are taken to alleviate this paperwork, thus kindling the private sector's participation in Federal housing programs, a decent home and suitable living environment for all Americans will be unachievable."

One of the primary problems discovered by the Commission is that HUD and VA each maintain separate paperwork systems with duplicative requirements for their respective single-family mortgage programs. Although the purpose of each agency is essentially the same; that is, to help qualified applicants buy their homes, maintenance of separate paperwork requirements means extra staff time and costs to program participants.

This is an absolutely unnecessary burden. The information needed by FHA and VA to process a loan application are virtually identical. But mortgage bankers, who originate more than 75 percent of FHA loans and a large percentage of VA loans, must keep two sets of forms on file, must have staff trained to process two different sets of forms, and must know how to deal differently with two different agencies who are running very similar programs. Most mortgage bankers interviewed by the Commission said they could process more loan applications in much less time if only the FHA and VA could agree on common forms for their programs. The Commission recommended a number of forms that could be consolidated, including the application form, the appraisal form, the forms for estimating monthly incomes, as well as other forms that are required in loan processing. With more than 380,000 applications filed in a typical year (1976) for VA loans and almost 450,000 filed for FHA loans, and with considerable overlap, this is clearly not a minor problem. However, not a great deal seems to have been accomplished by these two agencies in reducing this unnecessary source of costly paperwork.

Why have HUD and VA failed to act on the Federal Paperwork Commission's recommendations? It has been suggested that the bureaucrats who run these Federal loan guarantee programs simply do not want to share their powers with other agencies—no matter what the cost of the Nation's consumers and home buyers.

We in the Congress can no longer condone or ignore this kind of attitude. The burden of Government regulations imposed on individuals and businesses by Government bureaucrats, with no regard for the costs to those who must comply, has become overwhelming. Recently, the Joint Economic Committee published a study which found that the overall cost of Government regulations on the private sector came to more than $135 billion last year—more than $500 for every man, woman, and child in this country.

While the unnecessary cost of excessive and duplicative paperwork in our Federal housing and housing finance programs contributes only a fraction of this burden of Government regulations, it is a good place to start cutting these costs. There are 109 repetitive use reports that OMB has cleared for HUD use in its housing production and mortgage credit programs. These 109 reports generate 3,602,760 responses annually, and require almost 2,000,000 hours of time to complete. This is the equivalent of almost 1,000 individuals working full-time just filling out FHA forms.

The housing programs run by VA require about 60 forms, involving 2.7 million annual responses and almost 1.25 million hours of time to complete. This is equivalent to assigning 625 individuals to work all year filling out VA housing forms. On top of this, the FHA uses 37 forms involving 1.5 million annual responses and almost 1 million hours of respondent time. Many of these forms can be merged and their overall reporting burden cut significantly, as the Federal Paperwork Commission recommends.

Although my amendment will not totally cure the problem of inflationary housing costs, it will alleviate one of the industry's most oppressive burdens—excessive Government paperwork. It will directly reduce the proliferation of unnecessary forms and force the various housing agencies to cooperate in an organized way to reduce the burden imposed by their rules and regulations.

I urge this Committee's support for the amendment, and I would like to acknowledge the cooperation and the support of two members of the Committee, the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. HOLLENBECK) and the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. MINISH), for providing me with information for having this amendment adopted.

Mr. ROBERTS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLORIO. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ROBERTS. I thank the gentleman for yielding, and I want to commend the gentleman on what he is doing.

Mr. Chairman, I just had a meeting over in my office on the new simplification on HUD land sales. The new regulations are out. When you submit your new application, part of it is in red type and part of it is in black type. That is the new simplification.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FLORIO. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from Oregon.

Mr. AUCOIN. Mr. Chairman, I want to associate myself with the remarks of the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO) and compliment him for the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, one of the problems I hear about most often from builders in my district is excessive Government regulation and redtape. I know that "regulation and redtape" are code words used by anybody who resents anything that Government attempts to do. But for builders those words have very real meaning. Homebuilders are stopped at every turn by rules which tell them where to build, how to build and what to build. And as if that is not enough, when a builder utilizes a program under FHA, VA or Farmers Home Administration, that builder is subjected to an additional set of extensive regulations.

The situation has gotten so bad that many builders in Oregon no longer use Federal programs. And that means that households, especially young families who need inexpensive housing will never have an opportunity to become homeowners.

Not only do excessive regulations discourage homebuilders from using Federal programs, but they boost costs. As chairman of the Task Force on Home Ownership, I know how crucial it is to do everything possible to hold down rising housing costs. My task force has held five hearings across the country: In Corvallis, Oreg., and in Long Beach, Houston, Indianapolis and Baltimore. In every one of those hearings, homebuilders came to express their strong concerns about Government regulation and redtape. It was clear from our field hearings that Government regulations at all levels are responsible for a significant portion of the increase in housing costs over recent years. While most of these regulations are local in nature, it is incumbent on the Congress to do everything possible to minimize the amount of regulation and streamline wherever possible.

This amendment is right on target in attacking the problems of excessive and duplicative paperwork. It may be a small step. But the Government must begin whittling away at the burden of paperwork it now imposes on homebuilders. This is a good start.

Let me give you one example of how this amendment can help the builders in my State. Not long ago, I received from the Oregon State Home Builders a copy of a form that Farmers Home Administration requires builders to complete before they can market their homes with financing by the agency. The form was nearly 10 pages in length. A similar form required by HUD for its program is only two pages long. There is no reason why the two agencies cannot use the same form to meet nearly identical requirements.

Members of Congress are sometimes accused of being unresponsive to problems brought to our attention by small businessmen such as homebuilders.

Now we have an opportunity to demonstrate our concern about Government regulation by addressing a specific problem and adopting the amendment.

Mr. ASHLEY. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of the amendment.

I share the gentleman's concern about unnecessary governmental regulation and excessive and duplicative paperwork requirements. While I do not wish to overemphasize the impact of this amendment in reducing housing costs and expanding homeownership opportunities, I do believe it makes a meaningful contribution to this effort and can reduce needless expense incurred by those involved in the housing industry and by home purchases.

Efforts have been underway in the administration to this same end—simplifying forms and reducing housing costs. In addition, our subcommittee is conducting hearings in this area which I hope will result in more extensive changes with perhaps even greater impact on housing costs which we hope to present to the Congress next year.

I do, however, think this amendment, in itself, makes a valuable contribution to this effort; I am pleased to support it; and commend the gentleman for his efforts.

Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words, and I rise in support of the amendment as well.

Mr. Chairman, I commend the gentleman on his diligent efforts in the area of excessive paperwork, not only in the housing medium, but all over the country.

I rise in support of the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey and I would like to compliment Mr. FLORIO in particular on his effort to try and reduce the excessive and duplicative paperwork in our Federal housing and housing finance programs. New Jersey suffers from the paperwork burden and confusion but is not alone in its plight.

Too often, prospective homeowners and homebuilders are discouraged from taking advantage of Federal home loans because of the multitude of complicated and even contradictory forms that are required. By mandating that the FHA, VA and other Federal agencies standardized their forms and eliminate confusion and duplication, homebuilders, homebuyers, and homesellers will find it easier to work with the Federal Government and each other, and receive the benefits to which they are entitled.

I urge adoption of this amendment and I only hope that it is the beginning of a move to streamline the entire Federal paperwork burden.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from New Jersey (Mr. FLORIO).

The amendment was agreed to.

● Mr. HANNAFORD. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12433, the Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978, which is the product of many hours of hard work by my distinguished colleague Chairman ASHLEY of the Housing Subcomittee and members of the full Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs Committee.

There are two specific provisions in the bill which I would like to address at this time.

First, the bill as reported by the committee contains a provision which clearly instructs the Department of Housing and Urban Development that applications under the CDBG program be approved unless there is a finding (1) that the communities' description of its needs and objectives is plainly inconsistent with the facts and data generally available; (2) that the activities to be undertaken are plainly inappropriate to meeting those needs and objectives; or (3) that the application does not comply with the requirements of the act or other applicable laws, with specific regard to "the primary purposes of principally benefiting persons of low- and moderate-income or aiding in the prevention or elimination of slums or blight or meeting other community development needs having a particular urgency." The criteria under item (3) are to be treated coequally.

To my dismay and that of many of my colleagues, HUD proposed regulations which would require 75 percent of a community's CDBG funds to be used primarily to benefit persons of low and moderate income. This clearly was not the intent of Congress when the act was considered last year and the action by the committee to inform the Department that it shall not interpret the laws, but implement them as originally intended is a significant message which this bill conveys. The 75-percent rule which HUD recommended received widespread criticism and cities in my district have communicated their dissatisfaction with the Department's tactics to ignore congressional intent.

Another provision in the bill which I will address is one which permits low- and moderate-income mobile homeowners who rent the space on which to park their homes to qualify for section 8 rental assistance. On February 22, I introduced H.R. 11085, which was directed toward this purpose and I am gratified that its provisions are essentially embodied in H.R. 12433. As we know, the costs of conventional housing are soaring. Homeowners throughout the Nation are experiencing affordability problems, and this fact has been illustrated in numerous studies conducted by the CBO, the GAO, the CRS, and other independent groups. Those who have looked to mobile homes as an affordable alternative, however, are, in many cases, finding that space rental is rising rapidly. Almost 500,000 mobile homeowners earn less than $5,000 annually and 63 percent of all mobile homeowners rent the lot on which their home is located. In many parts of California, mobile home space rentals are doubling to as much as $300 per month. This rise affects many senior citizens and younger families who simply cannot afford other housing.

The provision for section 8 rental assistance for low- and moderate-income mobile homeowners is, therefore, an important one and one that contains adequate safeguards and restricts the level of assistance in keeping with our overall budgetary considerations.

There is another issue which I would like to address at this time. That is the need to amend the Department of Housing and Urban Development's Urban Development Action Grant (UDAG) program.

Under this program, entire cities and urban counties meeting certain eligibility criteria for economic distress established by the Secretary of HUD may submit applications for urban development action grants. Excluded from participation in this program, however, are areas of distress having a population under 50,000. This figure is an arbitrary one and one which disregards pockets of poverty within many of the currently UDAG-eligible areas.

Attempting to meet adequately the needs of individuals and families throughout the Nation is a formidable task. It involves establishing guidelines, criteria and measures of need. As national policymakers, we must strive to be equitable in meeting these needs. And where we realize that certain revisions will strengthen program objectives and enhance the likelihood of accomplishing those objectives, then we must act swiftly.

One of the laudable goals set by this administration is to "target" assistance to areas most in need. Amending the UDAG program to permit smaller areas of distress to apply for available funding buttresses the targeting goal. To ignore the fact that needs exist in communities under 50,000 population is deplorable.

On July 20 the Senate adopted an amendment to S. 3084, the housing authorization bill, extending UDAG eligibility to distressed areas with a population of at least 10,000. The passage of this amendment by a vote of 48 to 39 signifies a great victory.

I urge that the House Members appointed to the conference committee on this legislation concur with the Senate's UDAG amendment. It is my firm belief that need should be addressed regardless of geographic location and that measures of need should be continually and critically scrutinized.●

● Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Chairman, today, my colleague from Tennessee (Mr. DUNCAN) is offering an amendment to the Housing and Community Development Act amendments which rectifies an injustice exhibited in our Federal housing program.

Two weeks ago, the nearly 34 million recipients of social security received a 6.5-percent cost-of-living increase. This action was designed to help them deal with the serious problem of living on fixed incomes in an age of spiralling costs. Many of these Americans also are qualified to receive aid under Federal housing programs enacted in 1937, 1948, and 1965. However, under existing laws, these citizens can expect reductions in the level of support provided through projects administered by the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

At present, increases in social security benefits are counted as income for the purpose of determining eligibility for participation in housing and other Federal programs, such as medicaid and food stamps. Thus, the person ordinarily entitled to low rent subsidies in federally sponsored housing projects will quite likely be forced to pay a proportionately higher rent after receiving cost-of-living increase in his or her social security benefits. Effectively, the small benefits increase awarded to social security beneficiaries through the annual inflation adjustments can be seriously curtailed—if not eliminated—under present statutes.

Mr. DUNCAN's amendment seeks to protect these social security beneficiaries from being denied the full support awarded by federally subsidized housing programs. This amendment stands merely as a guarantee of the measure Congress enacted in 1972 to aid economically disadvantaged people. At that time, automatic cost-of-living raises for social security recipients were sanctioned.

In effect, failure to pass the Duncan amendment would perpetuate an unjust example of Government "giving with one hand, and taking with the other."

I have spoken out on this matter before. Last year, my friend and colleague, Mr. SEIBERLING, joined me in introducing a package of five bills which addressed this problem in housing and other areas. Over 200 Members supported those efforts then. I now urge my colleagues once again to bring an end to this cruel hoax on less fortunate Americans, and to add Mr. DUNCAN'S amendment to the Housing and Community Development Act.

We should remember that our failure to act today inevitably will harm the very people our Federal housing programs are designed to assist: the poor and those on fixed or low incomes.●

● Mrs. COLLINS of Illinois. Mr. Chairman, I rise in support of H.R. 12433, which represents a major effort to refine and strengthen our Nation's housing and community development programs.

I support this bill with certain reservations, however, since I fear that a disproportionately small share of its benefits will in fact reach my constituents in the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois. The reason for my pessimism, Mr. Chairman, should be apparent to those of my colleagues who joined in the debate over the amendment to title II of this legislation that I offered here on the floor on June 28. My amendment would have instructed the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to remove section 8 new construction authorization for the city of Chicago from the placement formula developed in the case of Gautreaux against Hills either through agreement with other parties before the Federal district court, or through appeal to the circuit court of appeals.

At the risk of repeating myself for the benefit of those colleagues who were not present when I offered this amendment, I wish to briefly underscore the fact that Chicago is the only city in the Nation that has not been receiving its fair share of federally assisted new construction under section 8 because of a unique set of severe restrictions that cover two-thirds of the city. Under these restrictions, which have been implemented in voluntary pursuit of an order issued by the Federal district court in Chicago on May 5, 1975, at least 60 percent of section 8 new construction must be built outside of a 1-mile radius of residential concentration of minority and low-income individuals before the remaining 40 percent can be built within an area that encompasses nearly all of the seventh congressional district. Since, as we all know, the suburbs are not knocking down HUD's doors with applications for low-income housing, my constituents are the victims of a catch-22 situation, for reasons that are completely beyond their control.

For this reason I cannot share the satisfaction expressed by many of my colleagues over the authorization, in this bill, of $1.2 billion in section 8 rent subsidies—enough to support an additional 400,000 units, so long as my district is denied its fair share of these funds. Once again, I call on HUD to remove itself from the shackles of an unworkable formula and apply to Chicago the same site selection standards that it uses effectively in the rest of the country.

HUD's failure to move in a flexible manner so as to meet the twin goals of providing both open housing and new construction in the inner cities is all the more tragic when considered alongside the progressive changes included in this legislation for the purposes of neighborhood development and of assisting our elderly and handicapped citizens.

With respect to community development block grants, for example, the legislation recognizes that local officials have the responsibility for assessing local needs and designing appropriate strategies to meet those needs. In this spirit, the committee has reaffirmed that all three purposes of the community development block grant program are of equal importance. These are: First, to benefit low- and moderate-income persons, second, to prevent or eliminate slums or blight, and third, to meet urgent community needs. In this context, HUD cannot reject a CDBG application on the ground that it meets one of these three criteria more than another of them.

Another provision in this legislation which addresses the crucial issue of neighborhood revitalization is section 307(b) which requires that rates in FAIR plans—State pools which provide property insurance to those who do not have access to insurance in the conventional market—be no higher than rates in the private market. The need for this provision is irrefutable when one considers the conclusions of the report released by HUD last month entitled "Insurance Crisis in Urban America." After documenting the widespread extent of insurance company redlining along with its "undeniable racial component," the report concluded that "affordable property insurance must be guaranteed to all genuinely insurable risks" for any urban policy to have meaning.

Yet, in spite of these obvious considerations, some States, including, I am sorry to say, my own State of Illinois, have raised FAIR plan rates to exorbitant levels that lower and middle income property owners simply cannot afford. I, therefore, oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) which would strike section 307 (b) from the bill.

The committee has also wisely decided to increase its commitment to the restoration and reservation of existing housing stock by providing a fiscal year 1979 authorization of $245 million for the section 312 loan program, which is specifically designed to aid in the rehabilitation of homes of low- and moderate-income families. While in calendar year 1977 over 33 percent of the funds went to homeowners earning over $15,000 a year, H.R. 12433 authorizes a sliding scale interest rate on loans to individuals earning over 95 percent of the median income, thus reducing the subsidy to homeowners who can afford the market interest rate.

Moreover, the institutionalization of the successful urban reinvestment task force in the form of the Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation demonstrates further our commitment to neighborhood revitalization. Since 1974 the task force—a joint effort of HUD and the Federal Home Loan Bank—has worked as a catalyst, bringing together local resources and demonstrating that a declining but still viable neighborhood can be revitalized through a partnership of resident, financial institutions, and local government.

In continued recognition of the needs of our elderly and handicapped citizens title V of this bill establishes a 3-year, $80 million program under which the Secretary of HUD can make grants to provide such services as health care, nutrition counseling, recreation and other social services to residents of congregate housing facilities operated by public housing agencies or nonprofit owners of section 202 projects.

Recent studies indicate that at least 2.4 million elderly persons would profoundly benefit from some form of alternatives to institutionalization, a premature and unnecessarily costly solution for many of our elderly citizens who remain vigorous in spirit if not in body. Studies of nursing home populations indicate that one-third to one-half of the residents would be able to function in less intensive care settings if they existed. For these reasons, I strongly support title V of this bill and oppose the amendment offered by the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) that would delete this provision. The bill would also provide that a minimum of $50 million for section 202 lending authority—a program specifically designed to finance rental and cooperative housing facilities for the elderly and handicapped—be used annually to construct housing designed to meet the needs of the handicapped. For our elderly citizens the bill would expand the section 232 mortgage insurance program to cover intermediate care facilities which offer daytime services to nonresident elderly persons.

Finally, and reiterating my concern that the residents of the Seventh Congressional District of Illinois be allocated their fair share of these programs—and particularly of section 8 new construction—I urge colleagues to support H.R. 12433, Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978.●

The CHAIRMAN. If there are no further amendments, under the rule, the Committee rises.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BRADEMAS) having assumed the chair, Mr. BENNETT, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 12433) to amend and extend certain Federal laws relating to housing, community and neighborhood development and preservation, and related programs, and for other purposes, pursuant to House Resolution 1214, he reported the bill back to the House with sundry amendments adopted by the Committee of the Whole.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under the rule, the previous question is ordered.

Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 270, nays 26, not voting 136, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days in which to revise and extend their remarks on the bill just passed, H.R. 12433.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

AUTHORIZING CLERK TO CORRECT SECTION NUMBERS, PUNCTUATION, AND CROSS REFERENCES IN ENGROSSMENT OF H.R. 12433

Mr. MINISH. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that, in the engrossment of the bill, the clerk be authorized to correct section numbers, punctuation, and cross references to reflect the actions of the House in amending the bill, H.R. 12433.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from New Jersey?

There was no objection.

APPOINTMENT OF CONFEREES ON S. 3040, AMTRAK AUTHORIZATION

Mr. STAGGERS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 3040) to amend the Rail Passenger Service Act to extend the authorizations of appropriations for an additional fiscal year, to provide for public consideration and implementation of a rail passenger service study, and for other purposes, with a House amendment thereto, insist on the House amendment, and agree to the conference asked by the Senate.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from West Virginia? The Chair hears none, and, without objection, appoints the following conferees: Messrs: STAGGERS, ROONEY, METCALFE, Ms. MIKULSKI, Messrs. FLORIO, DEVINE, and SKUBITZ.

There was no objection.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 3350, DEEP SEABED HARD MINERALS ACT

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1240 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1240

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move, section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974 (Public Law 93-344) to the contrary notwithstanding, that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 3350) to promote the orderly development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed, pending adoption of an international regime relating thereto. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed two hours, thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on International Relations, thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and thirty minutes to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Ways and Means, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. In lieu of the amendments now printed in the bill, it shall be in order to consider the text of the bill H.R. 12988 if offered as an amendment in the nature of a substitute for the bill, said substitute shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule as an original bill by titles instead of by sections, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7, rule XVI, and clause 5, rule XXI, are hereby waived. No amendment to title IV of said substitute, including an amendment in the nature of a substitute which would change title IV, shall be in order except amendments recommended by the Committee on Ways and Means and an amendment printed in the Congressional Record of June 5, 1978, by Representative Stark of California, which amendments shall not be subject to amendment, but it shall be in order to debate said amendments and title IV by the offering of pro forma amendments. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the amendment in the nature of a substitute made in order by this resolution. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Louisiana (Mr. LONG) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I yield the usual 30 minutes for the minority to the distinguished gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1240 provides for the consideration of H.R. 3350, the bill to promote the orderly development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed while an international agreement concerning deep seabed development is being worked out.

The rule provides for 2 hours of general debate, equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority members of the Committee on Interior and Insular Affairs, on International Relations, on Merchant Marine, and Fisheries, and on Ways and Means. The subject matter of this legislation is extremely complex, which is illustrated by the fact that the jurisdiction is divided among four House committees. Nonetheless, these committees have negotiated a resolution of most of their differences. The bill was jointly referred to the Committees on Merchant Marine and Fisheries and on Interior and Insular Affairs. There was then a sequential referral to the Committee on International Relations. In the course of resolving the differences among the three committee versions, it was decided to request that the Committee on Ways and Means take up the matter of the revenue sharing system. Ways and Means reported out a revenue sharing provision in the nature of an excise tax.

The consensus of these committees, which resolved approximately 17 out of 19 differences in the course of negotiations, is represented in a substitute bill, H.R. 12988, which the rule makes in order as an original bill for the purposes of amendment, instead of the amendments now printed in H.R. 3350. The substitute will be read for amendment by title rather than by section.

The rule waives all points of order against the substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7 of rule XVI, which requires that amendments be germane to the original bill. This waiver is necessary because title IV, reported by the Committee on Ways and Means, was not included in the bill as originally introduced.

The waiver of points of order for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5 of rule XXI also relates to title IV, which provides that funds contained in the "deep seabed revenue sharing trust fund" established by the legislation are to be appropriated to an international revenue sharing account set up by a Law of the Sea treaty. This waiver was granted to protect against a point of order on a possible violation of the prohibition against appropriations in a legislative measure.

The rule also waives the provisions of section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act of 1974, which sets May 15 as the deadline for reporting a bill establishing new budget authority. The chairman of the Budget Committee did not object to this waiver.

House Resolution 1240 provides an open rule on the first three titles of the substitute. This will permit the legislative committees to resolve their remaining differences on the floor by offering amendments to H.R. 12988. The substitute does not resolve the difference of opinion as to which executive agency should administer the deep seabed mining program. This matter will be resolved through the floor amendment process.

Title II of the substitute contains a Merchant Marine and Fisheries provision that the integrity of investments in deep seabed mineral exploration and commercial recovery made previous to the adoption of an international agreement be protected in the implementation of such an agreement. The Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs and on International Relations have reserved the right to offer amendments to title II.

The substitute bill provides that permittees may use for the commercial recovery or processing of hard mineral resources vessels which are documented under the laws of the United States or of a reciprocating nation. This subsection remains a point of controversy. An amendment will be offered to require U.S. documentation of mining and processing vessels.

House Resolution 1240 provides for a modified closed rule on title IV of the substitute, which is the revenue sharing title of the bill. Pro forma amendments will be in order for the purpose of debate. Also in order, but not amendable, are amendments which may be offered by the Committee on Ways and Means, and an amendment printed in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD of June 5, 1978, by Representative STARK of California. The present text of the substitute provides for an excise tax at the effective rate of three-fourths of 1 percent of the annual gross receipts from seabed mining. The Stark amendment would increase the excise tax to 10 percent of gross receipts.

Mr. Speaker, the substitute bill H.R. 12988 is designed to promote the orderly and environmentally sound development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed, pending adoption of an international agreement on this topic. Our Nation is very dependent upon foreign sources of supply of certain strategic hard minerals. Not only is this factor detrimental to our national balance-of-payments position, but the situation also poses a threat to our national security interests. Our Nation is extremely vulnerable to price escalations and supply interruptions.

We import 98 percent of our supplies of both cobalt and manganese. Cobalt is an essential element in many alloys and super alloys and is particularly important in electrical and aerospace industrial production. Our major source of cobalt supply in 1974 was the country of Zaire.

Manganese is an essential element in the steel industry. It is extremely critical to our industrial production because there is no substitute for manganese in its major applications.

We import 71 percent of our nickel, also vital to the iron and steel industry and a key in the development of the aerospace industry. Our greatest use of nickel is in alloys, and particularly stainless steel. Substitutes for nickel can be utilized only at very great expense and at sacrifice in performance.

We also import 15 percent of our copper, which, although substitutions are possible, has a wide range of applications and is of great commercial importance.

These four important minerals are found in manganese nodules, which are deposited generously throughout the deep seabed. We do not know how these nodules are formed or how long it takes, but we know that there are more than 1 trillion tons on the ocean floor. It is believed that these nodules could eventually provide a goodly portion of our needed supply of these four critical minerals.

But the capital investment for deep sea mining activity is very great. The adoption of an international treaty is associated with much risk. At this time, deep seabed mining is considered too uncertain a venture to justify large-scale capital investment in the necessary technology.

It is of great concern to deep seabed mining companies that the legal framework under which they must operate be clearly understood—including tax policy, resource management, and environmental constraints. The prospect of an international treaty that could impose severe restrictions on mining operations has created an unstable investment climate for deep seabed mining at this time. Yet technological capabilities place commercial recovery of manganese nodules within the realm of possibility by 1983. Industry is waiting for a clear notion of governmental action before accelerating prototype mining programs in expectation of commercial development.

If we wish commercial recovery of manganese nodules to occur within the next few years, then we must reduce the risks associated with the adoption of an international treaty which would impose adverse restrictions on mining operations. The substitute bill directs that any international agreement assure U.S. citizens of nondiscriminatory access to the deep seabed and will protect their mining rights and the value of their investments. To provide less would be a disservice in terms of our need for a stable supply of minerals critical to our national security.

The bill encourages the successful negotiation of a comprehensive international Law of the Sea Treaty which will give legal definition to the principle that the mineral resources of the deep seabed are the common heritage of mankind. A special fund will be established from excise taxes on the minerals recovered. The proceeds of this fund will be available to the international community under such a treaty but subject to congressional appropriations. The bill does not in any way provide property rights to the seabed to ocean miners, but it does foster the continued and immediate development of technology necessary to develop the hard mineral resources of the deep seabed as soon as possible.

Mr. Speaker, this legislation is a masterful compromise of numerous interests. It is to our Nation's great advantage to adopt legislation which will promote the rapid development of deep seabed mining right away.

H.R. 12988 represents a great deal of work by many Members of this body. Working together, four House committees have shaped a compromise piece of legislation that is badly needed at this time. The Subcommittee on Oceanography, which is ably chaired by my Louisiana friend and colleague, JOHN BREAUX, has taken a chief leadership role and has held extensive hearings over the past three Congresses. Action on the measure has repeatedly been delayed in the hopes that a law of the sea treaty could be achieved.

We cannot wait any longer to establish a framework for the exploration and development of hard mineral resources in the deep seabed. This rule is a fair and just approach to resolving the remaining points of controversy in the compromise substitute, and I urge the adoption of the rule House Resolution 1240, which will permit the House to consider H.R. 12988 as a substitute for H.R. 3350.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, as explained by the gentleman from Louisiana, this rule permits consideration of H.R. 3350, Deep Seabed Hard Minerals Act. It involves 2 hours of general debate time divided equally between the Committees on Interior and Insular Affairs, International Relations, Merchant Marine and Fisheries, and Ways and Means. Each committee is to receive 30 minutes. Section 402(a) of the Congressional Budget Act, which is the May 15 reporting deadline, is waived.

It will be in order to consider the text of H.R. 12988 as an amendment in the nature of a substitute to H.R. 3350. The substitute is to be read for amendment as an original bill by titles instead of by sections. Clause 7 of rule XVI (the germaneness rule) and clause 5 of rule XXI (appropriations in a legislative measure) are waived against the substitute.

The original bill and the substitute are both open to all amendments which are germane to them respectively, except for title IV of the substitute. No amendment to title IV of the substitute, including a substitute for the substitute which would change title IV, are in order except amendments recommended by the Ways and Means Committee and an amendment printed in the June 5, 1978, CONGRESSIONAL RECORD by Representative STARK of California. These amendments will not be subject to amendment. Finally, there is a motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The purpose of this bill is to create an interim legal framework in the absence of an international treaty to indicate to other nations the extent to which such a treaty should regulate seabed mining and other such activities on the high seas. The minerals contemplated to be impacted by this legislation are cobalt, nickel, and manganese, which I understand are critical in the steelmaking process.

A licensing procedure of an interim nature is to be established to regulate deep ocean mining by U.S. citizens. U.S. deep sea mining companies will be required to pay a new tax based on the value of minerals extracted to be paid into a special fund. Money from the fund would be disbursed after the Law of the Sea Treaty is agreed upon for use by developing nations to obtain technology to mine the seabeds.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LONG of Louisiana. Mr. Speaker, I have no requests for time, and I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 10285, COMMODITY EXCHANGE ACT EXTENSION

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1221 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution, as follows:

H. RES. 1221

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 10285) to extend the Commodity Exchange Act, as amended, for four years. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and all points of order against said substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7, rule XVI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. SISK) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1221 provides for the consideration of H.R. 10285 which extends and amends the Commodity Exchange Act.

This is an open rule providing for 1 hour of general debate. The time is to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Agriculture.

The rule makes in order an amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Agriculture and now printed in the bill as an original text for purposes of amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Points of order are waived against the substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 7, rule XVI, the germaneness rule. The waiver is necessary because the bill as introduced provided only for an authorization through September 30, 1982, while the substitute makes more extensive changes in the Commodity Exchange Act.

As is customary when an amendment in the nature of a substitute is made in order, the rule provides for one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 10285 provides authorizations for 3 years for the Commodity Futures Trading Commission in the amount of $14.1 million for fiscal year 1979, $15 million for fiscal year 1980, and $16.2 million for fiscal year 1981.

In addition, the bill makes various changes in the Commodity Exchange Act to facilitate regulation of futures trading by the Commodity Futures Trading Commission and to address certain public concerns which have arisen since the inception of that agency in 1975.

The bill seeks to assure communication among Federal agencies which have some responsibility in the area of commodity exchange by requiring the Commission to obtain the views of the Treasury Department, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, and the Securities and Exchange Commission on areas of their jurisdiction.

Commodity option transactions, except in certain specified instances, are prohibited by the bill unless such transactions are expressly permitted under rules and regulations adopted by the Commission subsequent to the date of enactment of the bill.

The bill would delete the requirement that the Commission make public any information furnished a congressional committee. It also contains provisions for strengthening enforcement of the Commodity Exchange Act. The legislation seeks to improve the management and operations of the Commission.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 10285 is a very important bill for both commerce and the consumer in this country. I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 1221 so that we might proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself as much time as I may use.

Mr. Speaker, this is a 1 hour, open rule permitting consideration of H.R. 10285, the Commodity Exchange Act. It makes in order the substitute recommended by the Agriculture Committee now printed in the bill as an original bill for purposes of amendment. Clause 7 of rule XVI (the germaneness rule) is waived against the substitute. There is a motion to recommit with or without instructions.

This bill would extend the Commodity Futures Trading Commission for 3 years through September 30, 1981, and make various changes in the act to facilitate the regulation of futures trading by the Commission. In doing so the legislation prohibits commodity option transactions unless expressly permitted under rules and regulations adopted after date of enactment and after notice and opportunity for a hearing. The States are authorized to investigate or prosecute in civil actions violations of the act and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission Act. Certain sections in the bill strengthen the registration provisions with respect to futures commission merchants, brokers, and advisers; and Commissioners and specified Commission employees are prohibited from making any appearance before the Commission on behalf of any person or any matter for 1 year after termination of service with the Commission.

The bill authorizes $14.1 million for fiscal year 1979, $15 million for fiscal year 1980, and $16.2 million for fiscal year 1981.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. I yield to the gentleman from Nebraska.

Mrs. SMITH of Nebraska. Mr. Speaker, I am rather surprised that the commodity futures authorization is being considered at this particular time.

Only this morning the newspapers told us of the resignation of a high administration appointee. There was no doubt but that he should have resigned, but now this bill will again remind the Nation of the sorry record of appointments by the President since he assumed office.

That the Chairman of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission, Mr. David Gartner, used questionable judgment in accepting an extremely generous gift from an official of Archer Daniels Midland Co. is well known.

That the President asked Mr. Gartner to resign is a matter of record.

That the Chairman of the Commodity also well known.

If Mr. Gartner can sit as a regulator of a firm which has contributed to the benefit of he and his family, serious questions are raised about how effective the Commodity Futures Trading Commission can be under his chairmanship.

I do not suggest that we throw the baby out with the bathwater. I do suggest that the House take a hard look at this bill.

Sometime next week I intend to speak out on the Department of Agriculture, and I will include a few additional remarks on Mr. Gartner and the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. The Commission's independence from the Department of Agriculture is one illustration of the theme I intend to pursue.

In order to refresh the memories of those of you who may have pushed Mr. Gartner and his problems from your minds, I am inserting at this point the following news accounts from the Washington Post, the New York Times, and Feedstuffs:

[From the Washington Post, June 28, 1978]

GARTNER CLINGS TO TRADING COMMISSION POST

(By Jerry Knight)

David Gartner hung tough yesterday, clinging to his seat on the Commodity Futures Trading Commission in the face of a public demand for his resignation from his old Minnesota friend, Vice President Walter Mondale.

Echoing President Carter, Mondale said Gartner should quit because of "ethical appearances" involved in the gift of $72,000 worth of stock to Gartner's children by Dwayne Andreas, chairman of Archer-Daniels-Midland Corp., a major grain dealer regulated by the commission.

In an interview yesterday, Gartner denied any conflict of interest and accused his accusers of acting without having all the facts.

"When you get to talking about implications and accusations and appearances, you are really not being fair to a man," Gartner complained.

He vowed he will "at least establish there is no conflict of interest or appearance of conflict" during a scheduled appearance today before the Senate Agriculture Committee.

"There are an awful lot of people in this city who deal with issues and have friends who are involved with those issues," he added.

Gartner yesterday won an endorsement from CFTC Chairman William Bagley, who wrote to the Agriculture Committee on behalf of his fellow commission member.

Bagley did not make the letter public, but in an interview said Gartner's ties to Andreas and Archer-Daniels-Midland would not prevent him from "dealing with better than 90 percent of the business that comes before the commission."

But Gartner lost the public backing of Vice President Mondale, who worked with him for many years when both were protegees of the late Hubert Humphrey.

Mondale's public call for Gartner's resignation was no surprise, because it was Mondale's staff that had privately asked Gartner to quit last week. When Gartner refused, the White House went public, in the process raising questions about how the appointment was handled in the first place.

Mondale's first public comments on the matter were made in a previously scheduled interview with Associated Press and United Press International.

The vice president—who reportedly had a key role in naming Gartner to the $50,000-a-year CFTC post—said he was "greatly troubled" when he learned of the gift of ADM stock to Gartner's children.

Gartner himself made the gifts public, and in yesterday's interview said he had told Humphrey about the gifts, which were made when Gartner was on Humphrey's staff.

Saying "this has been a very unhappy situation for me," Mondale added, "I think he's an honest man. I think he made a mistake."

He said Gartner should resign "on the grounds that the ethical appearances surrounding that matter were such that he could not operate without public questioning of his integrity and the independence of his judgment."

Mondale said neither he nor President Carter knew of the stock gifts at the time Gartner's appointment was being considered. White House staff members, however, have acknowledged Gartner told them of the stock. They approved the appointment anyway, sending it to the Senate, where Gartner was confirmed in one day.

The Agriculture Committee, which now says it wants to question Gartner further, raised few questions about the stock at the original confirmation hearing.

Gartner refused to comment yesterday on the only new question raised since the hearing—whether some of the stock was transferred to him after the effective date of Senate ethics rules which banned such gifts. An aide described the date question as "a technicality."

One of the nation's biggest buyers and processors of corn, wheat and soybeans, Archer-Daniels-Midland frequently deals in grain futures.

CFTC sources said privately that Gartner's links with ADM Chairman Andreas were no different than the ties of other commissioners to the industry they regulate.

Commissioner Read P. Dunn worked for the National Cotton Council for more than 20 years before being named to the commission. Commissioner Robert L. Martin was a vice president of Cook Industries, another big grain company.

GARTNER INSISTS HE WON'T QUIT—STOCK GIFT IS NOT A VIOLATION, SAYS COMMODITY AIDE

WASHINGTON, June 28.—David Gartner, continuing to defy President Carter, said emphatically today that he would not resign as a member of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission despite the President's call for his resignation.

Even if Mr. Carter personally asked him to step down, Mr. Gartner told the Senate Agriculture Committee, "I would have to tell him I can't quit." The committee was questioning Mr. Gartner about a gift of $72,000 worth of grain company stock and whether it might be a conflict of interest.

Mr. Gartner reminded the panel that he had told the White House and Congress about his family's financial holdings, including the gift, several months ago. He declared that he had not violated any legal or moral standard in performing his $50,000-a-year job.

GRAIN STOCK HAS BEEN SOLD

He repeated his intention to disqualify himself if a conflict of interest arises in the future. He said the grain company stock, which was being held in trust for his children, had been sold.

"If I resigned, it would look to the public as an admission of wrongdoing," Mr. Gartner said. "I am not guilty of a wrongdoing." His wife and three of his four children were seated behind him in the crowded committee room.

When Senator Robert Dole, Republican of Kansas, asked if it was fair to reject a resignation request from President Carter, who had appointed him in the first place, Mr. Gartner said, "I think if there is any unfairness it's directed toward me."

The gift, which has become an embarrassment to the Carter Administration, consisted of shares in the Archer-Daniels-Midland Company. Its $2-billion-a-year operations are partly regulated by the commodity commission.

PRESIDENT'S TV APPEARANCE

President Carter, at a televised news conference Monday, called for Mr. Gartner's resignation. "The image of impropriety resulting from the acceptance by his children of a substantial gift leads me to think it would be better if he did resign," Mr. Carter said, adding that Mr. Gartner had not committed a crime. Yesterday Vice President Mondale, a longtime friend of Mr. Gartner, also called for his resignation.

Mr. Gartner told the committee that these public requests followed private suggestions from top Administration aides that he resign. Last Thursday, he said, the Vice President's chief of staff, Richard Moe, asked him to quit. The next morning, he said, so did Hamilton Jordan, a Presidential assistant.

But Mr. Gartner said no problems had been raised when he told the White House staff about the gift months ago. A White House source said today that staff personnel had concluded there was no reason to inform the President of the gift because Mr. Gartner had not yet been nominated.

Mr. Gartner told the committee today that Dwayne Andreas, who donated the gift, had never asked him for "any special favors . . . nor have I extended any special favors to him." Mr. Andreas is chairman of Archer-Daniels-Midland.

The Senate has no authority to remove Mr. Gartner from his post at the independent regulatory agency. Apparently President Carter also lacks such authority.

Several members of the committee, noting Mr. Gartner's statement that he had earlier provided all relevant information, expressed sympathy for Mr. Gartner, once an aide to Hubert H. Humphrey, the late Democratic Senator from Minnesota.

"I want to thank you for coming here and facing this bunch of hyenas," said Senator S. I. Hayakawa, Republican of California. But Senator Richard G. Lugar, an Indiana Republican who voted for Mr. Gartner's confirmation in May, said he would change his mind if there were another vote.

SWIFT APPROVAL IN RETROSPECT

Senator Dole said that apparently it would have been better if more time had elapsed between the committee's confirmation vote and the full Senate's approval of Mr. Gartner's nomination. Both occurred May 17.

In another development today, the House, apparently reacting to the Gartner controversy, decided to delay action on legislation that would extend appropriations for the Commodity Futures Trading Commission's work.

House leadership sources, asking not to be identified, said a bill to reauthorize the three-year-old agency and strengthen some of its powers was being considered for House action tomorrow. But Representative Thomas S. Foley, the Washington Democrat who is chairman of the House Agriculture Committee, reportedly had the measure withdrawn from the calendar.

The Senate is considering similar authorizing legislation for the agency.

DAVID GARTNER'S OBLIGATIONS

If the circumstances surrounding the appointment of David Gartner to the Commodity Futures Trading Commission seem confusing, that is due mainly to the White House treatment of his case. The facts themselves are not complicated.

Between 1975 and 1977, Mr. Gartner, then an aide to Senator Hubert Humphrey, accepted on behalf of his children $72,000 worth of stock from Dwayne Andreas, chairman of the Archer-Daniels-Midland Company, a big grain firm. Mr. Gartner informed the White House of the gift before President Carter named him to the commission, which supervises some of the $2-billion company's activities. He was appointed nonetheless. At his confirmation hearing in May, he informed a Senate committee of the gift and, pressed by Senator Bellmon, promised that the shares would be sold.

Now the Administration, embarrassed by the attention given to the Gartner-Andreas connection, has been putting pressure on its appointee to resign. He has refused because that would appear to be an admission of wrongdoing. So indeed it might—and for this Mr. Gartner deserves an apology from the President for placing him in so awkward a position.

But the fact that Mr. Gartner has been inconsiderately treated by the Administration does not entitle him to a position on the Commodity Futures Trading Commission. Although there is no evidence of wrongdoing, most people must wonder over the event: so generous a gift—for what? Whatever the answer to that interesting question, the receipt of such a gift from such a firm is a very poor recommendation for such a job. Moreover, it has now been reported that for 15 years, Mr. Gartner has been receiving loans, some without collateral, from a bank owned by Archer-Daniels. Whatever the details of the Andreas-Gartner relationship, it is too close for public comfort.

Mr. Gartner has pledged that as a member of the commission he would not involve himself in any matter affecting Archer-Daniels. That is the least he could do. Even better would be a resignation.

[From Feedstuffs, June 19, 1978]

A NEW CALL FOR GARTNER'S RESIGNATION

The hasty Senate confirmation of David Gartner as a member of the Commodity Futures Trading Commission on May 17 is beginning to bring on some second thoughts by a number of senators and congressmen. Gartner, the administrative assistant for many years to the late Sen. Hubert Humphrey, breezed through a Senate Agriculture Committee hearing and a full Senate vote on the same day, even though he revealed during the hearing that he had a long, close relationship with Dwayne Andreas, the chairman of Archer Daniels Midland Co., one of the country's largest agribusinesses, and that Gartner's children received $72,000 in ADM stock as gifts from Andreas and his daughter. Gartner promised the senators that he would have the ADM stock, held in a trust fund, sold off and that he would refrain from matters affecting ADM's business.

But now the impropriety of Gartner's appointment is beginning to sink in. Four congressmen wrote President Carter on June 9 questioning the wisdom of Gartner's appointment to a post which regulates much of ADM's business. In their letter, the four said, "Almost any decision concerning the commodities market will impact on ADM's wide ranging operations." Under the circumstances, they added, "Gartner should not have sought the job and the nomination should not have been made."

Last week Sen. Howard Baker said he would ask the President to call for Gartner's resignation. And Sen. Jesse Helms, a member of the Senate Ag Committee, asked for and got the committee to recall Gartner for further questioning.

There is considerable skepticism that Gartner can represent the public interest on the CFTC in view of his cozy relationship, through Sen. Humphrey, with Andreas. (Andreas was a long time supporter of the late senator.) If Gartner cannot see the conflict of interest, even at this point, it is questionable whether he really understands the business of the CFTC.

To remain on the commission at this point, Gartner only casts more doubt on the ability of the CFTC to deal squarely with the multibillion dollar commodity trading industry. He should resign, and President Carter should nominate someone who can represent the public interest, not the interest of friends.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

PROVIDING FOR CONSIDERATION OF H.R. 7577, ECONOMIC OPPORTUNITY AND COMMUNITY SERVICES AMENDMENTS

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, by direction of the Committee on Rules, I call up House Resolution 1234 and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the resolution as follows:

H. RES. 1234

Resolved, That upon the adoption of this resolution it shall be in order to move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 7577) to amend the Economic Opportunity Act of 1964, and for other purposes. After general debate, which shall be confined to the bill and shall continue not to exceed one hour, to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor, the bill shall be read for amendment under the five-minute rule. It shall be in order to consider the amendment in the nature of a substitute recommended by the Committee on Education and Labor now printed in the bill as an original bill for the purpose of amendment under the five-minute rule, and all points of order against said amendment for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5, rule XXI are hereby waived. At the conclusion of the consideration of the bill for amendment, the Committee shall rise and report the bill to the House with such amendments as may have been adopted, and any Member may demand a separate vote in the House on any amendment adopted in the Committee of the Whole to the bill or to the committee amendment in the nature of a substitute. The previous question shall be considered as ordered on the bill and amendments thereto to final passage without intervening motion except one motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from California (Mr. SISK) is recognized for 1 hour.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I yield 30 minutes to the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. ANDERSON), pending which I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Resolution 1234 provides for the consideration of H.R. 7577, the Economic Opportunity and Community Services Amendments of 1978.

This is a completely open rule allowing 1 hour for general debate. The time is to be equally divided and controlled by the chairman and ranking minority member of the Committee on Education and Labor.

The rule makes in order an amendment in the nature of a substitute now printed in the bill as an original text for the purposes of amendment under the 5-minute rule.

Points of order are waived for the substitute for failure to comply with the provisions of clause 5, rule XXI, prohibiting appropriations in a legislative measure. The waiver is necessary because several sections of the bill allocate existing appropriations for new purposes.

The rule also makes in order one motion to recommit with or without instruction prior to final passage of the bill.

Mr. Speaker, the purpose of H.R. 7577 is to strengthen and improve the operations of the Community Service Administration as well as to provide authorizations for CSA, Head Start, Follow Through, and the Native American programs. The bill encourages the Director of CSA to streamline and decentralize the management of CSA by providing greater authority for regional and local administration of program operations.

Financial assistance formulas for both community action agencies and the Head Start program are revised. The maximum limit for financial assistance to a community action agency is raised from the current 60 to 80 percent. The new formula for Head Start is intended to eventually equalize the allotments among all States on the basis of service of eligible children under the program.

In addition, the bill eliminates some programs to decrease the duplication of social services. Other programs are brought under more careful congressional review.

Mr. Speaker, H.R. 7577 is designed to improve the efficiency of some of our social service programs which assist the economically deprived. I urge my colleagues to adopt House Resolution 1234 so that we might proceed to its consideration.

Mr. ANDERSON of Illinois. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, this is a 1-hour, open rule allowing the consideration of H.R. 7577, the Economic Opportunity and Community Services Amendments of 1978. It will be in order to consider a substitute recommended by the Education and Labor Committee now printed in the bill as an original bill for purposes of amendment. Clause 5 of rule XXI (appropriations in a legislative measure) is waived against the substitute because of certain provisions which allocate funds. There is a motion to recommit with or without instructions.

The purpose of this bill is to extend authorizations for programs administered by the Community Service Administration (CSA), for the Head Start and Follow Through programs, and for Native American programs. The legislation provides for a decentralization of management by giving greater authority to regional offices and for a return to the 80–20 ratio for Federal financial assistance to community action agencies. A new fund formula is provided for Head Start.

The estimated costs of this measure are $774 million in fiscal year 1979, $1,466 billion in fiscal year 1980, $1.612 billion in fiscal year 1981, $800 million in fiscal year 1982, and $152 million in fiscal year 1983.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Speaker, I move the previous question on the resolution.

The previous question was ordered.

The resolution was agreed to.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA APPROPRIATION ACT, 1979

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker, I move that the House resolve itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill (H.R. 13468) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for other purposes, and pending that motion, Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous-consent that general debate be limited to not to exceed 1 hour, and that the time be equally divided and controlled by the gentleman from California (Mr. BURGENER) and myself.

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SEIBERLING). Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The the question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER).

The motion was agreed to.

IN THE COMMITTEE OF THE WHOLE

Accordingly the House resolved itself into the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union for the consideration of the bill H.R. 13468, with Mr. DINGELL in the Chair.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

By unanimous consent, the first reading of the bill was dispensed with.

The CHAIRMAN. Under the unanimous-consent agreement, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) will be recognized for 30 minutes, and the gentleman from California (Mr. BURGENER) will be recognized for 30 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER).

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 10 minutes.

Mr. Chairman, at this time, we submit for your approval the annual District of Columbia appropriations bill for fiscal year 1979. As chairman of the Subcommittee on the District of Columbia Budget, it is a distinct honor for me to serve with all of the members of this subcommittee. We have on our subcommittee Mr. GIAIMO of Connecticut, Mr. BURGENER of California, Mr. WILSON of Texas, Mr. KEMP of New York, Mr. MCKAY of Utah, Mrs. BURKE of California and Mr. BENJAMIN of Indiana. Mr. Chairman, all of these Members are outstanding Members of the House of Representatives and have made every effort to see that this bill, which we present today, is a good one.

We submit to the House of Representatives a balanced budget for the District of Columbia and we have a cash carryover of $567,000. During the hearings it developed that the District of Columbia had underestimated the total revenue for the District of Columbia for fiscal year 1979 in the approximate amount of $35 million. In marking up this bill, we took into consideration the additional revenue to be received by the District of Columbia for fiscal year 1979.

Mr. Chairman, we have approximately 705,000 people in the city of Washington and the total amount available under the bill that we present for your consideration today is $1,753,753,800. To give you some idea as to the amount involved and the number of people, we compared the District budget with the budget of the State of California, which as you know, has the largest population of the 50 States. California will have a budget for fiscal year 1979 of some $14.7 billion. The population in California today is approximately 21,520,000.

The District of Columbia will have a total sum of $1,753,753,800 for expenditure during fiscal year 1979. Approximately 47 percent of the total resources will be financed from the various Federal funds available to the District. Based on recommendations in the bill, a total of $698,474,900 in Federal funds will be available to the government of the District of Columbia during the new fiscal year. This total includes the Federal payment for revenue sharing, countercyclical funds and Federal grants.

For payment of water and sewer facilities we recommend $10,300,000. In addition to the Federal payment, the District of Columbia will receive in Federal grants $296,941,300, for revenue sharing the District will receive $28,818,000, for countercyclical funds $5,182,000, and for Federal reimbursements $93,233,600.

In this bill, Mr. Chairman, we recommend a Federal payment of $264 million. This is a reduction of $53 million in the amount requested and $12 million below the 1978 fiscal year level. This Federal payment is also $12 million below the 1977 fiscal year level.

The District of Columbia government currently owes the Federal Treasury some $1.3 billion primarily for loans obtained to finance long-term improvements to the city's capital outlay program. Under the terms of this bill $111,700,000 is provided for repayment of loans and interest to the Federal Government. The total indebtedness is amortized over a period of years and the District government is current in its indebtedness payments.

We authorize and recommend to the committee that 37,906 positions be authorized for the District of Columbia Government for fiscal year 1979. The request was for 38,738. Under the provisions of this bill, we fund 36,846 positions. A total of 222 new postions were requested for the District of Columbia government and 149 for the District of Columbia General Hospital. Mr. Chairman, we do not recommend any of these positions to the committee.

We have in the police department 4,141 men and women in uniform and we provide funds in this bill for this number. As you will recall, in the 1978 fiscal year budget we had to restore $1,243,000 which prevented the reduction in the force of 186 officers recommended by the city. In this bill, the funds are provided for 100 uniformed police who would have been cut if the recommendation of the District of Columbia government had been accepted. Carrying out the provisions of the 1978 fiscal year, the 100 uniformed police will continue the force of 4,141.

Mr. Chairman, we have too many employees in the District of Columbia Government. Down through the years, we have insisted that reductions be made and finally we are down to a total of 36,846 which will be funded in this bill. The Federal grants received will provide for additional positions not provided for in this bill and this will bring the total number of employees working for the city up to about 48,000. The main reason for deleting the request for 222 new positions for the city and 149 for D.C. General Hospital is due to the fact that we now have too many employees and further reductions should be made.

The budget proposed a Federal loan appropriation totaling $129,790,000. The committee has been advised that sufficient authority remains from previous loan appropriations to finance the capital outlay program planned for fiscal year 1979, including projects funded in prior years as well as those recommended in the accompanying bill. Therefore, no new loan appropriations are recommended in the bill for the next fiscal year.

Our committee recommends $93,718,500 for operating expenses; $266,473,800 for public safety; $282,201,200 for education; $18,392,700 for recreation; $284,767,700 for human resources; $71,380,900 for transportation; $72,962,500 for environmental services; $69,300,000 for personal services; $72,800 for settlement of claims and suits; $111,700,000 for repayment of loans and interest; $77,215,000 for capital outlay.

Mr. Chairman, we have called attention in our report to certain matters pertaining to the percentage of disability retirements in the police and fire departments. Beginning some 9 years ago, we started discussing this matter with the District officials urging that a closer examination be given to those presenting themselves for disability retirement. This year, in addition to the usual discussions with the chiefs of the fire department and police department, we had before the committee the members of the Police and Firemen's Retirement and Relief Board.

At that time in our discussion, we stated very frankly to the members of this board that the system now in use whereby more disability retirements were approved than in any other city throughout the United States, was nothing more than a racket and must be stopped. Disability retirements have been more the rule than the exception and this practice must not be allowed to continue. We set forth on page 23 of our report a table showing the percentage of disability retirements from 1966 through 1977. The number of retirements and the disability retirements during this period are as follows:

| Calendar year | Total | Disability | Percent |
|---|---|---|---|
| 1966 | 201 | 177 | 88 |
| 1967 | 201 | 185 | 92 |
| 1968 | 254 | 244 | 96 |
| 1969 | 241 | 237 | 98 |
| 1970 | 176 | 171 | 97 |
| 1971 | 234 | 194 | 83 |
| 1972 | 191 | 146 | 76 |
| 1973 | 187 | 112 | 60 |
| 1974 | 145 | 75 | 52 |
| 1975 | 175 | 108 | 62 |
| 1976 | 171 | 102 | 60 |
| 1977 | 175 | 96 | 55 |

Our investigation discloses Mr. Chairman, that in Los Angeles there are some 5,481 police and firemen on retirement and that 81 percent of those who retired did so through normal service retirement and 19 percent are disability retirees. In New York City, the number is 15,601 with 81 percent on normal service retirement and 19 percent on disability. In Pittsburgh the number is 1,131 with 84 percent on normal service retirement and 16 percent on disability retirement. In Detroit, the number is 4,320 with 90 percent on normal service retirement and 10 percent on disability retirement.

In comparison with other police and fire retirement systems, the District's record so far as percentage of disability retirements is concerned, is the highest of any major city in the Nation. From 1973 through 1977, a total of 488 police officers and firefighters were added to the disability roles which constitutes nearly three of every five retirements awarded during the last 5 years. One of the tables that we set forth in our report, Mr. Chairman, shows that one-third of these disability retirees had been on the force 10 years or less. Our committee also found that at least 40 percent of those retiring on disability in the past 5 years have obtained employment despite their disabling condition. In fact, those with outside jobs outnumber those who are unemployed by a margin of 4 to 3. In addition, Mr. Chairman, 2 out of every 3 disability retirees with outside jobs are employed on a full-time basis and several are holding two jobs—a full-time position as well as a part-time job. The types of employment vary but in most instances require a state of health comparable to that required for many police and firefighter duties.

Accordingly, Mr. Chairman, our committee has reduced the 1979 requests for police pension and relief and firemen's retirement and disability $10 million of which $7,050,000 relates to police pensions and $2,950,000 is for the fire department. A total of $54,937,500 will be available for these two accounts for pension payments in fiscal year 1979.

Mr. Chairman, a request was made for an additional amount of $5,057,100 for increased payments for welfare. We do not recommend this request. In the District of Columbia we have 100,064 people on welfare.

During the past 14 years, we have constructed a number of new school buildings in our Nation's Capital. We are now over-constructed as far as classrooms are concerned. We have a total of 206 buildings with 195 used for teaching the students and 11 for administrative purposes. Recently the Superintendent of Public Schools requested that 23 more buildings be closed but the Board only granted approval to close 9. The total school enrollment at this time is 111,700. The average loss in school population during the past 3 years was 4,956. The pupil per capita expenditure totals $2,136; $1,896 is from District funds and $240 is from Federal funds.

You will be interested to know, Mr. Chairman, that for fiscal year 1978, it will cost $338,802 to replace broken window panes in school buildings. In the 1976 fiscal year the amount was $605,092. We have ascertained from our investigation that very few windows are broken out of the school buildings that are in the community school program. Here the buildings are used and respected, not only by the adults, but by the students.

The committee recommends the amount of $500,000 for the Advisory Neighborhood Commissions. A total of $282,201,200 is recommended for the operation of the public school system and the University of the District of Columbia.

The committee recommends a total of $77,215,000 for the fiscal year 1979 Capital improvements program consisting of repayment of hospital grants and 32 construction projects. This allowance is $52,575,000 less than requested. The two projects which we recommend be eliminated are the dog pound and the additional funding for the Washington Civic Center.

Mr. Chairman, the committee has deferred action on the requested appropriation of $49 million for construction of the Washington Civic Center. The initial appropriation for the center totaling $27 million was contained in the 1978 District of Columbia Appropriation Act, Public Law 95–288, approved June 5, 1978. This appropriation was approved subject to the city's full compliance with certain conditions and actions set out in the language of the act and in the joint explanatory statement of the Committee of Conference. Until the actions and conditions are complied with, the sum of $49 million will not be necessary. Upon compliance with those actions and conditions set forth in Public Law 95–288, we will recommend the appropriation of the $49 million to continue this project under construction.

Mr. Chairman, we recommend this bill to the committee and respectfully request that the bill be accepted as reported.

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield to our distinguished friend and member of the subcommittee, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GIAIMO).

Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Chairman, I want to commend the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER), the chairman of the District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee, for doing what I consider to be an excellent job. The bill that the chairman is bringing before this body is well within the budget constraints that this House adopted and that this Congress adopted. I believe the gentleman from Kentucky, the chairman of the subcommittee, has rendered this body great service in holding the line on unnecessary spending.

Mr. Chairman, the D.C. appropriation bill provides $277 million in Federal funds for the District of Columbia. This amount is $183 million in budget authority and $162 million in outlays below the targets set in the first budget resolution. The first resolution assumed a total of $460 million in budget authority and $438 million in outlays.

I think this is a budget that the District can, should, and must live with. I want to commend the chairman and my colleagues on the subcommittee for a job well done.

I recommend passage of the D.C. appropriation bill as reported.

Mr. NATCHER. I want to thank the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GIAIMO).

Now, there is one matter, Mr. Chairman, that I would like to call to your attention. As the Members have heard today, one of our colleagues was mugged last night. This is one of a number of instances that we have had this year in our Nation's Capital.

Each year, Mr. Chairman, we say to the District of Columbia: "You have too many employees. You have about 705,000 people living in the city and about 47,000 or 48,000 employees. Why do you not cut down on the number of employees?" And then in the next budget they present to the Congress they have cut the police department—always the police department, Mr. Chairman. In 1977 they cut the police department which meant a reduction of 105 police officers. We put $901,600 back into the budget to prevent that reduction. In 1978 they cut the police department again and the committee added $1,243,000 above what the city requested to prevent the reduction of 186 officers and to maintain the police strength at 4,141. After two consecutive years of attempts by the city to reduce the police department on one occasion a little over 100 and on another occasion a little over 180, and in this bill for fiscal year 1979 by 100, we still say to the city officials: "The people who pay the taxes that maintain this city, the people who come from the 50 States to this our Nation's Capital, the capital city, they have the right to walk the streets of this city and feel they are protected and will not be robbed and will not be mugged."

This year again, Mr. Chairman, the city has come in with a budget that would reduce the police department by 100 officers. We put them back. Mr. Chairman, including the necessary funding and we hope the Committee approves our action.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Chairman, the minority fully supports the committee report and the appropriations bill for the District of Columbia for the fiscal year 1979.

May I just say that it is a real privilege to serve under the distinguished chairman of the full Committee on the District of Columbia, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) who has given the District of Columbia for so many years such able leadership and complete understanding of the needs of the people of this community in addition to his own district.

I might point out, Mr. Chairman, that this is an austere and very fiscally responsible budget. It is substantially below the request of the President and below the request of the District of Columbia but yet we believe firmly that it meets all the needs of the citizens of the District of Columbia.

We would point out that there are no new positions in this budget nor are there any job losses, any layoffs or discontinuances, and we might also point out that there is a declining population in the District of Columbia. The public schools, funded through this budget, have an enrollment of about 4,000 fewer this year than last, and the same predicted for next year, as opposed to this year.

In addition to the declining population both general population and schools, there is a genuine business boom occurring in the District of Columbia, with local increases in tax collections other than property taxes. I commend the City Council for the actions they are taking to hold down the property taxes, but other local revenues such as sales taxes and others are increased by $35 million, meaning a very substantial increase in the business climate here in the District of Columbia.

I would point out there are no moneys in this budget for the Convention Center.

The Center is not canceled but it is deferred because they still have the carryover of last year's funds to do the preliminary planning, and there is no new money in this budget for the Convention Center.

I would say in terms of the retirement pension fund, we have arbitrarily but I think rather carefully reduced this amount by $10 million. It is entirely possible that we may have to come back later in the year to make sure that we fund under the law any disability payments that are truly earned. However, our distinguished chairman pointed out that we have severe inequities in this retirement system.

I would point out that a few years ago here in the District of Columbia 98 percent of all the police and firemen retired on disability. I would suggest that the morale in the Department might have been rather high at that time, but the morale of the taxpayers must have been very low. The current retirements on disability are around 55 percent, which are also very, very high. We have reduced this amount by $10 million so that if more is needed, the retirement board will have to come up and justify the amounts.

There are changes in the pension law that are desperately needed, both at the District level in local government and here in the Congress. We are hopeful that this reduction of this amount will help draw attention to that and force these very much needed reforms to occur sooner than later.

I think all in all, Mr. Chairman, this is a good, sound budget, admittedly an austere one, but most certainly one which will meet all of the legitimate needs of the District of Columbia, and I firmly recommend its adoption.

Mr. Chairman, I reserve the remainder of my time.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 5 minutes to the distinguished gentleman from California (Mr. SISK).

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, I appreciate the gentleman from Kentucky for yielding. For a number of years—having lived in the District now some 20 years—I have been interested in local affairs. In particular in the last 8 or 10 years my colleague, the gentleman from New York (Mr. HORTON), and some others have been interested in some local endeavors here in connection with professional sports and some other things, and along with that we have been concerned about the attitude of people from other areas, owners of other teams around over the country.

One of the big problems we have run into traditionally has been the question of security. Constantly, it has been charged that our stadium, for example, out here is in the wrong place and that people simply will not attend a sporting contest out there. We have met with the police. We have discussed this matter with the city, the Mayor, and with a variety of people, and we have been concerned about this whole question. I do not agree that in fact there is any substantial danger in connection with that stadium, since I happen to live a matter of about 5 minutes from it, and I think I live in a fairly safe neighborhood. But having said that, it is a recognized fact that, unfortunately, one of the weaknesses of the local government here is a lack of understanding about security and what security means.

In connection with the training, for example, of their police, I have an amendment which I was asked to offer. I shall not offer the amendment because it will actually amount to legislation on an appropriation bill, but it deals basically with some of the problems in connection with the training of policemen in our city.

I was intrigued by the comments of the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) a little while ago about the fact that anytime there is pressure to cut personnel, they immediately cut out the police. Again this is a thing that causes me real concern as a resident of this city. There is a total lack of understanding of the necessity of security, and it is one of the reasons why I have a good deal of concern about giving this city and the local city council any additional powers in connection with taxation and in connection with any additional powers in the city, in view of the fact that it is the Nation's Capital, and in view of the fact that I have constituents, as does every other Member of Congress have constituents, coming from the 50 States every day of the year, and these people are entitled to some security. This is their capital. This is their Nation's Capital. I simply want to urge the Committee—and I am sure they have, based upon what our good friend, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER) has said—to look at this whole question of security and the extent to which it is being emphasized, as I said, in connection with the request here.

I happen to know a young man who is on the local police force. He happens to have become a very expert marksman, and yet people in that field in this city get very little encouragement. In fact, they get no transportation paid, no encouragement to go to meets, to training courses in expert marksmanship in other areas, such as, for example, in Montgomery County where they pay their transportation and do a good deal of things to give incentive to get them better trained.

It seems as though we tend here to hire these people, put a gun on their hips and turn them loose. Unfortunately, we know of the consequences from that in connection with some of the things that happen here where from time to time these men have indicated a lack of proper training.

I would hope that, in fact, we would see more concentration on training, giving the opportunity for a law enforcement officer to have better training, a better understanding of what the responsibilities and obligations are and then, in fact, the government of the District of Columbia becomes a little more security conscious in connection with the protection of not only their own citizens, because they are the ones generally taking the brunt of the crime going on, particularly street crime, but also with the protection of our constituency around the country.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, I would like to commend the gentleman on his observations of law enforcement; but just add this one point, that if it were not for the chairman, the gentleman from Kentucky (Mr. NATCHER), and I think this has been true over the years, the Washington District of Columbia Police Force would be much smaller than it is today. It is a great tribute to the chairman that the gentleman has been a strong advocate of good police protection in this city.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from California (Mr. SISK) has expired.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield 2 additional minutes to the gentleman from California.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, I want to join with my colleagues from California in recognition of what the gentleman from Kentucky has done. I well understand that year after year the gentleman has had to bring pressure on the city and the city powers to handle some of these things; so certainly I want to commend the gentleman, because I do recognize that without the gentleman's efforts we would probably be in far worse shape than we are.

Mr. JOHN T. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. SISK. I yield to the gentleman from Indiana.

Mr. JOHN T. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, I do not know how to point the finger, and I do not want to point the finger to anyone for any particular blame; but just last week the city of Cleveland was having some labor problems with their police force and the paper was relating that there were 1,500 policemen in the city of Cleveland, which is a city about the same size as the District of Columbia, and yet we have 5,000 policemen here. We have three times as many policemen as a similar sized city, and yet crime goes on here. Something needs to be done, but I do not know what it is.

Mr. SISK. Mr. Chairman, that is one of the points we are concerned about, are we doing the kind of training, are we doing the kind of community relationship that is necessary?

We have a massive police force compared to other cities, yet we have a city that, unfortunately, has a reputation of not being very safe; so it must mean the city fathers are not doing the kind of training and community relations job that they should be doing. All I am urging is that they should be doing that right now.

Mr. JOHN T. MYERS. Mr. Chairman, if the gentleman will yield further, I do not want to be pointing the finger at the committee, because I served on the committee and I know the tremendous job the ranking member has done and the committee has done through the years; yet we still have a job to do.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I yield myself 1 additional minute.

Mr. Chairman, I have yielded myself this minute to say to the members of the committee that it is a distinct honor and a privilege for me to serve on this subcommittee with my friend, the ranking minority Member, the gentleman from California (Mr. BURGENER).

Mr. Chairman, the gentleman from California (Mr. BURGENER) is one of the able Members of this Congress. It has been a distinct honor and a privilege for me to serve with the gentleman on this subcommittee, along with the other members of the subcommittee. He is always most cooperative and contributes greatly to our committe work. He is always present for our hearings and has supported the committee to the fullest in the preparation and presentation of this bill.

This is a right difficult subcommittee, Mr. Chairman, as the Members well know, and all the Members on both sides of the aisle politically on this subcommittee do a good job. Mr. Chairman, it is an honor for me to serve with them.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say that we have an excellent staff. Americo S. Miconi and Earl C. Silsby are the staff assistants to our subcommittee and they serve us well. Mr. Miconi is taking over as staff assistant to our subcommittee after serving 7 years with Mr. Silsby. This is the way it should be as he is experienced in dealing with the District's budget and committee work in general. He has proven that he is well qualified to hold the position.

Mr. Chairman, I would also like you to know that Mr. Silsby, who has served on the committee staff for almost 32 years and for the past 16 years has been the clerk of our D.C. Subcommittee, plans to retire on December 31 of this year after 36 years and 4 months of Federal Government service. He was appointed to the staff on February 16, 1947, after 4 years of military service with the U.S. Navy and a brief resumption of employment with the U.S. Employment Service, by John Taber of New York, who was chairman of the Committee on Appropriations during the 79th and 80th Congresses.

Mr. Silsby is one of the senior members of the committee staff, and has been assigned both as an administrative assistant to the full committee as well as clerk to several subcommittees during his almost 32 years with the committee. He has served under three full committee chairmen: Mr. Taber of New York, Clarence Cannon of Missouri, and our present distinguished chairman, the gentleman from Texas (Mr. MAHON). His service has included assignments as clerk to the Army panel of the Defense Subcommittee as well as a staff assistant to the full Defense Subcommittee, clerk to the Commerce Subcommittee and the Subcommittee on General Government Matters, assistant clerk to the State-Justice-Commerce and Judiciary Subcommittee, clerk of the Legislative Branch Subcommittee, and also clerk to the District of Columbia Subcommittee.

For the past 16 years, Earl has been the principal clerk to the Subcommittee on District of Columbia Appropriations, and in 1971 he was also designated principal clerk to the Subcommittee on Legislative Branch Appropriations, and in these capacities has the distinction of serving simultaneously as principal clerk to two subcommittees of the Committee on Appropriations for the past 7 years.

In describing Earl Silsby, the words loyal, able, and dedicated certainly apply. As I just noted, he has served as principal clerk on our Subcommittee on the District of Columbia budget for 16 years. This is one of the most difficult assignments on our committee since this is the one budget that must be balanced at the time it is presented, with revenues and expenditures coming out even.

I have no further requests for time, Mr. Chairman, and I ask that the Clerk do now read.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, I have no requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The CHAIRMAN. The Clerk will read.

The Clerk proceeded to read the bill.

Mr. NATCHER (during the reading). Mr. Chairman, I ask unanimous consent that the bill be considered as read and open to amendment at any point.

The CHAIRMAN. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there points of order on the bill?

The Chair hears none.

Are there amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. MILLER OF OHIO

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

(The portion of the bill to which the amendment relates is as follows:)

TITLE II—DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

FEDERAL PAYMENT TO THE DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA

For payment to the District of Columbia for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, $264,000,000, as authorized by the District of Columbia Self-Government and Governmental Reorganization Act, Public Law 93-198, as amended (D.C. Code 47-2501d); and $10,300,000 in lieu of reimbursements for charges for water and water services and sanitary sewer services furnished to facilities of the United States Government as authorized by the Act of May 18, 1954, as amended (D.C. Code 43-1541 and 1611).

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. MILLER of Ohio: On page 2, line 25, strike out "$264,000,000" and insert in lieu thereof "$258,720,000".

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, this is a reduction-in-spending amendment. It is a little different than the normal 2-percent amendment that we have offered to other appropriation bills. This reduces only the Federal payment by 2 percent, and that amounts to $5.2 million. It goes from $264 million to $258,720,000.

That is what the amendment proposes, and it is a reduction in only the Federal payment section. I think those Members who have the report before them should look at page 11 and see how the Federal payment has increased, primarily over the last 10 years. We need not go back quite that far.

In 1969 we had a Federal payment of $89 million, and in 1970 we had a payment of $116 million, up $27 million. Now in 1979 we have a payment proposed of $264 million. When we compare that with the $116 million 10 years ago, in the fiscal year 1969, we find that it is an increase of $148 million, more than double—far more than double.

I have before me articles from newspapers that were published only recently. I have an article from the Washington Post of today stating that a third of the Federal housing aid to the city was spent for overhead and management. That is a third of it.

The Washington Post of July 20 carried this headline: "Auditor: Agencies Make 'Back Door' Transfers." The Washington Star of Wednesday, July 19, had an editorial entitled "CETA—District Style."

Now, when they are speaking of CETA, some of the items that were listed in the editorial tell us that we had emergency employment money—that is the CETA funds—used to pay 60 council employees. CETA funds went to pay salaries of some 60 council staffers, and they were paid $10,000 to $20,000 a year.

This is money that was to be used for the severely disadvantaged, but it is used in management. And it appears it pays to know someone, because then they are shifted into a position where they can collect some $10,000 to $20,000 a year.

Recently, a District of Columbia Council committee moved to reduce taxes for homeowners in the District 29 cents per hundred. It would amount to something around $141 a year. And I think it is time for us in the Congress to give that tax relief to other taxpayers, as well, to our taxpayers back in our congressional districts.

Mr. Chairman, I know we will hear that the bill has been cut, and I want to say that the chairman of the committee, Mr. NATCHER, has worked hard, has worked diligently to reduce the bill. The gentleman from California (Mr. BURGENER) has also worked to reduce the bill. They have put in long hours. Many other members of the committee also should feel that they have done the proper type of job.

It seems to me at this point we could easily reduce the Federal payment $5.2 million and never harm a thing. We have too many people taking advantage of the positions that they have in the District of Columbia government.

The CHAIRMAN. The time of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER) has expired.

(On request of Mr. MAHON and by unanimous consent, Mr. MILLER of Ohio was allowed to proceed for 1 additional minute.)

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. I yield to the distinguished gentleman from Texas, the chairman of the Committee on Appropriations.

Mr. MAHON. Mr. Chairman, I have heard the glowing tributes made about the chairman and the other members of the subcommittee, and I just wonder if the gentleman thinks we should also say they have done a good job. They have presented a balanced program in this bill. It seems to me that we ought to reward their efforts by supporting them on the bill that is laid out before us.

I realize that the gentleman has called attention to the necessity for reducing expenditures. That is all well and good. But it seems to me, in view of the situation, that the 2-percent amendment should not be attached. I was wondering if the gentleman does not really feel that way about it himself, although he feels somewhat compelled to offer the the amendment.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I feel compelled to offer the 2-percent amendment, because it was stated by the gentleman from Kentucky that our taxpayers helped to pay, as an example, $338,000 to replace windowpanes in the schools.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, I rise in opposition to the amendment.

Mr. Chairman, normally I vote with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER) on these reductions on these appropriations bills, and I want to commend him for what he has done in the past. I think this time we have sort of beat him to it. I think it would be a mistake to reduce this any further.

Under this present bill we have a balanced budget for the District of Columbia—admittedly not as much money as they would like to receive, but it is in balance, with a modest surplus of some $567,000. This amendment would place it out of balance, and particularly since we have taken the $10 million out of the police and fire pension funds, some of which may have to be restored at a later date, and I really believe that this amendment at this time would not be in the interest of the Nation or in the interest of the District of Columbia.

I would point out that the Federal payment this year is only 20 percent, versus the overall District budget, whereas in the past 4 or 5 years it has been running as high as 25 percent. So we have trimmed it down, Mr. Chairman, and I think, as much as I normally agree with the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER) and his amendments, at this time it is not in order.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move to strike the requisite number of words.

Mr. Chairman, as I pointed out to the committee a few moments ago, we have presented a balanced District of Columbia budget for fiscal year 1979.

Acceptance of the amendment offered by my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER), would take this budget out of balance. We have worked hard to bring it in balance. As recommended by our committee there are sufficient revenues, including the Federal payment to which this amendment applies to finance the appropriations from District funds in the bill.

Mr. Chairman, we have already reduced the Federal payment $53 million below the amount requested. The gentleman from Ohio wants to reduce it still more, by another $5,280,000. That would mean that the budget, would be out of balance by that amount.

Mr. Chairman, the Federal payment that we recommend to the committee is $53 million below the amount requested. It is $12 million below the amount appropriated for fiscal year 1978. It is $12 million below the amount appropriated for fiscal year 1977. We endeavored to present a budget which the city could live with. It is quite easy to offer a 2-percent amendment and say that we will reduce it another $5 million.

Where would this money required to balance the District of Coumbia budget come from, Mr. Chairman? We have 13 regular appropriation bills each year, and we can bring 12 of them to the House, which are to fund Federal departments and agencies, out of balance. It is just a matter of going to the Federal Treasury and adding to the national debt to finance the operations of these agencies and departments.

However, Mr. Chairman, we cannot do that with the District of Columbia budget. This budget must be presented in balance. We have worked hard to put it in balance. We have reduced it, as I have pointed out, by 40 percent as far as Federal funding is concerned and 5.6 percent as far as District of Columbia appropriations are concerned.

Mr. Chairman, it would be a serious mistake to adopt the amendment of my friend, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER), and I say, Mr. Chairman, that he is my friend.

However, for the reasons I have just stated this amendment should be defeated.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER).

The question was taken; and the Chairman announced that the noes appeared to have it.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I demand a recorded vote, and pending that, I make the point that a quorum is not present.

The CHAIRMAN. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Chair announces that pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, he will vacate proceedings under the call when a quorum of the Committee appears.

Members will record their presence by electronic device.

The call was taken by electronic device.

QUORUM CALL VACATED

The CHAIRMAN. One hundred Members have appeared. A quorum of the Committee of the Whole is present. Pursuant to clause 2, rule XXIII, further proceedings under the call shall be considered as vacated.

The Committee will resume its business.

The pending business is the demand of the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. MILLER) for a recorded vote.

A recorded vote was refused.

Mr. MILLER of Ohio. Mr. Chairman, I demand a division.

The Committee divided, and there were—ayes 21, noes 50.

So the amendment was rejected.

The CHAIRMAN. Are there further amendments to the bill?

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. FINDLEY

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendemnt.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. FINDLEY: On Page 16, immediately atfer line 14 add a new section:

"SEC. 218. None of the funds contained in this Act shall be made available to pay the salary of any employee of the government of the District of Columbia whose name and salary are not available for public inspection."

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, this amendment is needed to halt a coverup of salary information evidently carried out for the past 3 years by the District of Columbia City Council.

I was appalled to read in the Washington Star of July 18 a report quoting an internal memorandum believed to be written by Robert A. Williams, secretary and chief administrative officer of the District of Columbia City Council, explaining a longstanding policy under which the names and salaries of staff members of the council are not made available to public inspection.

This amendment will prohibit payment of any salaries unless the name of the recipient and the amount paid is available for public inspection.

I hope the members of the District of Columbia Appropriations Subcommittee will undertake a thorough investigation, determine the facts, and report back to this body. It seems to me that this whole affair smacks of coverup of an especially reprehensible nature, in that it suggests that money intended to benefit the downtrodden has been diverted to the pockets of well-salaried people. I hope the facts disclosed ultimately will lead to the discharge from public responsibility of all those involved whether they are employees or members of the city council, if it is determined that the allegations in the Washington Star are well founded.

I read from the July 18 issue of the Washington Star:

DISTRICT OF COLUMBIA COUNCIL KEEPS STAFF PAY SECRET

(By Robert Pear and Michael Kiernan)

The D.C. City Council has deliberately kept staff salaries secret for 3½ years to avoid "potential embarrassment," according to an internal council memorandum obtained by The Star.

The memorandum was written by Robert A. Williams, secretary and chief administrative officer of the council, who is already under fire for his administration of federal job funds in employing council staff members.

The memo, to Councilman Marion S. Barry, Jr., was dated March 6, five days after The Washington Star first reported evidence of widespread abuse and mismanagement in the way the council has spent more than $1.4 million of federal money under the Comprehensive Employment and Training Act (CETA). The funds are supposed to go toward hiring the hard-core unemployed.

Apparently worried last March about additional stories appearing in The Star regarding council employment practices. Williams cautioned Barry about the dangers of making a list of council salaries public.

Noted Williams: "Council policy since January 1975 has been not to develop lists of employees and their salaries. Such matters are only discussed in executive session."

Williams wrote that the council's policy of secrecy was due to "the sensitive nature of the salaries" and the "potential (for) embarrassment" to "other employees."

The council's insistence upon keeping staff salaries secret differs markedly from disclosure policies of most public agencies, including Congress and departments in the District government's executive branch.

Congress, for example, discloses salaries and all expenses of congressional employees in regular reports issued by the clerk of the House and the secretary of the Senate.

The mayor, meanwhile, must disclose salary information upon request under the District's Freedom of Information Act.

However, in passing the disclosure act during October 1976, the council specifically exempted itself from all of the law's provisions.

As a result, there is apparently no way for D.C. citizens to compel disclosure of legislative branch salaries.

Williams noted this loophole in his memo to Barry, who had requested a list of CETA positions on the council staff.

"I am sure," Williams wrote, "you appreciate the delicate nature of your request and its impact upon your colleagues as you and they voted to exempt the council from the Freedom of Information Act and possible informational misuse that might have resulted therefrom."

Williams did not describe the "misuse" he envisioned.

Because the council uses city as well as federal funds to pay its CETA employees, 44 CETA workers on the council now earn between $10,000 and $20,000 a year, and at least one CETA worker earns over $20,000 a year.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINDLEY. I am glad to yield to the Chairman.

Mr. NATCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, I would like to say to our distinguished friend, the gentleman from Illinois (Mr. FINDLEY), that on this side we have carefully examined his amendment, and we have no objection to it.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. FINDLEY. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The minority has examined the amendment. We think it is a good amendment, and we accept it.

Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Chairman, I thank the gentlemen.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. FINDLEY).

The amendment was agreed to.

AMENDMENT OFFERED BY MR. HANSEN

Mr. HANSEN. Mr. Chairman, I offer an amendment.

The Clerk read as follows:

Amendment offered by Mr. HANSEN: On page 16, after line 14 add the following new section:

"SEC. 218. No part of this appropriation shall be used for publicity or propaganda purposes or implementation of any policy including boycott designed to support or defeat legislation pending before Congress or any State legislature."

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANSEN. I yield to the gentleman from Kentucky.

Mr. NATCHER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, we have no objection to this amendment on this side.

Mr. BURGENER. Mr. Chairman, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. HANSEN. I yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. BURGENER. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Chairman, the minority has examined the amendment. We have no objection to the amendment.

The CHAIRMAN. The question is on the amendment offered by the gentleman from Idaho (Mr. HANSEN).

The amendment was agreed to.

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Chairman, I move that the Committee do now rise and report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The motion was agreed to.

Accordingly the Committee rose; and the Speaker pro tempore (Mr. BRADEMAS) having assumed the Chair, Mr. DINGELL, Chairman of the Committee of the Whole House on the State of the Union, reported that that Committee, having had under consideration the bill (H.R. 13468) making appropriations for the government of the District of Columbia and other activities chargeable in whole or in part against the revenues of said District for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for other purposes, had directed him to report the bill back to the House with sundry amendments, with the recommendation that the amendments be agreed to and that the bill, as amended, do pass.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a separate vote demanded on any amendment adopted by the Committee of the Whole? If not, the Chair will put them en gros.

The amendments were agreed to.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the engrossment and third reading of the bill.

The bill was ordered to be engrossed and read a third time, and was read the third time.

MOTION TO RECOMMIT OFFERED BY MR. CEDERBERG

Mr. CEDERBERG. Mr. Speaker, I offer a motion to recommit.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is the gentleman opposed to the bill?

Mr. CEDERBERG. I am in its present form, Mr. Speaker.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The Clerk will report the motion to recommit.

The Clerk read as follows:

Mr. CEDERBERG moves to recommit the bill H.R. 13468, to the Committee on Appropriations.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, the previous question is ordered on the motion to recommit.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion to recommit.

The motion to recommit was rejected.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the passage of the bill.

The question was taken; and the Speaker pro tempore announced that the ayes appeared to have it.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 215, nays 32, not voting 185, as follows:

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. NATCHER. Mr. Speaker. I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative davs in which to revise and extend their remarks, and include pertinent extraneous material, on the bill. H.R. 13468. just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Kentucky?

There was no objection.

AMERICAN FEDERATION OF LABOR AGREES THAT CAPITAL GAINS TAX SHOULD BE CUT

(Mr. STEIGER asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute and to revise and extend his remarks.)

Mr. STEIGER. Mr. Speaker, as the Members of the House know, there has been some controversy recently over the Steiger-Jenkins-Hansen effort to reduce the tax on capital gains.

I could not help but notice the effort by the president of the AFL–CIO, George Meany, to attack this proposal. Lo and behold, what did I discover but the following resolution as a report of the Tax Committee of the Executive Council of the American Federation of Labor. The committee consisted of George Meany, Matthew Woll, and G. M. Bugniazet. The report read as follows:

One tax which has an important effect in slowing up investment in new venture enterprises is the present capital gains tax. If this is not repealed by the new 1942 Revenue Act, it should be sharply modified to tax capital gains at lower rates, and to liberalize the provision for the deduction of capital losses. Failure to take such action in earlier laws has led to a sharp reduction in capital available for new venture enterprises, because of the heavy taxes involved if the business venture is successful, and because of the denial of reasonable credit against other profits if the new venture is not successful.

Mr. Speaker, I wonder if the real George Meany will please stand up.

LEGISLATIVE PROGRAM

(Mr. BAUMAN asked and was given permission to address the House 1 minute.)

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I have asked to proceed for 1 minute in order to ask one of the most distinguished acting majority leaders the gentleman from Maryland can recall what the program will be for the week of July 24.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I certainly agree with what the gentleman has said.

There is no further business scheduled for today.

The program for the House of Representatives for the week of July 24, 1978, is as follows:

On Monday, the House will meet at noon. There are no District bills.

There are three suspension bills, and votes on suspensions will be postponed until the end of all suspensions.

Mr. Speaker, the legislation on the Suspension Calendar for Monday is as follows:

H.J. Res. 682, National Lupus Week.
H.J. Res. 684, National Family Week.
H.J. Res. 946, National Guard Day.

Also on Monday we will have H.R. 10285, Commodity Exchange Act extension. The rule has already been adopted. We will have general debate only, which as I understand is 1 hour;

H.R. 3350, deep seabed hard minerals, The rule has already been adopted. We will have general debate only, which is 2 hours under the rule;

H.R. 7577, economic opportunity and community services amendments. The rule has already been adopted. We will have general debate only, which is for 1 hour under the rule.

For Tuesday, the House will meet at noon. There are six suspension bills. Votes on suspensions will be postponed until the end of all suspensions. The bills are as follows:

H.R. 12196, cost-of-living adjustments for retired Comptrollers General;

H.R. 11823, reservists retirement eligibility;

H.R. 12349, DuNoir Basin addition to Washakie Wilderness;

H.R. 12973, Social Services Amendments of 1978;

H.R. 11889, increased pension for Congressional Medal of Honor recipients; and

H.R. 11890, benefits for survivors of permanently disabled veterans.

We will then have the conference report on H.R. 12426, New York City Financial Assistance Act of 1978.

Following that, we will have the conference report on H.R. 11877, Peace Corps Act amendments.

Following that, we will have H.R. 10285, Commodity Exchange Act extension, which will consist of votes on amendments and on the bill.

On Wednesday, the House will meet at 10 a.m. and will consider the following:

H.R. 3350, deep seabed hard minerals. We will have votes on amendments and the bill;

H.R. 7577, economic opportunity and community services amendments, votes on amendments and bill;

H.R. 11622, Fuels Transportation Safety Amendments of 1978, subject to a rule being granted.

On Thursday, the House will meet at 10 a.m. to consider the following:

H.R. 12157, Export-Import Bank, to complete consideration;

H.R. 9400, civil rights of institutionalized persons, to complete consideration of this bill.

On Friday, the House will meet at 10 a.m. to consider the following:

H.R. 12432, Civil Rights Commission Act of 1978, complete consideration;

H.R. 12005, Justice Department authorizations, with an open rule and 1 hour of debate.

The House will adjourn by 3 p.m. on Friday and by 5:30 p.m. on all other days except Wednesday.

Conference reports may be brought up at any time, and any further program will be announced later.

I thank the gentleman for yielding to me.

Mr. BAUMAN. I thank the gentleman. I would like to ask the gentleman further, is my understanding correct that there will be an effort made to keep to a minimum the number of votes on Monday to accommodate the Members who may not be here?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. As I understand it, we would hope that there would be a minimum of votes on Monday.

Mr. BAUMAN. I thank the gentleman.

---

DISPENSING WITH CALENDAR WEDNESDAY BUSINESS ON WEDNESDAY NEXT

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that the business in order under the Calendar Wednesday rule be dispensed with on Wednesday next.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

---

ADJOURNMENT TO MONDAY, JULY 24, 1978

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that when the House adjourns today, it adjourn to meet at 12 o'clock noon on Monday, July 24, 1978.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Mississippi?

There was no objection.

DRUG SMUGGLING IN FLORIDA

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. BURKE) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. BURKE of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on July 18, the Select Committee on Narcotics Abuse and Control following the select committee's hearings in Hollywood, Fla., of this past June, received a seven-page report from the White House detailing proposals to cope with drug trafficking in the southeastern United States. More than a full page of this report is devoted to increased effort to stem the growing drug traffic in Florida. However, I am afraid we must push beyond what the White House report offers.

Florida is geographically the most vulnerable State in the Union to smugglers. First, there is all the coastline, with all the attendant pleasure craft that ply the warm waters, and all the marinas, and remote coves, and canals, where drugs can be transferred. Second, there is the proximity to supply. Tons of marihuana and cocaine worth billions of dollars are flown, shipped, and carried from South American countries—primarily Colombia—to Florida annually. General aviation aircraft, and medium-size pleasure boats are easily in range of illegal drug supplies either from the country of origin or from some offshore mother ship. The tourism industry which was displaced by drug smuggling as the largest industry in Florida is a perfect camouflage for strangers about illicit business. It is hardly surprising, therefore, that Florida is the primary entry place for cocaine, and one of the major entry places for marihuana.

While I am sure that everyone at the White House involved in evaluating the Florida drug situation has tried to do the most they could, I am convinced that it is not enough. In fact, I seriously wonder if the U.S. economy has not already become seriously involved with international drug trafficking. Billions of dollars annually are pouring out of the United States into Colombia and other South American countries—illegally, untaxed—to buy cocaine and marihuana. There is very little quid pro quo to be realized in terms of the national economy from this exchange. Our gross national product is not improved. Our tax base is not broadened. Americans simply pay out of pocket $40 billion annually to buy these illegal narcotics. How long can our Nation afford to do this? We all know the entire budget for the United States did not reach $1 billion until after Word War II. The 1979 budget is $500 billion. In 1980 drug trafficking will probably amount to 10 percent of the annual Federal budget.

Mr. Speaker, on July 18 in South Florida—not the whole State of Florida—just the east coast of south Florida—drug seizures pull in $24 million worth of marihuana and cocaine and $1.1 million in cash. Numbers numb the mind and people do not comprehend them. However, it took me 10 years of hard work to get a Federal building erected in Fort Lauderdale and its cost is not much more than $19 million. The whole building could have been put up with $5 million to spare if yesterday's drug haul could be converted to this purpose. I am still endeavoring to get the harbor at Port Everglades widened and deepened. The estimated cost for this project is $23 million. Yet if the July 18 drug bust of south Florida could be converted to this purpose there would be over $1 million left upon its completion. Another facility badly needed in Broward County is a VA outpatient clinic, the cost of which is estimated at $13 million. But again, if the receipts from the aforesaid July 18 drug busts could be used for this purpose we could build almost two veterans clinics in my State.

July 18's bust was threefold and consisted of the effort by the Bureau of Customs in Key Largo where 17 tons of marihuana was seized on two lobster boats, the effort by the U.S. Coast Guard cutter Steadfast where 20 tons of marihuana was seized off the Florida coast, and the effort by the Fort Lauderdale police where $1.1 million in cash and 7 pounds of uncut cocaine was seized in a motel. I applaud each of these efforts and commend the law enforcement people who were responsible for the success. However, the July 18 episodes are not unusual for south Florida. Earlier this year $1 million in cash was seized in Miami. Select committee hearings held in Hollywood, Fla., in June revealed a pattern of high volume shipment of money, cocaine, and marihuana daily in south Florida.

Mr. Speaker, let us be honest, it is too late in the game to send in only a few new reinforcements. The drug enforcement line of defense has been stretched too thin, too long. Drastic and immediate action must be actual and not verbal. In short, a strike force must be set up at the Federal level to reorganize and maximize the various efforts by the Internal Revenue Service, the Drug Enforcement Agency, the Bureau of Customs, the Coast Guard, local law enforcement people, and every person working to eradicate the illegal drug trafficking in our country.

There are too many nontaxable dollars involved not to worry about the economic impact. There are too many lives being destroyed by narcotics addiction not to worry about the future of our country if it continues. Illegal drugs are big business. Any U.S. corporation in the Fortune 500 would be proud of $40 billion per annum in sales. It is a major industry and unfortunately a growth industry. We must think hard about our present efforts to combat it and invent new methods or we will fail utterly. If we are to survive as a free Nation then we must muster the courage to win this battle—not by talk—not by political "clap-trap," but by strong, harsh legislation, and the appropriation of sufficient moneys to buy sophisticated equipment necessary to stamp out this illicit business and to imprison those purveyers of death and havoc, who deal in this evil business.●

THE 1980 SUMMER OLYMPIC GAMES SHOULD BE MOVED FROM THE SOVIET UNION NOW; A BOYCOTT WILL NOT BE AS EFFECTIVE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from New York (Mr. KEMP) is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, as my colleagues are aware, Senator ANDERSON of Minnesota and I are cosponsors of a resolution calling for the withdrawal of the 1980 summer Olympic games from the Soviet Union. Senator ANDERSON is a former Olympian team member in hockey from the 1956 games, and I have been addressing this issue of what the Soviets intend to do since early last year.

As my colleagues are also aware, others in the Senate and the House are calling for a boycott of those games. They are also seeking support for a resolution calling for a boycott.

My purpose here this afternoon is not to say that our approach is the only answer. There might be other strategies which can be employed to resolve this matter, but I think the supporters of both approaches are acting out of the same concerns. I speak, of course, of the Soviets' refusal to permit the exercise of human rights in its borders, of their refusal to guarantee that competition will be open for athletes from all countries, of their refusal to guarantee accreditation of newspersons from all countries and all media.

We have already seen their intent—in the trials of Anatoly Scharansky and Aleksandr Ginzburg, in the trials of two American newspaper men, in the growing harassment of foreign business representatives, diplomats, and newspersons. We have seen their refusal to answer specific questions about freedom of newspersons covering the games. We have seen what looks like a concerted campaign with certain Third World countries to exclude other countries, such as Israel, from those games by making them ineligible under the rules. Rules manipulation is how they are trying to exclude certain news representatives, too.

MOVE THE GAMES OR BOYCOTT THEM?

My purpose is, however, to bring to the attention of the House certain factors which bear on which is the approach—transfer or boycott—more likely to work.

I have several thoughts.

First, there are alternative sites to Moscow. I personally prefer Montreal, because the facilities there are so new, having been built for the 1976 summer games, that they would not need remodeling. The "disaster" associated with Montreal in 1976 was the huge capital cost of that construction. Putting the games there in 1980 would, without requiring additional capital outlays, allow substantial operating revenues to flow into the city and into the facilities, thus helping to pay them off much more rapidly than can now be projected. The facilities are in good shape.

Second, there is time to do this. I realize that the Soviet Union has undertaken substantial costs already, but I think they have forfeited their right to retain the games and, therefore, will just have to absorb those costs. I am sure that they can be used for socialist countries' participation for years to come. I realize that some American businesses have sunk costs into their activities in association with those games, most notably NBC, which has the contract for television coverage of the games. But the bulk of their $80 million outlay has not yet been made. Perhaps the loss, whatever it is, could be ameliorated if NBC had the principal or a major share of the action in Montreal, if the games are relocated there.

Third, a boycott would hurt our outstanding young athletes and is seldom effective in a case like this. A boycott has no means of enforcement. American athletes might boycott, but that does not mean that the French, British, German, Italian would; or that the Third World countries would. I think, given the political climate in the world, that one would have to expect that many, if not most, would still go to the games. Thus, we would end up penalizing our own athletes and those of countries who see this the way we do, but having no impact on the games being held in that closed society, in the Soviet Union. The Soviet Union would then walk away with all the gold, silver, and bronze medals in almost all the competitions, too.

Fourth, a boycott is an event which happens at the time of the event. Last minute decisions are made, and they are usually to go, since the psychology or rationale that others are going anyway seems to take hold.

If the boycott starts now, with countries making it known that they will not go, the cumulative effect may be to make it obvious that the games cannot continue in Moscow, if there is to be genuine, extensive competition, but that would then take you another step, which is move the games elsewhere. Why go through that elaborate, difficult first step to reach the second step, when we can muster all our efforts behind that second step now. Let us make it the first step.

I think these points lead to the conclusion that our policy choice between transferring the games or boycotting them ought to be resolved in favor of transferring them.

THE RECORD ON THE SOVIETS' ACTIONS

Mr. Speaker, I am only one of a number in Congress who have been very active in this Olympics question, but I think I have tried to keep my colleagues informed on what we suspect they may be doing and what we know they are doing.

Some of the points I have brought to the attention of the House have been superseded by subsequent events or additional information, but if anyone has any question whatsoever about what the Soviets are up to, I invite them to read the following remarks in the RECORD:

Journalist Jeffrey Hart raises some questions about the 1980 Olympics in Moscow which must be answered to insure the nonpoliticization of the Games, April 21, 1977, 11611–11612.

NBC addresses important questions about the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow, April 29, 1977, p. 3841–3842.

The United States should take steps to prevent the exclusion of Israel from the 1980 Olympics, July 1, 1977, 22092.

How the Soviets are attempting to exclude Israel from the 1980 Olympics, August 2, 1977, 26222–26223.

Congressional letter to be sent to U.S. Olympic Committee protesting Soviet-Third World campaign to exclude Israel from the 1980 Olympic Games in Moscow, September 14, 1977, 29206–29207.

Soviet tactics in world class chess: an ominous sign for international competition, May 3, 1978, p. 12521–12522.

The Soviets have refused to guarantee freedom of the press for coverage of the 1980 Olypmic Games in Moscow: how can they do otherwise in light of the trials starting today?, July 10, 1978, p. 20028–20030.

The Soviet Union has forfeited its right to host the Olympic Games, July 17, 1978, p. 21243–21244.

I also have a complete set of correspondence with the U.S. Olympic Committee, which has not been terribly responsive on this matter and has not brought sufficient pressure on the International Olympic Committee to get it to change Moscow's direction, for anyone wishing to review it or photocopy it at their expense. It is thick.

GEORGE MEANY SAYS "NO" TO MOSCOW GAMES, TOO

On Friday of last week, AFL–CIO President George Meany declined an invitation to serve again as the U.S. Olympics Committee's honorary chairman for labor. He did so expressly because of human rights violations by the Soviet Union.

Mr. Meany's letter of July 14 to E. H. Mosler, Jr., chairman of the U.S. Olympics Finance Committee, follows:

Thank you for your letter inviting me to serve once again as Honorary Chairman of the U.S. Olympic Committee for labor.

As I was preparing to respond to your letter, the news arrived that the Soviet authorities have sentenced Aleksandr Ginzburg and Anatoly Scharansky to barbaric prison terms for the crime of seeking their government's compliance with the human-rights provisions of the Helsinki Agreement. Since the Soviet Union has effectively declared these provisions null and void, I see no reason to promote American compliance with other provisions of the Helsinki Final Act, including the sports and cultural exchanges encouraged in Basket III.

My conscience will not allow me to help raise money to send American athletes to Moscow at a time when the KGB is trying to "cleanse" that city of dissidents prior to the Olympic games. I will not be morally complicit in Mr. Brezhnev's attempt to destroy the lives of courageous individuals who seek to advance the cause of human rights.

I must therefore respectfully decline your invitation.

WE MUST NOT REPEAT THE 1938 SPECTACLE IN BERLIN

Mr. Speaker, from the standpoints of how a country intends to use the Olympic games for its own nationalist purposes and of how an ideology intends to assert its alleged superiority, the Moscow games of 1980 stand as a virtual mirror image of the 1936 games in Berlin, in Hitler's Germany.

And the struggle now taking shape to transfer the games from Moscow stands in surprising similarity to an effort to transfer the games from Berlin, too. Except this: The 1936 effort started very late and it was unsuccessful, because the American committee refused to back it; as a matter of fact, they worked to keep the games in Berlin.

I quote from a March 18, 1977, article in the Los Angeles Times by one of the country's foremost sports writers, Jim Murray, about the 1936 games and the regretful, unthinking actions of the American committee to keep the games from being transferred from Berlin:

It is a dilemma the U.S. Olympic Committee has faced before—but not since 1936. Those Games had been awarded to Germany before Hitler came to power, but the Nazis inherited them when they came around and they made the most of them.

The ascendancy of the Nazis posed a moral problem for the U.S. Olympic Committee. First of all, the Hitlerites had removed the venerable Dr. Theodor Lewald as president of the German Olympic Committee because he was part Jewish. Since Jews were also barred from German sporting clubs, practice fields and swimming pools, they were effectively barred from the German Olympic teams.

The U.S. Amateur Athletic Union, in 1933, took note of all this and voted for a boycott of the German Games. Avery Brundage of the USOC enthusiastically supported the boycott but it was largely a campaign of the AAU president, Judge Jeremiah Mahoney, who hated Hitler as a "pagan." The judge formed a "Committee On Fair Play" to ensure no American athlete took part in Hitler's Olympics.

The Germans, for their part, didn't want to lose the propaganda value of the 1936 Olympics which Dr. Goebbels estimated as worth 20 divisions; so they did some fast window dressing. They announced that 21 Jews had been named to the German team (none of them made it). They took down the "Jews Not Wanted" signs outside Garmisch before the Winter Olympics and tried to house their guests where they wouldn't hear the screams in the night.

They wooed Avery Brundage on his investigative trip to the Fatherland in 1934 to the extent that he reversed his position on the boycott and, in a historic meeting of the AAU in New York in 1935, Brundage not only beat back Mahoney but got himself elected president of the AAU in Mahoney's place.

Not even the fact that Hitler published his infamous "Nurnberg Laws" two months before could save the good judge. As president of both the USOC and the AAU, Brundage was as firmly in charge as Hitler, and Dr. Goebbels had his showcase.

Judge Mahoney had his bonfire (with his million or so signatures protesting participation). Hitler had his parade, Brundage had his games.

WHAT NEEDS TO BE DONE?

There are two things which should be done, starting today.

First, we should get the Anderson and Kemp resolutions adopted—now. That sends a signal of the U.S. Congress concern and intentions, one that will be picked up by the worldwide press, one that will certainly be heard at the U.S. Olympic Committee in New York City, one that will be heard by the national Olympic committees around the free world, and one that will be heard in Moscow.

If we do not get committee movement on these resolutions within a reasonable time frame, I will move to file a discharge petition if all else fails.

Second, we need to make the views of the American community known at the U.S. Olympic Committee, our country's Olympic Committee and, therefore, the official spokesman. It is the U.S. Olympic Committee which has not moved sufficiently on this issue to date. It is the U.S. Olympic Committee that can bring great pressure to bear on the International Olympic Committee and its president, Lord Killanin. It is the U.S. Olympic Committee that could take a direct message to the Moscow committee.

Those Members of Congress, those organizations, those private persons wishing to contact the USOC should write to Robert J. Kane, president, U.S. Olympic Committee, 57 Park Avenue, New York, N.Y. 10016, telephone number (202) 686–1456.

And, then, they should contact all of the officers and directors of that Olympic Committee. The most recent list I have is current only through January 3, 1977. My staff tried to get an updated copy last winter from the USOC, but they would not send it to us.

These officers' and directors' names and addresses follow:

WHALEN QUESTIONS ADEQUACY OF ADMINISTRATION'S LIABILITY PROPOSALS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WHALEN) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Speaker, as you know, throughout this Congress I have been very active in the field of product liability. In June 1977, I introduced, together with several of my colleagues, H.R. 7711, the Product Liability Insurance Tax Equity Act. This legislation is designed to facilitate self-insurance for all or part of one's risk for product or professional liability. Since the bill's introduction, I have received support from 66 cosponsors and 50 major trade and professional associations, who also realize the inequities in the present product liability situation.

Today, I am pleased to note that the Carter administration is recognizing the "serious economic problems caused by escalating product liability premiums." On July 20, Secretary of Commerce Juanita M. Kreps announced that the first Federal program to address the product liability problem has been created. The program is a response to the recommendations made by the Commerce Department's Interagency Task Force on Product Liability.

While the executive branch is to be commended for not succumbing to the extensive lobbying of the American Insurance Association, which believes "there is no crisis in product liability," I feel the administration has not offered as complete a solution as the present problem demands.

Briefly, I would like to outline yesterday's proposals. First, in place of a self-insurance trust, which was envisioned in H.R. 7711 and the initial recommendation of the Interagency Task Force, the administration proposes to extend the carryback period for net operations losses attributable to product liability and related costs from the current 3 to 10 years. Hence, if a firm incurred a product liability judgment or settlement, the proposed amendment to the Internal Revenue Service Code would allow the firm to apply the loss against taxable income earned during the 10 preceding years. Consequently, the company could receive a refund of taxes paid in those years.

Second, the administration has directed that a model uniform product liability law be prepared. The law would then be submitted to the individual States. This is a move aimed at clearing up uncertainties in the tort system, and was first recommended by a congressional panel which I chaired before the House Small Business Committee in April 1977.

Third, a worker compensation reform plan is being sought which would include adequate benefits and expanded coverage for workers suffering product-related injuries in the course of employment.

Fourth, the administration has called for a report on insurance ratemaking procedures. The report is to contain draft product liability insurance regulation standards.

Fifth, there will be a greater governmental distribution of product risk information to manufacturers, distributors, and retailers.

Last, an Interagency Council will be formed to improve the coordination of Federal accident compensation initiatives. The Council will be composed of knowledgeable persons in accident compensation from several departmental agencies.

The aforementioned program represents a good beginning in the effort to solve the product liability problems faced by our society today. I am pleased to see the executive branch taking substantive action in this area.

I only regret that the administration has used the carryback extension proposal as a substitute for self-insurance trust funds, instead of as a complement. The following is a summary of my initial reactions to this substitution:

First, since the present law allows a firm to carry back 3 years, an extension of 7 years would only benefit those persons whose judgments or settlements are greater than that already encompassed in 3 years. I am sure there are some manufacturers that will benefit from this legislation, but I submit that this system will not help those who experience relatively small claims on a regular basis or those whose claims exceed the amount of profits reported in recent years.

Second, the major problem in product liability is not the amount paid in claims, but rather the amount paid in insurance premiums. The self-insurance reserve would provide a continually growing fund that enables companies to raise the amount of the deductible feature of their policy, and thus lower their premiums.

Third, as pointed out last year by the Commerce Department's Interagency Task Force on Product Liability, the self-insurance remedy "will enecourage in sureds to utilize product liability prevention measures, since their own funds will be at stake." I contend that under the proposed plan insureds will have less desire to enforce product liability prevention, because they would be paying the claims with Government money.

This is very important, because under the self-insurance reserve plan, such as I have proposed, consumers, as well as manufacturers, benefit. When a reserve exists the manufacturer has an asset which he will make additional efforts to preserve. Therefore, the reserve fund concept provides an added inducement to improve quality control procedures.

Last, the proposed plan is not helpful to those manufacturers that cannot presently obtain insurance, but are required to have coverage in order to conduct their business. The proposed tax manipulation will not satisfy industry insurance requirements. In fact, the administration's proposal would appear not to meet certification of insurance requirements imposed by many Government agencies.

Mr. Speaker, I am hopeful that when the various product liability measures are heard before the Ways and Means Committee this session, there will be some reconciliation between the recent administration proposal and the self-insurance reserve concept advocated by many in Congress. Such an effort would provide more effective relief to the multitude of American companies suffering from the product liability crisis.●

THE WESTERN WORLD SHOULD NOT IGNORE CHAD

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. SIKES) is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. SIKES. Mr. Speaker, Chad as a nation is seldom in the news in the Western World. It is one of more than 50 African countries. It is a very large country from the standpoint of geography. The population is small. It has no human rights problems, at least none that have invoked an American response. Neither the Russians nor the Cubans have become directly involved in charting Chad's future. Please note that I said "directly involved." Through arms, Russia is involved and is a major contributor to the problem of survival for the Government of Chad. More about that later.

Chad is located in central Africa and is friendly to the United States. It has a stable government which wants progress but which is severely limited in means. Modest expenditures in AID in a number of areas could produce tremendous response and provide needed progress and improved living conditions. Much of Chad is barren desert country but some of those desert areas are rich in undeveloped mineral resources. The southern third of Chad has rainfall, forests, and is productive. That portion of the nation can become much more productive, particularly in grain and cattle. To justify this, a market is needed. The nations around southern Chad want Chadian products but that area is surrounded by major rivers and there are no bridges and few roads. A modest program of assistance from the Western World could speedily correct this and other problems for Chad.

Chad was formerly a French territory and associations with the French are still warm. In fact, it is the French that went to Chad's assistance when they were invaded in recent years by rebels supported from Libya. Chad wants closer association with the West. They have had experience with the Russian presence and want no more of it.

America and the Western World will do well to seek a closer relationship with Chad and to help this country in its search for peace and progress.

It may be startling to some when I say the significance of Chad's present problems to Africa bears a striking resemblance to those of Czechoslovakia in 1938 to Europe. A small landlocked country is gradually being dismembered by a rich aggressive neighbor, whose leader has repeatedly made clear his expansionist designs. This aggression is being carried out in the name of an "oppressed" minority, and if successful will be only the first step in a series of such actions. Libya is the aggressive neighbor. The aggression is in the mineral rich portion of Chad. The government forces have now been driven from at least one-half of the country.

Thus, we have a situation in which a poor, friendly, and moderate nation, which has a good record regarding the rights of man, is being torn apart by a wealthy radical neighbor. The aggressor is an overt friend of the Soviets and is a strong supporter of international terrorism and subversive meddling in the affairs of moderate states. The victim of this aggression has exhausted its appeals to the Organization of African Unity without result. For the time being, France is supporting Chad out of loyalty to its former colony, but it is clear this cannot last indefinitely. If the West stands aside and lets Chad fall, will it do the same when Libya or a similar Soviet entity moves against other moderate nations? Libya has already shown that it has territorial designs on Niger; that it wants "progressive," Moslem governments in its neighboring state regardless of the makeup or wishes of the people concerned.

Libya has supported radical revolutionary movements in many countries; has attempted coups in Sudan, and Egypt, and its Chadian rebel allies operate freely in part of northern Nigeria in a manner that is openly disdainful of the Lagos Government. These conditions hardly argue well for the stability of central Africa should Chad become a Libyan puppet.

The United States is within its rights of self-interest in refusing to become involved in Chad's internal security problems and indeed they would be difficult to solve, but this is an attitude that is nonproductive for the future. There also is the line of argument that in the long run the Soviets and their allies will be incapable of controlling African states and that the United States would do better to sit on the sidelines and wait it out.

However, before adopting this easy solution we should remind ourselves that, in the short run, a series of moderate, friendly African states probably will be subverted, many fine people will be slaughtered, and some of the West's present and potential supplies of valuable natural resources will become usable tools of international blackmail. In addition, it would be relevant to note that the Soviets have proven in Eastern Europe that they are capable of maintaining iron-fisted control over other countries for a lengthy period of time—witness a dozen countries which have been under Soviet control since World War II or shortly thereafter. Our supposition that, because we cannot dominate others with our open democratic methods, the Soviets will have similar problems with different methods is highly suspect.

If we decide to stand aside on Chad, as the world did on Czechoslovakia, we may well precipitate not only the fall of Chad to Marxist influence, but we may also trigger a Marxist takeover in a large portion of Central Africa in which the Soviets thus far have made little progress. At the very least, the United States and the Western World should show a greater interest in what is happening in Chad and give more support to its economic progress and internal development.●

THE KEMP-ROTH TAX PROPOSAL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Connecticut (Mr. GIAIMO) is recognized for 15 minutes.

● Mr. GIAIMO. Mr. Speaker, during his recent appearance before the House Budget Committee, Chairman Charles Schultze of the Council of Economic Advisers presented to us an analysis of the Kemp-Roth tax reduction bill. I believe that all of my colleagues should read these comments.

I, therefore, insert this analysis in the RECORD at this point.

ANALYSIS OF THE KEMP-ROTH TAX PROPOSAL

In his letter of invitation to testify, the Chairman asked me to be prepared to discuss the economic consequences of Congressman Kemp's proposal to reduce Federal income taxes by approximately 30 percent, phased in over a three year period.

Let me begin by reiterating that the American economy does need a moderate tax reduction in 1979. Individuals, confronted with rising social security taxes and inflation-generated increases in effective tax rates, need tax relief if consumption is not to falter. Business tax relief is needed to promote greater investment.

The Administration has proposed a $20 billion reduction effective January 1, 1979. Depending upon the course of private economic activity, additional tax reductions may be necessary in later years. The question at issue is not whether tax reduction is needed, but the appropriate size and timing of the cut.

The Kemp-Roth proposal would enact a three-year tax cut that would reduce taxes by around $30 billion in 1979, and build to a $110 to $120 billion rate of tax reduction by 1981. Committing the Federal Government now to a tax cut of such dimensions is, I submit, a sure-fire recipe for inflation. What the effects of the Kemp-Roth proposal would be on economic activity and prices is a matter of some dispute. Congressman Kemp, in testimony before the House Ways and Means Committee presented simulations from an econometric model suggesting that his proposal would increase the annual rate of real GNP growth over a 10-year period by only .13 percentage points, and would increase the rate of consumer price inflation by one percent per year by 1982. Moreover, these simulations suggested that the Federal deficit would rise to $90 billion—3½ percent of GNP—by 1980. Some proponents of the Kemp-Roth proposal claim that, because it would unlock private incentives and thereby increase productive capacity, the national income would rise so much that the tax cut would actually increase, rather than decrease, Federal revenues. Let me first examine this latter claim.

Before allowing for any induced effects on the size of the economy, the Kemp-Roth tax proposal, when fully in effect in 1981, would cut the Federal revenue yield out of 1981 incomes by somewhere between $110 billion and $120 billion. As a rough rule of thumb, Federal revenues—at the new lower tax rates—would rise about 20 cents for each dollar increase in the gross national product. So, in order to gain back $110 billion in lost revenues, GNP would have to increase by some $550 billion. Our forecast of GNP in 1981—based on current fiscal policy—is $2.8 trillion. A $550 billion increase above this would be an increase of 20 percent.[1]

Traditional analysis of the effects of fiscal policy assumes that there will be a "multiplier" effect of tax cuts on GNP. A tax cut of $1 will, under normal conditions, produce more than a one dollar increase in GNP.[2] Abstracting from effects on the rate of inflation, most economic analyses and forecasting models imply a multiplier of about 1¾ to 2. That is, each dollar of tax cut, after a lag of a year or so, adds two dollars or a little less to GNP. Under the normal assumption of a multiplier of about 2, the Kemp-Roth proposal would add enormously to the Federal deficit. A tax cut of $110 billion in 1981 dollars would add $220 billion to the money value of GNP. Since Federal revenues would increase only about $45 billion because of the induced GNP growth, the net addition to the Federal deficit would be about $75 billion. If the tax cut generated more inflation, the effect on nominal GNP would be larger, and the impact on the deficit smaller. Apart from the effects of inflation, I know of no economic analysis which suggests the multiplier of 5 needed to achieve a "free lunch"—that is, an increase in GNP sufficient to recoup all the loss in revenues from a tax cut.

Let us suppose for the sake of argument, however, that the multiplier were 5, as needed for full recoupment, and that the additional after-tax income made available to taxpayers caused a rise of $550 billion, or 20 percent, in the demand for private goods and services. What would happen to real output, employment, and prices?

If there were a substantial degree of slack in the economy—very high unemployment and idle plant capacity — GNP could be increased with running into the scarcities, bottlenecks, and tight labor markets which cause an acceleration of inflation. At the present time, there is some slack in our economy, but not a lot. Estimates of potential GNP by the Council of Economic Advisers suggest that actual real output is presently about 4 to 5 percent below potential.[3] If the degree of economic slack in 1981 were about the same as at present, GNP could expand by no more than 4 to 5 percent without generating very serious inflationary pressures unless our capacity to produce increased dramatically because of the Kemp-Roth proposal.

As we saw earlier, GNP would have to grow by 20 percent in order for a Kemp-Roth tax cut to generate enough national income to recoup the revenue loss. Given the present modest degree of slack in the economy, massive inflationary pressures could be avoided only if the nation's economic capacity were to rise by at least 16 percent more than its normal growth over the next three years. A huge increase in labor supply and in productivity would be necessary over the three year phasing-in period. The evidence is overwhelming that the necessary increase in supply would not occur.

A 30 percent tax reduction would raise the after-tax income of the average worker by about 5 percent. Such an increase in real income would be unlikely to induce either a large addition to the labor force or a major increase in working hours. Working hours have gradually drifted downward during the postwar period as real incomes have risen. The average worker has chosen to take part of the increase in real income made possible by rising productivity in the form of additional leisure. Increases in after-tax income stemming from Kemp-Roth might lead to a still shorter work week. Labor force participation, it is true, has steadily grown over the postwar period, due principally to a rising rate of female participation. But there is no evidence that a 5 percent rise in income would sharply accelerate that trend.

Let us, nevertheless, make the further assumption—again, for the sake of argument—that total labor supply would somehow increase by (say) 4 to 5 percent due to the Kemp-Roth tax cut—that is, by the amount of increase in the average worker's after-tax income. Then, through a combination of taking up existing economic slack and labor supply growth, the nation's economic output might be raised by 8 to 10 percent. To avoid the inflationary consequences of a 20 percent growth in demand (the amount required to recoup the revenue losses from Kemp-Roth), productivity would thus have to grow by at least 10 percent more than the normal increase. Since productivity normally increases by 2 percent or less per year, an additional 10 percent over three years would be an extraordinary feat.

What kind of an expansion in business investment would be necessary, both to provide the additional labor force with capital equipment and to raise productivity by that 10 percent?

It would obviously be impossible to achieve an enormous increase in the capital stock in three years. Planning, designing, ordering, and producing major industrial facilities in the proper balance and mix cannot be done in three years. But let us ignore this difficulty and assume we had ten years to complete the job. How much of an increase in business investment would be necessary?

A number of economists have studied the relationship of business investment to productivity. Based on those studies, it appears that equipping the additional labor force and expanding productivity by 10 percent above its normal trend over a ten year period would require approximately a doubling of the share of business fixed investment in GNP—from its current share of around 10 percent to about 20 percent. Arguing that the tax cut proposed by Kemp-Roth, which increases after-tax incomes of individuals and corporations by about 5 percent, would induce a doubling of business capital outlays is little more than wishful thinking.

In short, projections that a Kemp-Roth tax cut would raise output and incomes by the amount necessary to recoup revenue losses rests upon a series of extremely unrealistic assumptions.

Let me spell out briefly the more likely consequences of the Kemp-Roth proposal. A $110 billion tax cut phased in over three years would raise aggregate demand for goods and services by perhaps $200 to $220 billion—an increase of about 8 percent over what might otherwise exist. The net revenue loss (ignoring inflation) would then be about $75 billion. Some added investment probably would occur that would ultimately increase capacity and improve the growth of productivity by a modest amount. But in the first four to five years the increase in productive capacity coming on stream would be minute relative to the $200 billion or larger increase in the demand for goods and services. The result would therefore be a very overheated economy and an increase in the rate of inflation that could be enormous.

As I noted earlier, the economic simulation prepared for Congressman Kemp concludes that, by the third year after enactment the bill would raise the inflation rate by only about a percentage point. In my judgment, this is a substantial understatement of the inflationary effects. The actual amount of inflation induced by the proposal would, however, depend importantly on the actions of the Federal Reserve. If money supply growth were kept low in order to avoid the inflation, interest rates would skyrocket—choking off investment and economic growth. But if interest rates were kept down to facilitate the rise in investment, money and credit supplies would have to grow at extremely high rates. The sharp increase in aggregate demands for goods and services relative to supply would then express itself in a much larger rise of prices.

FOOTNOTES

[1] If GNP were somewhat lower or higher than the $2.8 trillion all of the numbers would change in roughly the same proportion. A 20 percent increase in GNP would still be required to recoup all the revenue loss.

[2] One condition is that the Federal Reserve freely provides the additional money supply needed to finance the higher level of GNP.

[3] This estimate of potential GNP assumes that the high unemployment rate is 4.9 percent. Inflationary pressures stemming from excess demand might, however, emerge before the unemployment rate dropped that far.

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT ACT OF 1978

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, title IV of H.R. 11504, the Agricultural Credit Act of 1978, provides for the emergency conservation program, under which the Secretary of Agriculture is authorized to make payments to agricultural producers who carry out measures to control erosion or to rehabilitate farmlands damaged by natural disasters.

Horticulture is an agricultural enterprise which is growing rapidly in Florida. Therefore the rehabilitation provisions of H.R. 11504 are particularly important to Florida, considering the heavy damage that can result from hurricanes and tropical storms.

In Florida, we have many horticultural operations where fields are under saran cloth for shade. These cloths are moveable, and are put up or taken down depending on the requirements of plants at different stages of growth. A second practice that is growing more and more common in Florida and other States is to grow plants in pots in the fields, so that when the plants are ready for sale they do not have to be dug up. A hurricane could cause a great deal of damage in either of these circumstances, destroying cloths or pots as well as plants and leaving debris.

I would appreciate hearing the opinion of the distinguished gentleman from Tennessee, Mr JONES, who authored the section, as to whether horticultural operations are covered by the provisions of title IV. In the event of a hurricane, would farmers whose fields are under saran cloth or who grow plants in pots be eligible for cost-sharing assistance for clean up operations?●

AGRICULTURAL CREDIT ACT OF 1978

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Tennessee (Mr. JONES) is recognized for 10 minutes.

● Mr. JONES of Tennessee. Mr. Speaker, I appreciate the opportunity to respond to the questions raised by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN). I would say that as I understand the Department of Agriculture regulations on the operation of the present program for cleaning up the debris from a disaster, cost-share assistance is not now available to all horticultural field operations. Those operations which now grow their plants in pots or those who use saran cloth for shade are presently not covered. However, in my opinion, these producers are bona fide farmers and I would have no objection to their being covered. In fact, I think they should be able to receive cost-share assistance for clean up operations resulting from disaster situations and I would hope that in the implementation of this new legislation, they would change their regulations accordingly.●

REINTRODUCTION OF SUSAN B. ANTHONY COIN ACT OF 1978

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentlewoman from Ohio (Ms. OAKAR) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Ms. OAKAR. Mr. Speaker, I am submitting my bill to amend the Coinage Act of 1965 to change the size, weight, and design of the proposed one-dollar coin. My bill proposes to place the portrait of Susan B. Anthony on the obverse side of this new coin.

I also wish to thank all my colleagues who have agreed to cosponsor this bill. Their support is invaluable.

The bill has the full support of a wide spectrum of women's organizations including the League of Women Voters, the National Women's Political Caucus, the Daughters of the American Revolution, Women's Lobby, Inc., and the National Organization for Women. Senator PROXMIRE, who has introduced similar legislation on the Senate side, has also received letters of support from chapters of the American Association of University Women, and the National Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs. I am very grateful to all of them and particularly to Ellie Smeal, president of the National Organization for Women who testified on behalf of the Susan B. Anthony coin.

H.R. 13570

A bill to amend the Coinage Act of 1965 to change the size, weight, and design of the one-dollar coin, and for other purposes

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled—

SECTION 1. This Act may be cited as the "Susan B. Anthony Dollar Coin Act of 1978".

SEC. 2. Section 101(c)(1) of the Coinage Act of 1965, as amended (31 U.S.C. 391 (c)(1)), is amended by striking out "1.500" and inserting in lieu thereof "1.043" and by striking out "22.68" and inserting in lieu thereof "8.5".

SEC. 3. (a) The one-dollar coin authorized by section 101(c) of the Coinage Act of 1965, as amended by section 2, shall bear on the obverse side the likeness of Susan B. Anthony.

(b) Subject to subsection (a) and the limitations contained in section 3517 of the Revised Statutes, as amended (31 U.S.C. 324), the Secretary of the Treasury may prescribe such design for the one-dollar coin authorized by section 101(c) of the Coinage Act of 1965, as amended by section 2, as he deems appropriate.

SEC. 4. Section 203 of the Act of December 31, 1970 (31 U.S.C. 324b), is amended by striking out "initially" and by inserting "(d)" after "section 101".

SEC. 5. Until January 1, 1979, the Secretary of the Treasury may continue to mint and issue one-dollar coins authorized under section 101(c)(1) of the Coinage Act of 1965, as such section was in effect immediately prior to the date of enactment of this Act.●

LONG-MILLER AMENDMENT TO FOREIGN AID APPROPRIATION BILL

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. LONG) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. LONG of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, the Long amendment now becomes "Long-Miller" as Representative CLARENCE MILLER joins in the amendment to the foreign aid appropriations bill to cut the Inter-American Development Bank and the International Development Association by $584 million, instead of offering his 8 percent across-the-board cut of the foreign aid bill. If the Long-Miller amendment should not pass, Congressman MILLER reserves the right to reinstate his proposal of an 8-percent cut.

Even with the Long-Miller amendment:

The combined appropriation for the Banks would be the largest they have ever received.

The total foreign aid bill would be the largest in 25 years.

The two Banks would be getting 14 percent more than last year—a greater increase than the President's budget allowed for major domestic programs such as social security, plus 13 percent; energy, plus 12 percent; national defense, plus 9 percent; veterans, no change; public works, minus 11 percent; and community development, minus 11 percent.●

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK FINANCING NOTIFICATIONS

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Under a previous order of the House, the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. NEAL) is recognized for 5 minutes.

● Mr. NEAL. Mr. Speaker, I call to the attention of my colleagues two communications from the Export-Import Bank which have been referred to me as chairman of the Banking Subcommittee on International Trade Investment and Monetary Policy. The first communication notifies the Congress of a proposed Eximbank transaction to assist in financing the export from the United States of U.S. goods and services to be used in the construction of two thermal powerplants located at Tunghsiao, Taiwan. The second notification would assist in financing U.S. goods and services for a gas cycling project at Alrar, Algeria.

Section 2(b)(3) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945 required the Bank to notify Congress of any proposed loan, guarantee, or combination thereof in an amount of $60 million or more at least 25 days of continuous session of the Congress prior to the date of final approval. Upon expiration of this period, the Bank may give final approval to the transaction unless the Congress dictates otherwise.

In the proposed transaction with the Republic of China, a direct loan of $81,400,000 would be made to the Taiwan Power Co. (Taipower), a 95-percent government-owned corporation, for the purpose of assisting in the purchase from U.S. suppliers of eight 50 MW gas turbine units, steam generating equipment, and related equipment and services. These goods and services will be used in the construction of two 300 MW combined cycle thermal powerplants in Taiwan. The plants will use fossil fuel.

The total cost of the project is $277,300,000 of which U.S. goods and services comprise $148,000,000. To facilitate U.S. participation, the Bank proposes to loan $81,400,000, 55-percent of the U.S. cost. The remaining 45-percent will consist of private loans not guaranteed by Eximbank and cash. The Eximbank credit and private loans, totaling $118,400,000 will be repaid in 20 semiannual installments beginning June 30, 1981. The first six installments and part of the seventh installment will be applied to repayment of the private loans and the balance of the payments will apply to the direct credit extended by Eximbank.

I am inserting at this point in the RECORD the letters from Eximbank pertaining to this transaction with the accompanying materials.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C., July 12, 1978.

Hon. STEPHEN L. NEAL,
Chairman, Subcommittee on International Trade, Investment and Monetary Policy, Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with Section 2(b)(3)(i) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, I have reported to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives on an application currently pending consideration by the Bank. I am taking the liberty of providing you with a copy of this statement.

Sincerely,

JOHN L. MOORE, JR.,
President and Chairman.

The Speaker of the House of Representatives, The Speakers' Room, U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to Section 2(b)(3) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, Eximbank hereby submits a statement to the House of Representatives with respect to the following transaction involving U.S. exports to the Republic of China.

A. Description of Transaction:

1. Purpose:

Eximbank is prepared to extend a direct credit of $81,400,000 to Taiwan Power Company (Taipower) to assist Taipower in the purchase from United States suppliers of eight 50 MW gas turbine units, steam generating equipment and related equipment and services for use in the construction of two 300 MW combined cycle thermal power plants located at Tunghsiao, Taiwan. The plants will use fossil fuel. Repayment of the Eximbank credit will be unconditionally guaranteed by the Republic of China.

While no equipment suppliers have yet been selected, it is known that General Electric is bidding to supply all of the equipment. Gibbs & Hill Engineering Corporation of New York City will provide the engineering services.

The total project cost of the two plants is $277,300,000 of which the total cost of the U.S. goods and services is $148,000,000. Taipower will obtain loans from local banks and government agencies for the local cost of the project, and will also provide its own funds for the project.

2. Identity of the Parties:

Taipower, organized in 1946, is a corporation 95% owned by the Republic of China and its political subdivisions. It has the sole responsibility for the supply of electricity throughout the island of Taiwan. Taipower is one of the largest users of Eximbank's programs for its U.S. purchases and has maintained an excellent credit relationship with Eximbank.

The Ministry of Finance of the Republic of China will issue to Eximbank an unconditional, full faith and credit guarantee for repayment of the Eximbank direct credit.

3. Nature and Use of Goods and Services:

The goods to be exported from the United States are eight of 50 MW gas turbine generators, two 100 MW waste heat recovery steam units, auxiliary electrical and mechanical equipment, miscellaneous equipment and spare parts. The U.S. originated services are engineering services and ocean freight on U.S. flag vessels. To date only the engineering services from Gibbs and Hill have been contracted, with the remaining U.S. goods and services to be ordered in the next few months.

The U.S. goods and services will provide for two 300 MW combined cycle thermal power plants, located on the western coast of Taiwan. The two plants will supply approximately 8 percent of Taiwan's electricity needs and will be utilized to meet peak power demand. The two plants will burn light distillated oil to be supplied under a long-term contract with the government-owned Chinese Petroleum Company.

B. Explanation of Eximbank Financing:

1. Reasons:

The Eximbank direct credit of $81,400,000 will facilitate the export of $148,000,000 of United States goods and services.

Eximbank perceives no adverse impact on the United States economy from the export of these goods and services. This transaction will have a favorable impact on employment for substantial numbers of United States workers, as well as on the United States balance of trade. None of the goods to be exported are in short supply in the United States.

The domestic market for conventional power equipment has been well below the United States productive capacity. Foreign orders, therefore, have become a vital portion of United States thermal power equipment manufactures' business which enables those manufacturers to retain specialized engineering and technical staffs and production work forces.

General Electric has informed us that the equipment it would be supplying would require 3,529 man years of work at its facilities, principally in Greenville, South Carolina where unemployment is 5.6%; Lynn Massachusetts where unemployment is 6.5%; Portland, Maine where unemployment is also 6.5%; Pittsfield, Massachusetts where unemployment is 6.1%; and Schenectady, New York where unemployment is 4.5%. Gibbs and Hill estimates that it will take 83 man-years of U.S. personnel to perform the engineering services.

Private financing without Eximbank guarantee is available only for the construction period and the earliest years of the repayment period. Lenders of the private financing for this transaction have informed us that they are prepared to extend the private financing without an Eximbank guarantee for a term not to exceed 6 years. In this transaction, there is a total term of nearly 12½ years consisting of a 2½-year construction period and a ten-year repayment period. Thus, private financing is inadequate to meet the total financial requirements of this project and the Eximbank direct credit is necessary in order to generate sufficient financing for the U.S. sales.

The United States suppliers have had a long beneficial relationship with Taipower as a result of their dependable performance and superior technology. However, today manufacturers in nearly all of the industrial countries are fully capable of supplying all or nearly all of the goods and services for the two power plants, and in most instances at prices substantially below the cost of the U.S. goods and services. In the past, Eximbank has received information that suppliers in Japan, Switzerland, United Kingdom and West Germany, with the strong support of the official exports credit agencies in each of these countries, submitted bids for the procurement of major equipment categories for projects similar to the two plants. All were lower in price than the comparable U.S. costs.

In view of the magnitude of the transaction and the necessary repayment term, Eximbank's credit is necessary to secure this sale for United States suppliers.

2. The Financing Plan:

The total cost of United States goods and services to be purchased by Taipower is $148,000,000, which will be financed as follows:

| | Amount | Percent of U.S. costs |
|---|---|---|
| Cash | $29,600,000 | 20 |
| Eximbank credit | 81,400,000 | 55 |
| Private loans not guaranteed by Eximbank | 37,000,000 | 25 |
| Total | 148,000,000 | 100 |

(a) Eximbank Charges:

The Eximbank credit will bear interest at the rate of 8¼% per annum, payable semianually. A commitment fee of 0.5% per annum will also be charged on the undisbursed portion of the Eximbank credit.

(b) Repayment Terms:

The Eximbank credit and private loans, which total $118,400,000, will be repaid by Taipower in 20 semiannual installments beginning June 30, 1981. The first 6 installments and part of the 7th installment will be applied to repayment of the private loans and the balance of the 7th and all of the last 13 installments will be applied to repayment of the Eximbank direct credit.

Sincerely,

JOHN L. MOORE, Jr.,
President and Chairman.

The second transaction would assist in financing the construction of a gas cycling project to produce condensates and liquefied petroleum gas in Algeria. Eximbank proposes to extend a loan of $165,000,000 to Societe Nationale pour la Recherche, la Production. le Transport, la Tranformation et la Commercialisation des Hydrocarbures (SONATRACH), a state-owned enterprise of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria. This project should be distinguished from the two Algerian liquefied natural gas projects, one already funded by Eximbank and one pending approval.

The total cost of the project is $336,000,000. Of this amount. U.S. costs comprise $220,000,000. Eximbank proposes to loan $165,000,000 or 75 percent of the U.S. content. A cash payment of $33,000,000 and private loans not guaranteed by Eximbank of $22,000,000 total $55,000,000, the remaining 25 percent. The Eximbank loan plus the private loans will be repaid in 20 equal semiannual payments starting January 1, 1983. The private loans will be repaid out of the first two and part of the third payments. The Eximbank loan will be repaid from the remainder.

The Eximbank credit will bear interest at the rate of 8.5-percent per annum and carry a commitment fee of 0.5-percent per annum on the undisbursed portion of the Eximbank loan.

I am inserting at this point in the RECORD the letters from Eximbank pertaining to this transaction with the accompanying materials. I welcome any comments mv colleagues mav wish to offer concerning these two proposed transactions.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK,
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C. June 29, 1978.

Hon. STEPHEN L. NEAL,
Chairman, Subcommittee on International Trade, Investment and Monetary Policy, Committee on Banking, Finance and Urban Affairs, U.S. House of Representatives, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. CHAIRMAN: In accordance with Section 2(b)(3)(i) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, I have reported to the President of the Senate and the Speaker of the House of Representatives on an application currently pending consideration by the Bank. I am taking the liberty of providing you with a copy of this statement.

Sincerely,

JOHN L. MOORE, JR.,
President and Chairman.

EXPORT-IMPORT BANK
OF THE UNITED STATES,
Washington, D.C. June 29, 1978.

THE SPEAKER OF THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES,
The Speaker's Room, U.S. Capitol, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SPEAKER: Pursuant to Section 2(b)(3)(i) of the Export-Import Bank Act of 1945, as amended, Eximbank hereby submits a statement to the United States House of Representatives with respect to the following transaction involving U.S. exports to Algeria.

A. Description of Transaction:

1. Purpose:

Eximbank is prepared to extend a direct credit in the amount of $165,000,000 to Societe Nationale pour la Recherche, la Production, le Transport, la Transformation et la Commercialisation des Hydrocarbures (SONATRACH), a state-owned enterprise of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria, to assist in financing the export from the United States of U.S. goods and services for a gas cycling project (Alrar Project) to produce condensates and liquefied petroleum gas (LPG) at Alrar in southeastern Algeria.

The total direct costs of the Alrar Project are estimated at $336,000,000. Of this total, non-Algerian costs will amount to $274,000,000, including U.S. costs of $220,000,000; Algerian costs will be $62,000,000.

The Alrar Project represents another step in the SONATRACH program for the prudent utilization of Algeria's gas reserves. Its primary purpose is to maximize the recovery of associated gas, now flared, from two major oil-producing reservoirs, as well as the recovery of the heavier liquefiable hydrocarbons from the Alrar gas field that would be lost to the reservoir if not produced under a pressure maintenance and cycling method. The gas cycling process is designed to remove the condensates and LPG, i.e., propane and butane, and then reinject the dry gas (methane) into the field. This process involves the continuous removal of the natural gas liquids and eventual exploitation of the dry gas.

The Alrar Project, as now planned, is unrelated to the liquefied natural gas (LNG) projects now under way for which Eximbank financing has been extended (LNG-1) and for which Eximbank financing has been requested (LNG–2). LNG, which is almost pure methane, is to be distinguished from condensates and LPG, which will be the principal products of the Alrar Project.

2. Identity of the Parties:

SONATRACH is the state-owned monopoly of Algeria under the jurisdiction of the Ministry of Energy and Petrochemical Industries charged with the responsibility for the development of Algeria's oil and gas resources.

Banque Algerienne de Developpement is the government-owned development bank which will guarantee repayment of Eximbank's credit for and on behalf of the Democratic and Popular Republic of Algeria.

3. Nature and Use of Goods and Services:

The principal U.S. goods to be exported from the United States for use in the construction and operation of the Alrar Project will be structural steel, compressors and drivers, tanks, heat exchangers, fabricated equipment, piping, electrical equipment and instruments. The principal U.S. services will be to provide engineering design, construction supervision and start-up and training. Major U.S. suppliers for the Project are subsidiaries, which are located in Houston, Texas, and California, of the Fluor Corporation, Irvine, California, as well as various U.S. manufacturing firms yet to be selected.

B. Explanation of Eximbank Financing:

1. Reasons:

Domestic Employment.—The proposed extension of a $165,000,000 credit by Eximbank will facilitate the export of $220,000,000 of U.S. goods and services. In addition to the engineering, design, and construction work that will result from this Project for Fluor, many other U.S. firms will receive contracts to supply equipment, with the result that U.S. export sales for the Alrar Project will generate an estimated 1,350 man-years of direct manufacturing labor in the United States.

Foreign Competition.—The award of this contract to a U.S. company will help maintain the competitive position of the United States in an important area of technology, with respect to both engineering and construction services and to the supply of equipment. There has been active European and Canadian compeitition for this Project and for similar projects in the Rhourde Nouss and Oued Noumer gas fields, for which official export credit support has been offered.

No Adverse Impact.—None of the goods or services to be exported is in short supply in the United States, and Eximbank perceives no adverse impact on the U.S. economy from the export of these goods and services.

Advantages of Project.—The Alrar Project fits Algeria's program for the development of its natural gas resources. It will generate substantial amounts of foreign exchange earnings, and, by helping to develop Algeria's energy resources, it will also help to expand the world supply of energy.

Repayment Assurances.—The considerable earnings capability of the Project indicates a very comfortable debt service coverage which, together with the guarantee of the Government of Algeria, provides a reasonable assurance of repayment for the Eximbank financing.

2. The Financing Plan:

The total cost of U.S. goods and services to be exported from the United States for the Alrar Project is estimated to be $220,000,000, which will be financed as follows:

| | Dollars | Percent |
|---|---|---|
| Cash payment | $33,000,000 | 15 |
| Eximbank credit | 165,000,000 | 75 |
| Private loans not guaranteed by Eximbank | 22,000,000 | 10 |
| Total | 220,000,000 | 100 |

(a) Eximbank Charges:

The Eximbank Credit will bear interest at the rate of 8.5 percent per annum, payable semiannually. A commitment fee of ½ of 1 percent per annum will be charged on the undisbursed portion of the Eximbank Credit.

(b) Repayment Terms:

The total Eximbank and ungaranteed private financing of $187,000,000 will be repaid by the Borrower in twenty equal semiannual installments, beginning January 1, 1983. The private loans will be repaid out of the first two and part of the third installments, and the Eximbank Credit will be repaid from the remainder.

Sincerely.

JOHN L. MOORE, Jr.,
President and Chairman.●

EXTENSIONS OF REMARKS

LET US SPEAK OUT ON HUMAN RIGHTS

HON. SILVIO O. CONTE

OF MASSACHUSETTS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

● Mr. CONTE. Mr. Speaker, as you know, this week marks the 20th anniversary of Captive Nations Week. This year these 7 days have a special significance.

The recent mock trials of Scharansky and Ginzburg demonstrate that after two decades, our fight to secure basic human freedoms is not yet won. Captive Nations Week is not, as some claim, an annual banal repetition of tired phrases and jaded slogans. For those nations that remain captive, this week is a yearly renewal of hope, an affirmation to the world and to themselves that America still deeply believes in the principles upon which she was founded.

These basic freedoms—freedom of religion, of speech, and self-determination—which we have celebrated as Americans for over 200 years have won global acceptance through the U.N. Charter, the U.N. Declaration of Human Rights, and the Helsinki accords. They belong to all men regardless of where they are born or in what country they live.

It goes almost without saying that the recent actions of the Soviet Government have done more to spotlight the cause of human rights than 435 speeches in the House ever can. The plight of Scharansky and Ginzburg has become the concern of all those who value freedom.

During this Captive Nations Week, let us remind the world that the conviction of these two courageous men is a symbolic rejection by the Soviets of the right of all men to certain freedoms. Only with our vocal support can those who desire freedom attain it.

The Soviet Union and other nations claim that our desire and efforts to see basic human rights affirmed is an encroachment into their domestic affairs. They claim we are foisting our ideals and values upon them.

I can only say that to remain silent would be to condone the repression and the denial of human liberties found in the Soviet Union and other nations. As President Carter said in his inaugural address, "because we are free, we can never be indifferent to the fate of freedom elsewhere."

During this week, let us speak out with more vigor than usual, but let us remember: When basic human rights are violated, words alone are not enough. Let us demonstrate to the world at large, but more importantly to the people of captive nations, that we will work tirelessly until the human rights of all are affirmed.●

MRS. WM. T. DELAPLAINE DIES

HON. GOODLOE E. BYRON

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. BYRON. Mr. Speaker, I would like to take this opportunity to honor the memory of one of Frederick, Maryland's most outstanding citizens, Mrs. Janie Hendry Quynn Delaplaine.

Born in Ijamsville and a relative of Barbara Fritchie, Mrs. Delaplaine gave much of her time and talents to better the community of Frederick. She maintained one of the most beautiful gardens in the area, while still finding time to be an active member of many civic clubs. She was a supporter of Hood College and a past president of the Hood College alumnae association.

Her passing will be felt by all who knew and loved her and I know you will join me in extending the official sympathies of the House in honor of this patriotic American woman.

Please include the attached article from the Post, Frederick, Md.

[From the Post, Frederick, Md.]

MRS. WM. T. DELAPLAINE DIES—WAS "MISS JANIE"

Mrs. Janie Hendry Quynn Delaplaine, one of Frederick's most prominent women and a relative of Barbara Fritchie, died Tuesday, July 18, at her residence, 273 Dill Avenue. She had been ill for some time.

Mrs. Delaplaine was the wife of the late William Theodore Delaplaine, who was the president and manager of the Frederick News-Post from Aug. 15, 1955, until his death April 18, 1964. Mr. Delaplaine was the third son of the founder of The News, William T. Delaplaine.

(Funeral arrangements, under the direction of Robert E. Dailey & Son Funeral Home, will be announced Wednesday).

Mrs. Delaplaine was born in Ijamsville, Jan. 9, 1888, a daughter of the late Charles William and Harriete Eleanor Williams Quynn. She was the last of her immediate family.

She was a life-long member of the Evangelical Reformed United Church of Christ. She was graduated from the Woman's College of Frederick, later known as Hood College, in the Class of 1908. She was an ardent supporter of Hood and had remained active in the Hood Alumnae Association.

Mrs. Delaplaine was a founder and charter member of the Frederick Garden Club, a member of the Board of Directors of the Frederick Memorial Hospital, the Historical Society, the Frederick Art Club, the Salvation Army Auxiliary, and a past president of the Hood College Alumnae Association.

Survivors include her daughter, Mrs. Martin L. (Natalie) Bowers Jr. of West Chester, Pa.; two grandchildren, Martin F. Bowers and Miss Jane Elizabeth Bowers, both of West Chester; two nieces, Mrs. Samuel P. (Virginia-Quynn) Grant of North Carolina and Mrs. Myron W. (Frances Ann Delaplaine) Randall of Braddock Heights, and two nephews, Jack T. Quynn of Frederick and George B. Delaplaine Jr., publisher of the Frederick News-Post.

Mrs. Delaplaine was predeceased by two children—a son, Lt. William T. Delaplaine III, a Navy pilot killed in World War II, and a daughter, Miss Eleanor Frances Delaplaine.

Her son was killed in April 1943 in a plane crash with three other pilots and eight airmen. On May 1, 1949, the Delaplaines dedicated the airport building in Frederick in his name.

Her daughter died suddenly Oct. 22, 1938 and a garden on the Hood campus here bears a memorial plaque in her honor.

Mrs. Delaplaine was an artist, and had studied art under Miss Florence Doub, founder of the Frederick Art Club.

She was also a noted gardener, and maintained at her home one of the outstanding gardens in the city.

Jane Quynn and William Delaplaine were married Nov. 15, 1916, and had taken an anniversary cruise the year before his death.

She dedicated the Physicians Lounge at Frederick Memorial Hospital in her husband's name. She also had established scholarship funds at both Hood College and Washington and Lee University.

She had a life-long association with Hood and had known personally all of its presidents.

It is requested that flowers be omitted and expressions of sympathy be made to the Alumnae Association of Hood College in Memory of Mrs. Delaplaine.●

VIETNAMESE REFUGEES

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, an editorial in the Chicago Sun-Times of July 10 expresses a viewpoint which I completely share regarding President Carter's decision to admit additional Vietnamese refugees into this country. The editorial properly commends the President for his decision, and I wish to insert it at this point for the Members' attention:

HELPING THE "BOAT PEOPLE"

The plight of Indochina's "boat people"—refugees from Vietnam, Laos and Cambodia—is cruel enough in that too few countries accept them. Their tragedy has been increased by the incredible sight of military and civilian ships passing them by, leaving them adrift in their often-makeshift vessels.

To his credit, President Carter last week ordered all American ships to pick up these boat people. A State Department spokesman said the refugees may resettle in the United States if they wish.

Not only will the cost of accepting the refugees be minute compared to the billions spent in the Vietnam War, but we also stand to gain in the long run. Most of the escapees are the kind of people who accept the work ethic and whose activities generate new jobs.

For instance, Leo Cherne, chairman of the International Rescue Committee, says that refugee youngsters already here have proved to be highly motivated students in schools and nearly 92 per cent of the employable adults have found jobs.

Canada has accepted some Indochina refugees, as have Israel and a few other countries. But since Hanoi's victory in Vietnam in 1975, the number of refugees has far exceeded the number accepted. Cherne says churches and individual families can do more to help, too. He's right, and many have.

Carter's decision was a humanitarian one. If other countries follow suit, this modern tragedy can be substantially eased.●

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. JAMES J. BLANCHARD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

● Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, the week of July 16–22 marks the 20th annual observance of Captive Nations Week.

During this week we take note of our commitment to help those who are not free. Yet we do so at a time when the Soviet Union has taken bold and concerted steps to stifle the spirit of freedom in their country. It is indeed frustrating and disgusting to find the Soviet Union actually making a deliberate effort to move against freedom, by further hardening their oppressive policies. Their recent actions in the trials of Anatoly Shcharansky, Alexandr Ginsburg, and Victor Pektus demonstrate a desire to systematically blot out the vestiges of a human rights movement—and they do so by employing their characteristic tool of fear. It is frightening, yet it nevertheless should be said, that the Soviet Union feels it is in a position to ignore worldwide reaction to the trials, in order to better enforce oppressive policies within their own country.

Soviet officials may believe that they can intimidate, through fear of reprisal, the many brave men and women of their own country who have spoken out against the failure of the Soviets to honor international agreements such as the Helsinki accords. Yet we cannot allow them to believe that their cruel and unjust actions will silence the outcry of the free world. We must continue to speak out, bu we must also do more.

It is time that we begin to seriously assess what kinds of more substantive actions we can undertake in such areas as economic or technological exchanges. The words of freedom have clearly had a major impact on the Soviet Union. The idea of freedom itself is disturbing to the Soviet Union because it filters even through the barriers of fear and oppression.

Yet we must now back up those words with actions—actions which force them to take seriously the commitments to human rights that they agreed to at Helsinki, actions which they cannot ignore by turning inward and imposing more oppressive sanctions against their own people.

Over the past two decades we have helped contribute to the strength of the Soviet Union through economic and technological exchanges. Let us reevaluate our policy of cooperation in these areas. For true cooperation is hinged on the premise that each party will honor its end of an agreement. The Soviet Union has not displayed this sense of cooperation because they have blatantly failed to uphold the human rights provisions which they agreed to at Helsinki. How can we continue to cooperate through economic and technological exchanges, with a party that has been as uncooperative and untrustworthy as the Soviet Union? Their recent actions in fact demonstrate how far they are willing to go in scoffing at the very notion of cooperation. We must remain undaunted in this struggle to bring freedom to those who have been denied their most basic rights. Perhaps today, during the observance of Captive Nations Week, more than at any other time in recent years, it is necessary for the people of the free world to stand up and proclaim that we will not retreat from the task before us—that we will not allow the spirit that has been displayed by the people of the captive nations to be lost or spent in vain. In deed, we must reassert with renewed vigor, our commitment to bring freedom and independence to the people of the captive nations.●

PROHIBITION ON SEX DISCRIMINATION BASED ON PREGNANCY

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, last fall the Senate passed S. 995, legislation to amend the Civil Rights Act to make it unlawful for an employer to deny pregnancy disability benefits to an employee while providing other disability benefits. I am a supporter of this legislation; it guarantees the right of women workers to the disability benefits they have earned.

Nevertheless, on July 18 I voted against H.R. 6075, the House version of the pregnancy disability bill, which was brought up under a suspension of the rules and passed by a vote of 376 to 43.

Only noncontroversial measures are supposed to be brought up under suspension of the rules, a procedure that permits no amendments. However, H.R. 6075 is anything but noncontroversial. For, as reported out of the Education and Labor Committee, the House bill has been amended to permit employers to withhold pregnancy disability benefits from employees seeking to use them for abortion while requiring the same employers to provide benefits in all other pregnancy-related cases.

The right to choose an abortion is every woman's constitutionally protected right as recognized by the Supreme Court in 1973. For the House to abridge a woman's civil rights in a bill intended to protect women's civil rights makes a mockery of both the pregnancy disability bill and the right to choose.

I want my vote on H.R. 6075 to be understood clearly. It was not a vote against pregnancy disability benefits, which I wholeheartedly support. It was a vote for the House of Representatives to face up to the very real and deep controversy that exists when civil rights legislation is used to authorize discrimination. The bill should have been brought up for full debate and an opportunity should have been afforded to strike the antiabortion amendment from the bill.●

TWENTIETH OBSERVANCE OF CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

● Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I join my colleagues in the 20th observance of Captive Nations Week. Having participated in this anniversary since its inception, I believe my basic position is well known on this issue. I would, however, like to make a few brief comments in the light of the current status of East-West relations.

First, let me reemphasize my strong conviction that there is nothing inconsistent about expressing U.S. concern over the denial of civil liberties in much of the world today and attempting to negotiate meaningful agreements with other nations, including those who disagree with us on a variety of issues involving our security and overriding national interest.

As chairman of the Committee on International Relations, I fully support the administration's efforts to conclude a mutually acceptable arms control accord. Such an agreement should, I believe, be judged on its own merits and not be viewed as an expression of approval or disapproval of Soviet actions in other fields or other areas of the world.

By the same token, our commitment to the negotiation process should never be interpreted to mean that we condone Soviet oppression over its own minorities or over the peoples of Eastern Europe. Neither does it mean that we accept Soviet "adventurism" in Africa or Soviet violations of the Helsinki accords. President Carter is, in my judgment, entirely justified in making that distinction clear. He is also right in pointing out that while we have to live in the world as it is, and not as we would like it to be, the United States should not lose sight of the goals and principles upon which the Nation was founded. We should, in fact, "stand for something" and uphold our ideals—even an admittedly imperfect international environment.

Captive Nations Week serves as a reminder to all Americans that as long as the ideological struggle continues, as our adversaries consistently proclaim it will—and must—there is no more compelling human ideal or aspiration than the desire for freedom.●

PATENT POLICY VERSUS INNOVATION

HON. MIKE McCORMACK

OF WASHINGTON

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. McCORMACK. Mr. Speaker, in the June 30, 1978, issue of Science magazine, which is published by the American Association for the Advancement of Science, Mr. William Carey, publisher, printed an incisive and articulate appraisal of patent policies established by the Federal Government, and the effect these policies may have on innovation and the benefits arising from our investment of billions of Federal dollars in research and development.

Mr. Carey's thoughts merit careful consideration by the Members of Congress who are sincerely concerned with the need for the public to obtain even a reasonable benefit from our Federal research and development programs. Accordingly, I am taking this opportunity to insert the editorial in the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD. I hope that it may stimulate serious thought in the minds of the Members of Congress, the administration, and the general public, to the end that we may consider our patent policies and program requirements associated with research and development funding.

We have waited too long to address this matter realistically. Mr. Carey's editorial makes this plain. It should stimulate us to corrective action.

The editorial is as follows:

PATENT POLICY VERSUS INNOVATION

The United States is engaged in a massive research and development effort which, measured in current dollars, is edging close to the level of $50 billion annually, counting outlays in both the federal and the private sector. The budget for R & D in government calls for more than $28 billion in the next fiscal year. There is no doubt that the R & D input is strong. The output side may be a very different story.

We support R & D to learn something that we do not know, and to make use of what we learn. Like any other type of investment, R & D is expected to yield returns. In the case of government-financed R & D the question arises, Are the investors getting full and timely return? Are the results of federally funded R & D finding their way into the market?

The evidence, as usual, seems mixed. About 8000 inventions are said to be generated each year from government-financed R & D, many of which are patentable. Not enough of these apparently reach the market. Some 30,000 government-owned patents are piled up awaiting takers. To that extent, the national economy is not being enriched and utilization is forestalled. It is a baffling situation until one realizes that the blockage occurs largely in the government's patent policy.

The government operates on the proposition that the economic rewards from federally funded R & D should be captured by the government, or shared only grudgingly with others, since public funds were used. The view prevails that if rights to the discovery were released to private developers on an exclusive basis unreasonable private enrichment could occur. There is scant evidence to support these apprehensions, but the doctrine is riveted into the government's thinking. The effect is that the market incentive to develop government-financed discoveries is circumscribed and inventions are isolated from normal risk-taking and pursuit.

It is not hard to see how this can inhibit the prospects for pass-through of discoveries from biomedical research or energy-related R & D. We see a prodigious R & D enterprise, fueled by tax dollars, constrained from diffusing its results because of a public policy barrier. Throughout the enterprise, discoveries sit stranded and aging. Meanwhile, we search for clues as to what is wrong with U.S. technological innovation, and how it is that foreign industry can undercut American competitiveness and employment.

As usual, public policies are muddled, conflicting more often than complementing one another. In the new study ordered by President Carter of the problems assailing industrial innovation, a fresh opportunity is provided to reexamine both the premises and the consequences of government patent policies. There is ample evidence that the costs of producing and marketing an invention are many times as great as the outlays on the R & D that led to the invention. Not many developers will take these risks with inventions resulting from federal R & D, in the absence of clear ownership.

It begins to appear that we have thought of "science policy" too much in terms of stimulating R & D and too little in terms of liberating its results. The benefits of federally funded R & D are hard enough to realize without the added drag of a dubious policy on patents. A public which is regularly lectured on the promise and performance of science may not be grateful to learn that government's rules are blocking research applications. That could be far more harmful to science than the Golden Fleece awards.

Public policy, if wisely designed, can stimulate economic pursuit of government-financed inventions while at the same time minimizing the risk of abuses. What is clear is that the present patent policies will not get us innovation, nor health and energy benefits, nor economic growth, nor trade competitiveness. We can hardly make the case that R & D contributes significantly to the nation's economy if, at the same time, we isolate its results from utilization. Here is a notable "Catch 22" in federal R & D policy, and it is time to bring it into the open.●

RECOGNITION OF RITA WHITTAKER

HON. ROBERT J. LAGOMARSINO

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. LAGOMARSINO. Mr. Speaker and distinguished Congressmen, I would like to take this opportunity on behalf of myself and that of my late colleague, the Honorable Bill Ketchum, to recognize the great contributions of his constituent, Mrs. Rita Whittaker, for her 30 years of loyalty, devotion, and dedication as administrative assistant to the superintendent of the Panama Union School District. She is considered by her colleagues as one of the most highly esteemed and universally loved individuals in the field of education in Kern County, Calif. Mrs. Whittaker is not only recognized for her contributions to education but also for unselfish contribution of time and energy to innumerable community projects. Currently, a petition is being circulated to name a school in her honor. So I ask my fellow colleagues to help me give thanks to such an outstanding citizen. We wish her a very long, healthy, and relaxful retirement.●

ARE NUCLEAR PLANTS SAFE?

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, time and time again, in my work on the House Interior Subcommittee on Energy and the Environment, I have seen the Nuclear Regulatory Commission provide less than full and candid information to our subcommittee, despite repeated requests to the contrary. The accompanying articles illustrate that they have succeeded in this case. I will not repeat or summarize what the following articles say, for they do a fine job of laying out a picture of what appears to be a serious lack of strict safety regulation by a former Atomic Energy Commission official who is now the Chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. This type of incident is not new to our subcommittee, and we will be investigating it thoroughly. I hope that by placing these articles in the RECORD, that other Members become aware of one of the main stumbling blocks to the further advancement of nuclear power: The apparent actions to protect the nuclear power industry by an agency charged with the protection of the public health and safety. It is a lack of confidence in the NRC that is a contributing factor in the Congress declining support of nuclear power as an energy option for the future. I hope that this confidence can be restored, and am heartened by the recent appointment of Dr. Ahearne as the fifth NRC Commissioner. This is a step in the right direction.

The articles follow:

HE FOUGHT SAFETY PLAN IN '72, NRC HEAD SAYS

(By John J. Fialka)

After prodding from Congress, the head of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission has released a document showing he opposed a suggested major change in the design of nuclear power plant safety systems in 1972.

In the memo, released yesterday, the NRC's current chairman, Joseph M. Hendrie, said that although the proposed design change "is an attractive one in some ways," implementing it would conflict with "conventional wisdom" in the nuclear power field.

"Reversal of this hallowed policy, particularly at this time, could well be the end of nuclear power. It would throw into question the continued operation of licensed plants . . . and would generally create more turmoil than I can stand thinking about," the memo states.

Key portions of the memo and others showing that the NRC's predecessor, the Atomic Energy Commission, may have been pressured not to release information about the design problem, had been withheld from an anti-nuclear group, the Union of Concerned Scientists, on the grounds that if they were released under the Freedom of Information Act they would "inhibit the free exchange of opinion" among the staff of the NRC.

Hendrie, who wrote the memo while he was deputy director of licensing for the AEC, reversed the policy yesterday after Sen. Gary W. Hart, D-Colo., suggested in a letter to Hendrie that public release might "improve the credibility of the commission."

Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz., chairman of the House Interior Committee, was also reported to be miffed about the matter. "It seems to be a problem that was withheld from public hearings on safety issues," complained a Udall aide.

The problem was first raised by Dr. Stephen Hanauer, a technical advisor at the AEC and the NRC, who has the reputation of being a "devil's advocate," a man who often questions accepted engineering practices within the nuclear industry in order to stimulate better safety measures.

In a memo written in November 1971, Hanauer argued that a small leak in pressurized pipes carrying superheated water in the reactors designed by General Electric—of which there are more than 50 in use or under construction in the United States—could bypass a pool of water used as a safety device to condense any steam escaping from the nuclear reactor.

The escaping steam would eventually "overpressurize" the dome surrounding the nuclear plant, causing it to collapse, Hanauer suggested.

He added, "GE wants us and ACRS (an advisory panel of outside scientists and engineers used by the AEC and the NRC) not to mention the problem publicly. They are afraid of delaying hearings in progress."

Hendrie, one of nine AEC officials who were asked to comment on the Hanauer memo, wrote a brief memo to his superior, John F. O'Leary, who has since become deputy secretary of the Department of Energy.

Asked about this controversial response, Hendrie said, "I sort of dashed it off in a hurry. It was meant to be a casual, flippant sort of a note that doesn't attempt to be explicit about the issue."

Hendrie said the problem posed by the possibility of a slow leak was later corrected by procedures and design changes to make sure that "vacuum relief valves" used in the GE pipes do not stick open. There is no ban on the GE design under consideration, Hendrie asserted. "They (GE's plants) present an adequate level of safety," he said.

Robert D. Pollard, a former GE engineer who now works for the Union of Concerned Scientists, has charged that the design feature allows GE to use much cheaper domes over its plants than the heavy steel and concrete ones used by its chief competitor, Westinghouse. The dome is intended to be the last barrier between the radioactive materials in the plant and the outside environment.

Pollard has charged that the withholding of the documents constituted a "cover-up" and possible "illegal activity on the part of former AEC officials, now officials of the NRC."

Hendrie, who yesterday authorized the release of the memo and 153 other documents he signed while he worked for the AEC, asserted that the problem was never covered up and that new refinements of the GE design are being considered.

"My, we had some splendid fights in those days. Everybody in town ought to find something he can be offended at in there," Hendrie said, referring to the documents. With the exception of documents signed by NRC chairmen, Hendrie believes that comments made in the heat of debate over safety designs should be withheld to permit a "frank discussion."

Bertram Wolfe, vice president of GE's nuclear program, said he had "no knowledge" of any attempt by GE to get the AEC to suppress public discussion of the problem.

The GE design, he asserted, "is safer" than its competitors because "it reduces the pressure almost immediately."

NUCLEAR OFFICIAL SOUGHT TO SUPPRESS MEMO

(By David Burnham)

WASHINGTON, June 22.—The chairman of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission last month sought to suppress a memorandum he wrote in 1972 in which he contended that a plan to solve an important reactor safety problem "could well be the end of nuclear power."

Joseph M. Hendrie, who wrote the memorandum when he was an official of the Atomic Energy Commission, further argued in it that if the plan was adopted it "would generally create more turmoil than I can stand thinking about."

Though the Government took no action in 1972, the commission earlier this year exempted 21 of the 70 reactors operating in the United States from a Government rule requiring a "sufficient margin of safety" because of continuing concern about some of the same problems that had been raised in the original discussion.

Mr. Hendrie, in an interview yesterday, acknowledged that he decided last month to refuse a request for the memorandum by the Union of Concerned Scientists, an anti-nuclear group that had asked for the document under the Freedom of Information Act. Today, after inquiries from Congress, he placed his 1972 memorandum and several other documents into the public record.

WRITTEN IN HASTE

He said in the interview that the 1972 memorandum had been written in great haste and was "smart alecky" and that his decision to attempt to block its release to the public was wrong.

Daniel F. Ford, director of the Union of Concerned Scientists, today voiced criticism of the memorandum and the way it had been handled.

"Dr. Hendrie's memorandum indicates that the nuclear regulatory process has been perverted by officials who are more interested in protecting the nuclear industry from criticism than in protecting the public health and safety," he said.

Mr. Hendrie agreed that his 1972 memorandum could be read as an indication that he was more concerned about the nuclear industry than nuclear safety. But he contended that such an interpretation "does not reflect my views then or now."

When he wrote the memorandum, Mr. Hendrie was the deputy director of licensing for technical review of the Atomic Energy Commission, the predecessor of the Nuclear Regulatory Commission. The commission is responsible for assuring the safe operation of nuclear reactors.

The memorandum was prompted by a recommendation made by Stephen H. Hanauer, then technical adviser to the director of regulation of the Atomic Energy Commission.

PROBLEMS IN PRESSURE SYSTEM

Dr. Hanauer, on Sept. 20, 1972, said that "recent events have highlighted the safety disadvantages of pressure suppression containments," a technically complex system designed to handle the heat and pressures that would result if a reactor somehow lost its cooling system in a serious accident.

Although Dr. Hanauer said such pressure containment systems had some advantages, he added that "on balance I believe the disadvantages are preponderant. I recommend that the A.E.C. adopt a policy of discouraging further use of pressure-suppression containments, and that such designs not be accepted for construction permits filed after a date to be decided.

Four days later, Mr. Hendrie wrote his memorandum.

It began by saying that "Steve's idea to ban pressure suppression containment schemes is an attractive one in some ways."

Mr. Hendrie noted, however, that system was widely accepted by all elements of the nuclear field. "Reversal of this hallowed policy, particularly at this time, could well be the end of nuclear power. It would throw into question the continued operation of licensed plant, would make unlicensable the G.E. and Westinghouse ice condensor plants, and would generally create more turmoil than I can stand thinking about."

The pressure suppression containment system was designed by the General Electric Company for its nuclear reactors. The system is an integral part of 21 of the reactors now operating in the United States, including those owned by Consolidated Edison, the Niagara Mohawk Power Corporation, the Power Authority of the State of New York, the Connecticut Yankee Atomic Power Company and Jersey Central Power and Light.

According to a recent report by the N.R.C.'s Advisory Committee on Reactor Safeguards, several of the problems raised by Dr. Hanauer in his 1972 proposal are still considered unresolved questions "important in assuring the health and safety of the public."

Following inquiries from Representative Morris K. Udall, Democrat of Arizona, chairman of the House Interior Committee, and Senator Gary W. Hart, Democrat of Colorado, chairman of the Subcommittee on Nuclear Regulation, Mr. Hendrie requested Dr. Hanauer to give his current opinion about pressure containment systems.

Dr. Hanauer, still a staff member of the N.R.C., replied that despite his 1972 recommendations that the system be abandoned he believed then and believed now that "we have adequate assurance of their safety."

NUCLEAR OFFICIALS HUSHED WARNING

(By David Hoffman)

WASHINGTON.—Six years ago, top U.S. nuclear energy officials were quietly urged to ban new construction of certain nuclear power plants because of safety risks in the containment system designed to absorb the heat of a major nuclear accident.

But a previously undisclosed memo shows that Joseph M. Hendrie, then a high-ranking Atomic Energy Commission official and now the nation's top nuclear regulator, threw out the suggestion because he feared it "could mean the end of nuclear power."

"It would throw into question the continued operation of licensed plants . . . and would generally create more turmoil than I can stand thinking about," said Hendrie, who is now chairman of the U.S. Nuclear Regulatory Commission.

Hendrie's conclusions were censored by the NRC when the letter was released recently to the Union of Concerned Scientists, an anti-nuclear activist group. But the full text was obtained by the I-G's Washington bureau.

The disclosure of Hendrie's memo is likely to fuel new controversy on Capitol Hill about what critics view as the protective attitude that the NRC has taken of the nuclear power industry it is charged with regulating.

The original suggestion—to halt the building of so-called "pressure-suppression" containments—was never adopted, and currently about 20 U.S. nuclear power plants are licensed to operate with this containment system. Thirteen were licensed after 1972.

The containment is a doughnut-shaped ring encircling the reactor, holding water that would be used to condense onrushing steam in the event of a core melt-down.

In September, 1972, Stephen Hanauer, technical advisor to AEC's director of regulation, pulled together a series of safety concerns he had about the pressure-suppression containment system, concluding that there were a "preponderance of disadvantages" with it.

But, Hanauer says today, "I don't think it was taken very seriously."

"The memorandum was exceedingly significant," Daniel Ford, executive director of the Union of Concerned Scientists, testified last week before the House energy and environment subcommittee chaired by Rep. Morris K. Udall, D-Ariz.

". . . It refers to the nuclear containment system . . . of the type primarily used on General Electric nuclear plants," he said. "Hanauer's conclusions that the safety disadvantages were such that GE should no longer be permitted to use it had far-reaching implications for public safety."

Bert Sobon, manager of containment licensing for General Electric, defended the safety of the pressure-suppression containment system. He said it had numerous advantages over the "dry" containments that are just concrete shells around the reactor.

At least seven pressure-suppression containment systems had already been licensed and in operation when Hanauer wrote his 1972 memo raising questions about safety risks in the system.

In his letter, Hanauer warned that valves which play a crucial role in the safety of the pressure-suppression system "do not have a very good reliability record." If the valves are not working properly, Hanauer said, the increased hydrogen volume in the chamber could create an "explosive mixture."

Moreover, Hanauer said that 10-year-old test data on safety risks provided by General Electric—and accepted "for many years" by the AEC—had turned out to be "incorrect" because it was "not applicable" to accident conditions.

Taken together, Hanauer said, the "disadvantages are preponderant" in pressure-suppression containment.

"I recommend that the AEC adopt a policy of discouraging further use of pressure-suppression containment and that such designs not be accepted for construction permits filed after a date to be decided.

But Hanauer says that "nothing" happened after his warning was issued. To this day, he says, he has never received a response from those who received it.

Hanauer's letter was sent to several top nuclear safety and licensing officials, including Hendrie, who was at the time deputy director for technical review at the AEC's directorate of licensing. A copy also went to John F. O'Leary, then the AEC's head of licensing and now a top U.S. Energy Department official.

On Sept. 25, Hendrie wrote a two-paragraph memo to O'Leary in which he acknowledged that the idea to "ban pressure-suppression containments is an attractive one . . ."

But Hendrie rejected any shift in federal policy because, he said, acceptance of pressure-suppression "by all elements of the nuclear field . . . is firmly embedded in the convention wisdom."

"Reversal of this hallowed policy, particularly at this time, could well be the end of nuclear power," he said.

Hendrie has refused all comment on his remarks or why he had them censored before release to the Union of Concerned Scientists. O'Leary could not be reached for comment.

However, it was learned that Hendrie has been asked for an explanation from both sides of Congress. He is scheduled to respond this week to letters from Udall and from Sen. Gary Hart, D-Colo., who chair the key Senate subcommittee that oversees the NRC.

The censored version of Hendrie's memo surfaced last week during UCS testimony before Udall's subcommittee on the Carter Administration's bill to speed up nuclear licensing procedures. The UCS charged that Hendrie had failed to disclose Hanauer's concerns in official safety reports.

"There is a broad discrepancy between internal federal assessments of nuclear power plant safety and what is reported in official safety evaluation reports," said Ford of UCS.

The disclosure of Hendrie's memo comes on the heels of previous incidents in which Udall and others on Capitol Hill have criticized the NRC's reluctance to disclose information unfavorable to the nuclear power industry.

"Some of the commissioners and staff continued to be imbued with the notion carried over from the AEC era that there exists a duty to protect nuclear power from its critics, rather than lay out all the facts, no matter how unpleasant they may be," Udall charged in a recent report on the NRC.

In another memo recently released to the UGS, Hanauer recounted a meeting of a special AEC task force set up in November 1971 to study the problem of steam leakage in pressure suppression chambers.

In his notes, Hanauer said that General Electric wanted federal regulators "not to mention the problem publicly" because they were "afraid of delaying hearings in progress."

But Hanauer insisted at the time, that a "commitment" should be obtained from General Electric "to study and fix the problem in whatever way is found . . . all safety evaluations reports from now on will have to 'fess up.'"

Solutions were later found to some of the safety concerns raised in Hanauer's original 1972 letter, but questions have persisted about pressure-suppression systems.

New research brought to the NRC's attention in April 1975 by General Electric cast doubt on the safety margins in earlier nuclear plants, and recently 20 boiling water reactors were granted official waivers by the NRC until a long-term program is completed to bring them into compliance with U.S. safety standards.●

AMBASSADOR ANDREW YOUNG

HON. JAMES ABDNOR

OF SOUTH DAKOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. ABDNOR. Mr. Speaker, like most Americans, the people of South Dakota are shocked and ashamed at United Nations Ambassador Andrew Young's most recent public utterances.

I have the highest personal regard for our House colleague and the distinguished record which brought him to his present position of world power and influence. Yet, it sometimes seems that Mr. Young does not realize the reverberations of his statements on the conduct of U.S. foreign policy, for which he is supposed to be a defender and spokesman.

The fine art of diplomacy requires far more sensitivity than that imposed upon most of us in public life.

Evidence of widespread dissatisfaction with Mr. Young's performance and public statements comes to me daily from constituents in all walks of life and of differing political persuasions.

Although this is not just a partisan issue—it is an American issue that reflects upon all citizens and our very system of government—the South Dakota Republican State Central Committee has asked me to insert in the RECORD the text of a resolution adopted at Pierre, S. Dak., on July 15, as follows:

RESOLUTION

Whereas, by his public utterances Ambassador Andrew Young demonstrated a deliberate insensitivity to the desperate condition of Jews and other dissidents in the Soviet Union, and lack of understanding of the outrage of most Americans at the brutal and undeserved punishment of Alexander Ginzburg and Anatoly Scharansky:

And whereas, his false allegations concerning political dissenters in the United States has brought discredit upon our political system and has aided the Soviet Union in its attempts to avoid compliance with the Helsinki accords,

It is therefore resolved, that this South Dakota Republican State Central Committee demands that a new ambassador to the United Nations be appointed who does represent the thinking of the American people.●

COMMENTS ON ASBESTOS CONTROL

HON. GLENN M. ANDERSON

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. ANDERSON of California. Mr. Speaker, as many of our colleagues know, I am deeply interested in and concerned with the problems of exposure to asbestos in our general environment, and our workplace. There is much to be done before we solve this problem.

I feel that the commander of the Long Beach Naval Shipyard, Capt. Ed Kaune, is taking aggressive action to try to solve the problem of asbestos usage and control in his shipyard. This, however, is only going to be part of a solution.

I would like to make sure that there is absolutely no placement of asbestos in new ships for any utilization where there is a functionally acceptable substitute. The letter which I received from the Navy, dated July 14, implied that this might be the case, but seemed to avoid clearly stating this to be so.

The letter did state, and this disturbs me, that asbestos would only be removed during the ordinary course of overhaul, regardless of its condition. Apparently, asbestos could be crumbling before their eyes, and it would not be replaced until the scheduled overhaul.

An employer should act in a more responsible manner when his workers lives are at stake. And, of course in this case, the employer is all of us; the people of the United States.

The people of this country should insist that the health of workers in the private sector is also protected. I have written to the Occupational Safety and Health Administration, urging that much tougher standards be imposed on the use of asbestos in the workplace. The current standard which allows 2.0 asbestos fibers per cubic centimeter is little more than a very sick joke; a deadly joke. Two and a half years ago, ISHA proposed a standard allowing only 0.5 fibers, and this has yet to be approved. The National Institute for Occupational Safety and Health, in 1976, recommended a standard based on 0.1 asbestos fibers per cubic centimeter.

Clearly, Federal health experts feel that the asbestos standards the American worker must live with today could kill him tomorrow.●

THEATER NUCLEAR BALANCE

HON. JOHN BRECKINRIDGE

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, in the first entry in the regional part of my Balances of Power series (Book III), NATO's increasing vulnerability to a Warsaw Pact attack was explained in an article by Justice Galen. Today, continuing our look at the region of NATO's center sector, the same author—a pen name—examines the growing imbalance which is the most troublesome, certainly, to the Europeans and most destabilizing in the absence of corrective action by NATO and the United States: the imbalance in tactical nuclear weapons and the doctrines and assumption underlying the different approaches to theater nuclear warfare. This article, taken from the Armed Forces Journal International, January 1978, is entitled, "Theater Nuclear Balance (part 2)." The first part of the article follows:

Part one of this series discussed the trends in NATO and Warsaw Pact theater nuclear forces which are giving the Warsaw Pact parity or superiority in theater nuclear strength, which are giving the Warsaw Pact the ability to match NATO at virtually any level of conflict or escalation, and which are sharply increasing the number of warheads the Warsaw Pact can bring to bear against NATO targets. This article concludes the assessment of current trends in the theater nuclear balance by examining:

Comparative capability to initiate and escalate a conflict;

Ability to manage the intensity of a conflict, terminate a conflict on equal or favorable terms, and limit or control a nuclear conflict to a tactically or strategically acceptable degree;

Comparative vulnerability;

Ability to use "conventional" forces effectively in a tactical nuclear war;

Comparative command and control capability; and

The comparative impact of theater employable strategic systems on the theater nuclear balance.

COMPARATIVE CAPABILITY TO INITIATE AND ESCALATE A CONFLICT

Both NATO and the Warsaw Pact have a sufficient variety of nuclear warheads and delivery systems to initiate and escalate a theater nuclear conflict to virtually any level of intensity. The Warsaw Pact is developing a distinct superiority in some areas, such as long range theater surface-to-surface missiles, and is improving its theater nuclear forces more rapidly than NATO. However, the U.S. and U.K. can allocate large numbers of strategic warheads against long range Warsaw Pact theater targets, and the balance of forces in the table below indicates that NATO retains powerful theater nuclear capabilities.

The most critical difference in each side's capability to initiate and escalate theater nuclear war lies in the differences between their political control, ideology, and military doctrine, rather than in their relative force strength and hardware. These differences are "soft"—they cannot be quantified or easily proven—but they are basic to an understanding of the theater nuclear balance.

IDEOLOGICAL CONSTRAINTS ON NATO: THE STRATEGY OF DETERRENCE

NATO is a democratic alliance. Its military and political structure is inherently tied to the traditions of the nations that have created it. It is reactive, defensive, and deliberate in character. Its liberal Western origins inevitably limit its willingness to use nuclear weapons to fight or escalate. NATO concentrates its planning on successful deterrence, and not successful war fighting. Every NATO activity dealing with theater nuclear forces is oriented towards conflict avoidance, control, and termination.

Whatever military prudence may dictate, NATO is run by military, civilian, and political decision makers who are anything but likely to authorize nuclear war until it has been forced on NATO by the Soviet Union. There are very few NATO military officers who would even privately advocate a NATO first strike, a preemptive strike strategy, or escalation to a massive level of theater-wide conflict. NATO's military is no more anxious to engage in general war than its civilians.

In fact, one of the great ironies of NATO theater nuclear planning is that neither NATO's civilian or military planners could seriously come to grips with the concept of actually having to fight a theater nuclear war for the first two decades of NATO's existence.

During the 1950's, NATO used its initial monopoly of theater nuclear systems to create a deterrent strategy based on a nuclear tripwire. This "MC14/2" strategy provided a limited "shield" of conventional forces. If this "shield" was beaten down, NATO planned to launch its "sword" in the form of a massive all-out attack with its nuclear strike fighters. No one really looked beyond this retaliation.

In practical terms, NATO had no real war plan, only a massive deterrent. In spite of occasional rhetoric to the contrary, NATO linked its theater nuclear forces to the U.S. strategic war plan or SIOP. NATO never developed the command control systems, or other basic war fighting tools, that would have allowed it to fight a theater nuclear war after the first massive exchange.[1]

This situation did not change when NATO converted to a strategy of "flexible response" in the mid-1960s. Contrary to popular opinion, NATO did not develop meaningful options for fighting nuclear wars at controlled levels of escalation as part of its new "MC 14/3" strategy of "flexible response". It concentrated all its attention on improving its conventional options, and on improving civilian control over NATO's nuclear weapons.

As a result, NATO remained totally reliant on theater nuclear deterrence. There was no "flexible response" beyond the limited demonstrative use of a few nuclear weapons. NATO had a choice of options linked to the SIOP or nothing. It also continued to rely on alert strike fighters—"QRA" or quick reaction alert fighters—long after these and their bases became so vulnerable they made sense only as a "first strike" force.

It was not until 1973 that Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger shifted U.S. strategy to an emphasis on realistic options for graduated theater nuclear response. It was only then that NATO began to seriously plan for what might happen if deterrence failed.[2]

Yet, NATO still focused on what could be done to control wars rather than fight them. NATO sought the means to control or reduce the collateral damage its weapons would do to civil populations. It sought credible battlefield, theater, and regional nuclear options that would cause the Soviet Union to halt a Warsaw Pact attack, rather than to defeat such an attack.

NATO assumed that it must plan as if there were an alternative to theater-wide war. It added conflict control and a wide range of deterrent strike options to its basic deterrent capability, but it did not seriously plan to fight theater nuclear war.

THE COST OF A DETERRENT STRATEGY

This emphasis on deterrence does not mean that NATO is relying on, or ever has relied on, a theater nuclear bluff. Ultimately, if the Warsaw Pact should ever force the issue, NATO would use its nuclear weapons.

NATO might even initiate demonstrative or limited theater nuclear strikes to halt a Soviet attack, if forced to do so by a Soviet defeat of its conventional forces, by desperation, or by Soviet escalation. NATO would certainly match the Warsaw Pact step by step to theater-wide or strategic nuclear conflict.

In short, NATO's moral and ideological constraints are not weaknesses, but they do have major military effects. NATO cannot credibly take advantage of many of the major tactical and strategic options for fighting a theater nuclear war which Warsaw Pact planners have made a basic part of their theater nuclear doctrine:

NATO cannot launch a surprise theater nuclear strike before a conflict starts, regardless of how inevitable war is believed to be, or the risk of a Soviet first strike, NATO is not a first strike alliance.

NATO cannot preempt a Soviet strike or major act of escalation until a war reaches so high a level of conflict that political restraint ended and preemption would have little value. NATO is not a preemptive Alliance.

NATO cannot shift to theater nuclear war—with the possible exception of demonstrative use or very selective strike—until its conventional defenses fail or are on the edge of failure. NATO would initiate even battlefield use of nuclear war only as a last resort.

NATO will always act to seek to control or terminate conflicts, and will take significant military risks in trying to do so. NATO is incapable of letting its commanders fight a purely military battle, or in ways which seek tactical military objectives rather than the political goal of conflict termination.

NATO cannot act as if nuclear weapons were simply an extension of other means of firepower. NATO's political organization and leadership is fundamentally incapable of ceasing to make moral distinctions between conventional and nuclear forces. NATO will concentrate on conventional options for nonmilitary reasons.

These are powerful constraints on NATO's war fighting effectiveness. There is no question that Soviet military doctrine, operations research, and systems analysis is correct in stressing the military value of precisely the opposite approach to initiating and fighting theater nuclear war.

THE SOVIET APPROACH TO WAR FIGHTING

Soviet planners constantly emphasize the value of a first strike, of preemption; of seizing and maintaining the nuclear initiative; and of totally integrated conventional and theater nuclear tactics and force structures.

Anyone who reads through the discussions of nuclear war in the Soviet Military Thought series—or through the extensive unclassified discussions of Soviet exercises, plans, and military literature in RAND, SRI, BDM, and SPC studies—becomes aware of the fact military leadership does not agonize over theater nuclear war. In contrast to the West, the Soviets write about the "scientific" character of such wars. They write about theater nuclear weapons as simply one more extension of firepower, as an aid to mobility, as a method of ensuring breakthroughs, and as a substitute for shock and surprise.[3]

The Soviet military have extended Lenin's focus on what Von Clausewitz called "perfect" or "pure" war to virtually all their discussion and practice of theater nuclear war. While the top Soviet political leaders may, and hopefully do, have a more constrained view of the use of theater nuclear war, there is no published Soviet counterpart to the constant Western discussion of control, avoidance, conflict termination, and deterrence.

This basic difference in ideology also affects other aspects of conflict initiation and escalation. Most Soviet writing tends to treat a war in Europe as a decisive struggle that must end in a conclusive victory for Communism.

Although some allowance must be made for rhetoric, this leads Soviet military writers to focus on the probability that any major conflict would inevitably escalate to the point where NATO would be forced to initiate large scale use of nuclear weapons. And, having begun with the assumption that war must be decisive and will almost certainly eventually escalate, they move immediately to discussing the advantages of efficient massive preemption or strikes that achieve a high degree of tactical surprise.

Almost in reverse of Western planners, who focus on controlling or terminating a slow upward process of escalation from conventional to general war, the Soviets focus on fighting nuclear war from the top down. Their doctrine and methods of analysis focus on how massive deep ranging strikes might bring victory, on how they might help Soviet armored forces smash NATO defenses and sweep across NATO's lines of communication through Belgium and the Netherlands and deep into France.

While not totally rejecting conventional or limited nuclear war, Soviet doctrine still regards the feasibility of such limited war as extremely doubtful. The Soviets concentrate on theater nuclear grand strategy. Their primary concern lies in having the kind of capability provided by the SS-20, the Backfire, and new Soviet strike fighter aircraft—on having the option to win on a theater-wide basis.

It is scarcely surprising, given these differences, that the USSR places so much emphasis on improving the number of nuclear weapons it can deliver against any NATO target, and against NATO air bases, facilities in the rear, and nuclear storage sites. It is also not surprising that Soviet force improvement priorities differ so sharply from NATO's attempts to improve control of escalation or collateral damage, such as the "neutron bomb."

NATO and the Warsaw Pact have fundamentally different priorities in improving their theater nuclear forces. This difference permeates every aspect of NATO and Warsaw Pact force planning, and force structure.

There are some caveats, however, that must be added to any interpretation of Soviet willingness to initiate theater nuclear war:

There are no indications that the Soviets are not deterred by the thought of the damage NATO can inflict, or the risk of strategic escalation. The Soviets very clearly understand the cost of large scale conflict in Europe. There is no indication they would engage in war more readily than NATO, or regard a strategy of trying to win a theater nuclear war as desirable unless their vital interest were threatened. The difference lies fundamentally in what each side would do at the point that a war seems inevitable and not in the caution both sides now show in moving towards any such confrontation.

Recent work by Dr. Joseph Douglas of Systems Planning Corporation strongly indicates that the Soviets do place strong emphasis on damage limitation, and are in no sense cavalier about collateral damaged.[4] Although past U.S. studies have tended to estimate that the Soviets would use the largest possible yield a delivery system could carry, it now seems almost certain that the Soviets would actually use much lower yields tailored to the size of a target attacked. This does not mean that they have NATO's interest in controlling collateral damage "from the bottom up." It does mean the Soviets are efficient military planners. They will not use unnecessary force, or unnecessarily destroy the economic structure of the Europe they intend to win or "liberate."

It is impossible to tell the extent to which present Soviet doctrine is the result of past failures in NATO doctrine. Unfortunately, NATO's unwillingness to think about the unthinkable has led it to adopt deterrent postures that must have seemed extremely threatening or hypocritical to Soviet military planners.

As noted earlier, it was not until Secretary of Defense James R. Schlesinger directed the Joint Chiefs to develop a realistic capability to fight at any level of escalation, in 1973–1974, that the USSR had any reason to regard a graduated nuclear response as credible, and they may well have regarded NATO's previous doctrine of flexible response as little more than a political fraud.

Accordingly, NATO's past emphasis on deterrence, and its political and ideological unwillingness to deal with nuclear weapons in terms of realistic war fighting options may have had an unintended and unmeasurable influence in shaping Soviet doctrine and strategy to focus on the probability of large scale nuclear conflict, and on striking preemptively or first. There are times when being unwilling to face the unthinkable can have potentially disastrous results.

"LIMITED NUCLEAR OPTIONS": COMPARATIVE ABILITY TO MANAGE THE INTENSITY OF A CONFLICT, LIMIT OR CONTROL A CONFLICT, AND TERMINATE IT ON FAVORABLE TERMS

Unfortunately, a well reasoned—but half implemented—strategy can also have disastrous effects. There is no doubt that the new tactical nuclear strategy of "Limited Nuclear Options" or LNOs that Secretary of Defense Schlesinger introduced in NATO was a great improvement over the hollow shell of "flexible response."

By the mid-1970's it gave NATO a wide range of options other than the STOP if the Warsaw Pact attacked with sufficient constraint to make them meaningful. NATO's deterrence was improved because the Warsaw Pact could not attempt to exploit the chance that NATO might not escalate to nuclear weapons because it had no effective alternatives between conventional and strategic nuclear war.

LNO'S WITHOUT WARFIGHTING CAPABILITY?

However, improved deterrence is not the same as improved war fighting capability. The ability to actually fight a limited nuclear war is dependent on the ability to actually manage and terminate nuclear war on favorable terms. In order to develop this ability, both NATO and the Warsaw Pact would have had to meet certain basic criteria:

Both NATO and the Warsaw Pact would have had to adopt roughly the same tactics and doctrine. They would have to have a common interest and belief in constraint.

Both sides would have to plan to fight in a highly rational manner, and to escalate slowly and cautiously.

NATO would have to be able to fight more effectively than the Warsaw Pact at some level of conflict that the Warsaw Pact cannot counter by going to higher or different levels of conflict. Sustaining a war, once NATO uses such options, must involve greater damage or risk to the Warsaw Pact than terminating a conflict.

The Warsaw Pact would then have to have initiated a conflict without having anticipated such NATO options, and the risk of escalation to theater-wide nuclear war. Deterrence would have to have failed in the first place because the Warsaw Pact drastically miscalculated the cost of war.

Given the fact that the USSR does not now share common tactics and doctrine with NATO, or share a common interest in slow escalation and constraint, these criteria can only be met by changing Soviet attitudes or plans. This, however, can only be accomplished in one of two ways: Either NATO must develop superior war fighting capability to force a change in Soviet plans and attitudes; or, NATO must develop some superbly inventive tactical plan for which the Warsaw Pact has no counter, and which the Warsaw Pact can be allowed to know about long enough in advance to change its approach to war.

NATO certainly has not developed superior tactical nuclear forces, and it has done a magnificient job of failing to publicize any superiority in tactical planning.

There has, of course, been a great deal of U.S. discussion of different kinds of NATO nuclear strikes that might be tailored to terminate theater nuclear conflicts on favorable terms or to "manage" the level of nuclear conflict in ways favorable to NATO. This discussion, however, never quite seems relatable to any specific practical course of action or to any special NATO military advantage.

It ultimately always seems to boil down to describing a sophisticated game of "chicken": a heads-on race in which the drivers with the blue hats never flinch, but in which the drivers with the red hats obligingly spin around at the crisis point and go back to their starting line.

This, frankly, seems to be a case of applying game theory to wishful thinking. One only starts a game of chicken when one expects the other player to lose, and the Warsaw Pact would not start a conflict without considering such risks. Further, the USSR has shown no apparent interest in "mirror imaging" its war plans to the Pentagon's. It has tended to view NATO's LNO strategy as a mixture of hypocrisy and exportable military weakness. As a result, both NATO and the Warsaw Pact may be postured for the kind of unintentional tragedy that occurred in 1914.

NATO's theater nuclear and conventional forces are highly vulnerable to a Soviet large scale strike. NATO's talk of graduated options and sophisticated games of chicken may encourage Soviet planners to strike before such games can start, particularly if they do not intend to back down in the first place, think theater-wide escalation is inevitable, and feel NATO might be using discussions of LNOs to encourage Soviet restraint and give NATO time enough to launch a first strike.

Ultimately, NATO cannot fight an LNO strategy with sophisticated threats. If it wants to develop an LNO war fighting capability, it is going to have to pay for it, and pay enough to convince Soviet planners that theater-wide nuclear war is the feasible and inevitable result of a breakdown of deterrence.●

STABILIZING MEDICAL COSTS

HON. JAMES J. FLORIO

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. FLORIO. Mr. Speaker, today I am inserting in the RECORD an article entitled, "Fee Freeze By Doctors Spreading," which appeared in the Gloucester County Times on July 10, 1978.

The article describes the voluntary medical cost-containment measure now spreading across the State of New Jersey, a movement started by the Gloucester County Medical Society.

Mr. Speaker, I want to commend the Gloucester County Medical Society and all others in New Jersey that have seen fit to join them in this important effort to help control the ever increasing costs of medical care. Hopefully their effort will serve as a model for other physicians and health care providers across the country as the Nation attempts to control inflation. I am pleased to give the Gloucester County Medical Society the recognition it truly deserves for this fine effort. The text of the article follows:

FEE FREEZE BY DOCTORS SPREADING

The Gloucester County Medical Society's effort to stabilize medical costs through a pledge by member physicians not to increase fees for a six-month period is spreading across the state.

The society's voluntary cost-containment measure, which went into effect early in June, has now been adopted by the seven-county Coalition of Southern New Jersey Medical Societies and is scheduled for discussion by the board of trustees of the statewide Medical Society of New Jersey later this month.

The coalition, a loosely-organized union of the medical societies in Atlantic, Burlington, Camden, Cape May, Cumberland, Gloucester and Salem counties, unanimously adopted a resolution supporting the fee freeze two weeks ago, after Dr. Benjamin Wolfson, the Woodbury psychiatrist who proposed the idea, spoke to the group.

According to Dr. Irving P. Ratner, a Willingboro orthopedic surgeon who is chairman of the coalition this year, it is too soon to tell how many of the physicians the unit represents will participate in the voluntary fee limit. But so far, he says, the idea is being received with as much enthusiasm at the regional level as when Wolfson first proposed it to the Gloucester County group in May.

"I anticipate significant cooperation," said Ratner, who is also president of Burlington County's medical society, during a recent interview. "We're hoping that this will catch on throughout the state."

That could happen after the Medical Society of New Jersey's trustee board considers the freeze at its next meeting on July 16.

The board may be reluctant to adopt the plan, preferring to leave that choice to the statewide group's larger House of Delegates which does not meet until April, society executive director Vincent A. Maressa explained. He expects, however, that the board will at least approve of the measure where it is already in effect, an endorsement that could give it more exposure statewide.

"It seems to have a fair amount of sentiment," Maressa said last week from his Trenton office. "I think by mid-fall (when the county medical societies resume their regular meetings) it probably will be adopted throughout the state."

Wolfson and Ratner are pleased by that possibility because they believe that wide acceptance of the cost-containment plan among all segments of the health care industry will help its chances of continuing beyond the initial six-month period.

Both the Gloucester County society and the seven-county coalition will review the freeze this winter. If the costs affecting physicians' charges—labor, supplies, taxes and insurance—have risen appreciably, the voluntary fee limit will have to be lifted or modified to allow for some increases.

"On the other hand, if this voluntary trend (to keep costs down) should continue and the inflation has slowed or stopped, there will be no reason to raise our fees again," Wolfson says.

There is also some evidence that publicity for the cost-containment program has crossed state lines. Since its inception, Wolfson and Ratner have been interviewed by Philadelphia newspapers and TV stations and by a national financial planning magazine for physicians.

So far, however, the plan has evoked little reaction from two of its main targets, government officials and the nationwide American Medical Association, reports Jeanne Budd, executive director of the Gloucester County Medical Society.●

LOU WOZAR RETIRES FROM STEWARDSHIP OF SISTER CITIES

HON. CHARLES W. WHALEN, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to bring to the attention of the House the fact that Mr. Lou Wozar today officially concludes his service as president of Sister Cities International.

Under his direction, that excellent organization has flourished and, in so doing, has advanced immeasurably the cause of international understanding and world peace. The chief executive of a major company in my district and an active leader in many Dayton, Ohio civic undertakings, Lou somehow managed to find the time not merely to be part of Sister Cities activities, but to energize and direct them. The fact that the organization is so well known and growing, is due to his tireless efforts and brilliant leadership.

A self-made man in the classic American tradition, Lou once again has excelled in a difficult assignment. In so doing, he has gained the admiration and respect of the many people he has come to know here in Washington. This group includes high-ranking American officials, as well as many important members of the diplomatic community.

Sister Cities has increased the number of community affiliations with foreign nations and expanded both the number and variety of the programs in which it engages. These efforts are a vital force for international understanding and tranquility. For these accomplishments Lou Wozar should take great credit.

"Observe good faith and justice toward all nations," said George Washington just before he died. "Cultivate peace and harmony with all * * *." Lou Wozar has done just that to the benefit of us all.●

BETHLEHEM'S MAYOR SHARED HIS VIEWS

HON. PAUL FINDLEY

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. FINDLEY. Mr. Speaker, on a recent visit to Washington, the mayor of Bethlehem, Mr. Elias Freij, shared his views and his hopes for a Middle East peace with several Members of Congress. For those who did not have the opportunity to meet with him, I am placing in this RECORD a copy of his letter to Secretary of State Vance. The letter outlines some of the principles which Mr. Freij feels are essential to a Middle East peace settlement.

The mayor is regarded as a moderate Palestinian by observers of the Middle East. A Christian, he is a spokesman for both Moslems and Christians in the West Bank. He openly supports the Sadat peace initiative; he also has close ties to Jordan. Mr. Freij hopes to see the creation of a Palestinian homeland that will have close links to Jordan and close contacts with Israel. He knows the present Israeli leadership, often meeting with them in connection with his responsibilities as mayor. He feels that he and they deal with each other well and must continue to make every effort to do so now and during and after a peace settlement.

Mr. Freij has children in the United States and has a close affinity for this country. He sees a U.S. presence in the West Bank similar to our current presence in the Sinai Peninsula as a critical element of a settlement. He also stresses the need for the United States to take a more active interest in the West Bank and the Palestinians living there. This will be an important step toward strengthening the hand of the moderates in that region as opposed to more radical elements. In particular, Mr. Freij expressed his concern that certain states such as Libya are providing municipalities with mayors less responsive to the needs of peace with large sums of aid while the moderates receive little support. This has a definite impact upon the political balance in the West Bank and could be detrimental to the hopes there for peace. The United States, therefore, could play a constructive role by taking into consideration the needs of the Palestinian people, by demonstrating an interest in their well-being, and by developing assistance projects to aid them. This, Mr. Freij strongly feels, would promote peace in the Middle East.

BETHLEHEM MUNICIPALITY,
April 10, 1978.

Hon. CYRUS VANCE,
Secretary of State, U.S. Government, Washington, D.C.

DEAR MR. SECRETARY OF STATE: As a Palestinian Arab citizen and Mayor of the Holy City of Bethlehem, I wish to stress that the Palestinian Arabs in the occupied West Bank and Gaza areas reject the military occupation which is about to complete its eleventh year.

The so-called "self rule plan", which Mr. Begin presented to the World last December fails in every respect to meet the basic demands of the Palestinian Arabs and in fact, it is a long step backward. The Begin plan deprives us of our right for self-determination and of our right for a homeland or a "house for the Palestinians" in the West Bank and Gaza. The Begin plan will be unanimously rejected by all the Palestinian Arabs.

There are mixed feelings in the occupied areas as to the best course to solve the Arab-Israel conflict. However, there are certain basic demands which do have the full support of the inhabitants in the occupied areas. These points call for:

(1) Complete Israeli withdrawal from all parts of the West Bank and Gaza in accordance with Security Council Resolutions 242 and 338 and U.N. Resolution 3236.

(2) The Arab sector of East Jerusalem is an integral part of the occupied West Bank.

(3) Right for self-determination.

(4) Right for a Palestinian Homeland or Independent Palestinian state to be determined by a free plebiscite.

(5) Right of Palestinian Arabs to return and live in the West Bank and Gaza areas.

A majority of the Arab inhabitants will accept and welcome a transitional period of five years, provided Israeli military forces are completely withdrawn and replaced by other forces. The composition of such forces may be the 'KEY' factor in helping to solve this crisis.

Having given this question deep thought, I would strongly suggest that during the transitional period, forces from the U.S., Jordan and Egypt be invited to take full control of the occupied West Bank and Gaza.

The duties of the newly composed forces will authorize it to:

(1) Be in charge of internal and external security matters.

(2) Facilitate the peaceful return of Palestinian Arabs.

(3) Help the inhabitants to organize and build our "House of Palestine" on free and democratic basis.

(4) Other duties to be set and defined as necessary.

I believe that such a force will surely help to stabilize the situation and with constructive planning, might achieve the dearest dream for millions in this part of the World—peace and a home for the Palestinian mothers, children and people.

Hoping that you will find the time to study this proposal, I assure you of my best and sincere wishes.

Sincerely yours,

ELIAS M. FREIJ,
Mayor of Bethlehem.●

CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. HENRY J. HYDE

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

● Mr. HYDE. Mr. Speaker, this week marks the 20th anniversary of "Captive Nations Week," and I join with my colleagues in the House in paying tribute to the courageous people of the captive nations.

The sentencing of Viktoras Petkus, a member of the Lithuanian public group to promote the implementation of the Helsinki agreements, along with the Alekandr Ginzburg and Anatoly Scharansky trials in the Soviet Union, are further recent examples of the gravest deprivation of human rights and the importance of our commitment as a nation to the basic human rights of all people.

Surely we must wonder about the Soviets ability to comply with any SALT agreement, when they have so blatantly refused to honor their commitment to the Helsinki accords. If the SALT agreements are important to us, they must also be important to the Soviets, and I deeply regret that this administration did not suspend these negotiations taking place during the same week that Scharansky and Ginzburg were so brutally sentenced. Such a suspension would have been a message not only to the U.S.S.R., but to the entire world, that America deplores such totalitarian tyranny. The Russians have, in effect, torn the Helsinki accords to shreds.

There are now 30 countries on the list of captive nations under Communist dominiation and we may well wonder, particularly in light of Soviet actions in Africa, how long it will be before that list is expanded.

Our concern for the basic human rights—personal, civil, and national—of the people of the captive nations must continue not only because it serves their best interest but, ultimately, because it serves our own if democracy is to survive in the world.

As the leader of the free world, we cannot be complacent. It is our duty to publicly deplore all human rights violations against the people of the captive nations and the people of all countries who live under an oppressive government that denies liberty and justice to its citizens. We must demand complete compliance with the Helsinki agreements by all cosignatories. To do less is to reject all that America stands for.●

IN HONOR OF CAPTIVE NATIONS WEEK

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Tuesday, July 18, 1978

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, this week marks the 20th observance of Captive Nations Week, a week designated to call attention to the many countries of the world which still do not have the rights of national self-determination of which we of the free world take pride. It points in particular to those proud Baltic nations that once enjoyed freedoms now trampled by Soviet dominations. It serves as a reminder that the struggle for individual liberty continues and is as much in need of our efforts as ever before.

We in the United States have minimal understanding of the intense suffering which is the inevitable result of being denied the most basic and fundamental human rights. Over the past few weeks, many Americans have come a little closer to understanding what it is really like to be persecuted, harassed, and arrested for believing what one believes and for wanting to live where one chooses. They have learned from the news reports about the plight of Anatoly Scharansky, Maria Slepak, Aleksandr Ginzburg, and the many others the Soviets fear and have persecuted.

As the Nation to which many others look for guidance on human rights, we must constantly strive for the preservation and extension of basic human freedom and rights for all people, regardless of the nation in which they reside.

Captive Nations Week is a time for all Americans to rekindle our hope and renew our intent to see that freedom and independence are achieved for all nations throughout the world.●

PRAISE FOR MILWAUKEE'S FIRST HANDICAPPED EAGLE SCOUT

HON. CLEMENT J. ZABLOCKI

OF WISCONSIN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. ZABLOCKI. Mr. Speaker, I have always believed that scouting, because of the value of the experiences it provides in forming strong leaders and dedicated citizens, deserves our praise and support.

This is especially true of scouting's efforts to assist the handicapped—efforts which are exemplified by the story of a Milwaukee Eagle Scout, Kevin Koehler.

As a commendation for past programs in scouting for handicapped, and as encouragement for future efforts in this important area, I am pleased to share the following article from Scouting magazine about this outstanding young man, his accomplishments in scouting for the handicapped, and the dedicated efforts of Scout leaders who made them possible.

"PERSISTENCE WINS THE GAME"

During the past few months, he has received letters of congratulations from various Scouting executives, the mayor of his city, from both the State's senators as well as the Governor and from the President of the United States. His story has been featured on two local television stations and in the city's major newspaper. The "Today" Show in New York has interviewed him. And with good reason. On June 7, at court of honor ceremonies, Kevin Koehler became the first Eagle Scout in the 35-year history of Milwaukee's Troop 152, a very special outfit.

Of all the boys who join Scouting, only one percent ever attain the rank of Eagle Scout. No one knows what the percentage is among handicapped Scouts. But in Milwaukee, although the percentage isn't known, the number is: one. And the name of that one Eagle Scout is Kevin Koehler.

Sitting on the couch in the living room of his Milwaukee home, Kevin balances the large, spiral notebook on his lap. Reverently, he turns the plastic sheets that house the letters of commendation. His mother, Mrs. Shirley Koehler, sits nearby, smiling at her son. Kevin stops turning the pages and points down at a handwritten letter. "This one means the most to me." His mother nods her agreement. The letter is signed by Norman Schober, Scoutmaster of Troop 152. "This man has been much more than just a Scoutmaster to me," says Kevin. "He has been a close friend."

"We have approximately 30 boys in our troop," said Norman Schober, "all of whom have problems of one sort or another. We have boys with muscular dystrophy, cerebral palsy and cycstic fibrosis. Many of our Scouts have multiple problems. Last year, one had cerebral palsy, epilepsy, a colostomy, no voice box and was mentally retarded and emotionally disturbed. Some of our Scouts have severe orthopedic problems. We had one boy, born with deformed hands, who underwent 58 operations before he could even write. After all those operations, he asked me if he could be the troop scribe. We've had scribes who took better notes but we've never had one who took more pride in his work than that boy."

Closing the spiral notebook, Kevin Koehler pushes his crutches aside as he reaches over and gently lays the book down on a table. "When I joined Troop 152 in 1969," says Kevin, as he sits back on the couch, "I discovered that, even though it had been in existence for over 30 years, the troop had never had an Eagle Scout. I decided right then that I was going to be the first one. Of course, I realize that I was one of the lucky ones in that troop. Cerebral palsy had only affected my legs."

Norman Schober first became involved with Troop 152 through the Kiwanis Club. Since then he has held virtually every Scouting position on the local council and district level. "In 1957, I joined the Kiwanis Club of Milwaukee," said Schober. "The club has about two dozen committees that are involved in community work. I chose the committee that dealt with youth because that was the one that included Scouting activities. You see, I'd already been active in Scouting for the past seven years, I have two boys who became Eagle Scouts. Anyway, after I joined the youth committee, the Kiwanis Club told me the Gaenslen Orthopedic School, a Milwaukee public school, needed help with its Scout troop. The troop was already being sponsored by the Kiwanis Club. All the boys in the troop attend the school, which is totally dedicated to handicapped children."

Every new Cub or Scout unit must have a sponsor to offer initial funding, a place to meet and the needed manpower. Many units, for instances, are sponsored by churches or schools. The amount of money involved in the initial funding is usually minimal. Providing a place for the unit to meet is also normally no problem for the sponsor. Many sponsors, however, according to Norm Schober, find it difficult to provide the unit with a permanent source of manpower. But this has hardly been the case with the Milwaukee Kiwanis Club and its Troop 152.

"We have a committee of 15 men who regularly work with Troop 152," commented Schober. "These men are serious about the work they do in both Kiwanis and Scouting. No one has been on this committee for less than five years. Like myself many of them have been members for over 20 years."

Kevin Koehler sits with a small box in his hand. "It was plenty tough," he says, "but I made it."

"You weren't the only one who had it rough," his mother says, laughing. "Remember, Kevin, when you had to prepare and cook three meals in one day?"

"Those were three great meals," replies Kevin with mock indignation.

"Oh, sure they were," counters his mother. She laughs again. "I knew that if the two of us could survive that, we could survive anything."

Much of the success of Kevin Koehler and the other Scouts of Milwaukee Troop 152 can be credited to the principal of Gaenslen Orthopedic School Carl Schmidt, who is a strong enthusiast of Scouting. He has made Troop 152 a regular part of the school's curriculum. Troop meetings are held on Friday afternoons during school hours.

"Every Friday afternoon," said Carl Schmidt, "you can find the men of the Kiwanis Club at our troop meeting. There is usually one adult for every two Scouts. In order for these men to come on Friday afternoons they must, of course, take time off from their work. I am sure they don't realize the tremendous influence they exert on these boys. On Monday morning, I start getting questions from the boys about the troop meeting on Friday afternoon.

"Scouting does so much for these boys," continued Schmidt. "It gives them the feeling that they are part of a group. Wearing the Scout uniform, or even a part of it, embellishes that feeling. These Kiwanis men who work with the troop are truly the leaders of our community. They're all successful businessmen and professionals. How else, but through Scouting, could our students work with and be influenced by men of such caliber"?

Kevin Koehler balances the box on his knee as he talks about the 24 merit badges he had to earn in order to become an Eagle Scout. "I tell you, in my early days of Scouting, sometimes I'd get discouraged. So would some of the other Scouts. But the men who work with the troop have such enthusiasm. You'd push forward despite yourself because you didn't want to let them down. In Scouting, you know, no one is standing over you forcing you to do it. You can quit any time you want. But with the encouragement you got from these men, you just didn't want to quit."

Despite his cerebral palsy, Kevin Koehler not only earned the 24 required merit badges, he also earned the Red Cross 50-Mile Swim award.

" . . . Swimming those 50 miles was the toughest thing I had to do as a Scout. It took a lot of visits to the pool," says Kevin emphatically, "to get 50 miles."

"One of the major values of Scouting for these boys—for all boys—" said Norman Schober, "is that it gives them something worthwhile to strive for. If you water down the standards, if you make it easy for them, then the goals become meaningless. Believe me, every merit badge in Troop 152 is truly earned.

"You can't feel sorry for these boys," continued Schober. "When I first began working with the troop, one of the boys, hobbled with crutches and braces, fell down on a ramp. I went to help him up. Although he had a severe speech impediment, I still understood the word he said when I reached down to him—'No.' It took him literally 40 minutes to pull himself up, but he made it and when he did he looked back at me and said, 'See?'

"I worked with six boys for a whole year," said Schober, "on one merit badge. Only two passed. But I think it means more to a boy to fail at a meaningful goal than to achieve one that isn't."

"There was a long list of requirements for the Communications merit badge," says Kevin. "One of them was that I had to act as master of ceremonies for some sort of function. So I held a dance at school and was the disc jockey for it."

"That wasn't too difficult for him," comments his mother, "since Kevin was president of the student council. Scouting has literally changed his life. Before Kevin became a Scout, he was a shy, quiet boy who had no self-confidence and a terrible self-image. But Scouting really got his adrenalin flowing. It showed him that he could do far more than he ever thought possible. His confidence has grown tremendously. He is an achiever," Mrs. Koehler states proudly. "He is a leader."

Kevin blushes at his mother's words as he begins to open the small box. "I do feel, though," he says softly, "that my reaching Eagle Scout has given my fellow handicapped Scouts a goal to aim for. Now that someone from our troop has made it to Eagle, they know that at least it's possible."

"Too bad they don't have awards for Eagle Scouts' mothers," said Norm Schober. "If there was one, Mrs. Koehler would certainly get it. She has always been there to listen to Kevin's problems and to offer him moral support. That kind of parent can make the difference in any young person's life, but especially in the life of a handicapped person.

"Most of the parents of handicapped children, like Mrs. Koehler," continued Schober, "somehow learn to provide the proper mix of love and discipline. But some handicapped Scouts have parents who spoil them rotten. They pamper the boy to the point where real communication is simply impossible. At the other extreme are the parents who don't try at all. They simply tolerate the boy. A child can sense that. Sometimes, the parents just leave. Desertion among parents of handicapped children is high. The parent of a handicapped child has to allow that child to struggle to his full potential but also to be ready to give help when it is needed."

Kevin slowly opens the box then holds it up for inspection. Inside, on a velvet bed, are the Eagle medal, the patch for his uniform, the Eagle tie clasp and the Eagle lapel pin. He returns the open box to his lap and stares down at it. "That's really something isn't it?"

He looks up after a moment. "The night I received this, I was certainly filled with mixed emotions. It had been a lot of hard work and in that sense I was glad it was over. But in a way, the hard work was fun. I got a feeling of self-satisfaction out of it." Kevin takes one more look at the symbols of his being an Eagle Scout before closing the box.

"I've got a good life ahead of me," says Kevin. "The future is filled with plenty of new challenges. Since graduating from high school a few months ago, I've been working at the VA regional office. Weekends I'm working at Major Goolsby's, which is a pub and grill. I also plan on attending Milwaukee Area Technical College because I'd like to get a degree in communications. As far as Scouting is concerned, since I'm not officially out of Troop 152 yet. I'm going to add some palms to my Eagle Scout award. After that, I'd like to become an adult volunteer. Mr. Schober and I have already talked about my becoming his assistant Scoutmaster. I very much want to give to other boys what Scouting has given to me."

"You can't do all of that," injects Mrs. Koehler, "you just won't have the time."

"Anything is possible if you want it badly enough and you put your mind to it," says Kevin confidently. "Scouting has taught me that." ●

EXXON SUIT DRAGS ON

HON. BRUCE F. VENTO

OF MINNESOTA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. VENTO. Mr. Speaker, again, the example of the regulatory agencies dragging its feet and frustrating law enforcement has been repeated here in Washington.

Attached is an article from the Washington Post which reports that lawyers are celebrating the fifth year of getting nowhere at the Federal Trade Commission in the so-called "Exxon Suit."

I want to share with you the clipping from yesterday's paper.

The article follows:

EXXON SUIT DRAGS ON AS LAWYERS CELEBRATE

(By Larry Kramer)

The clinking of champagne glasses could be heard in antitrust law offices all around Washington Tuesday night. There was reason to celebrate.

July 18 was the fifth anniversary of the famed "Exxon suit" filed by the Federal Trade Commission, charging the nation's eight largest oil companies with "anti-competitive practices." It's called the "Exxon suit" because Exxon was listed first on the complaint—it's the biggest.

And after five years, the FTC has gone nowhere—the agency's still in the discovery stage and has not yet received one "substantive" document from any of the oil companies.

Unquestionably, this case has become one of the great legal disasters in history. After the initial filing of the complaint, the case foundered for years in a monotonous filing of papers.

Then, in February 1976, the FTC filed an 1,800-page request for "substantive document discovery," from the oil companies. The defendants said it would be impossible to comply with such a huge request and appealed to the commission.

In November 1976, an FTC administrative law judge agreed with the oil companies, calling the request, and the case that would grow out of it, "unmanageable."

But at least he did order the oil companies to hand over some "non-substantive" materials.

In January 1977, the FTC lawyers appealed to the full commission to overturn the administrative law judge's ruling.

That request sat around until September 1977, when the FTC lawyers filed another pleading with their own commission stating that they had changed their mind, and decided they didn't need all of the documents they asked for in their 1,800-page request.

Instead, they said they would refile a request for documents that would be less burdensome.

Then last Jan. 12, the FTC lawyers filed another request for documents, which the oil companies again challenged.

On May 10, the FTC filed yet another request, this time for information concerning the computer systems used by the oil companies. Again, the oil companies are fighting that request.

Meanwhile, the Department of Energy's Office of Special Counsel, in its investigation of oil company pricing regulations, has already received access to the computers of one oil company—Shell—and has asked for others. And the Office of Special Counsel has only been in existence for about seven months.

The late Sen. Philip A. Hart (D-Mich.), had originally asked the FTC to undertake the investigation in 1970. Elated when the complaint was finally filed, even Hart may have underestimated the length of legal wrangling that would be involved when he said:

"The sad part is that we won't get a verdict—and relief—for 8 to 10 years. The FTC has to prove not just monopoly power, but anticompetitive behavior. This will mean a search of millions of documents to confuse everyone."

Meanwhile, many of the practices alleged in the FTC complaint to be anti-competitive still go on.●

ENERGY IMPACT ASSISTANCE ACT OF 1978

HON. TENO RONCALIO

OF WYOMING

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. RONCALIO. Mr. Speaker, the Senate Committee on Environment and Public Works has spent considerable time developing legislation to address one of the most critical aspects of energy resource development—the energy impacted area. We have enacted, or are in the process of enacting, laws to deal with virtually every other aspect of providing energy for the country. Now is the appropriate time to establish a plan for compensating those areas completely altered during the process of supplying the Nation with energy.

I am happy to introduce a bill very similar to the Senate bill, S. 1493, and am anxious to see the legislation considered by the House as soon as possible, so that the people living in resource-abundant areas can plan for the development which will surely come. The legislation provides financial and technical assistance to States, local governments, and Indian tribes suffering economic impact as a result of energy development activities.

The bill sets up a cooperative system whereby the Governor or governing body of an Indian tribe, State officials, and local officials comprise an "energy impact assessment team" which is responsible for assessing, for a particular area, the projected energy development, anticipated growth as a result of such development, anticipated needs for public facilities, and available funding resources to meet those needs. The Governor is given the option of designating a local developing district certified under the Appalachian Regional Development Act of 1965 as the assessment team for a particular area.

To help make this system effective, the Secretaries of departments having knowledge of any planned major development will be required to provide all relevant information to those assessment teams. In addition, the Council on Environmental Quality will be responsible for revising the National Environmental Policy Act to assure that information useful in anticipating the impact of such major development will be made available as soon as possible for the preparation of an environmental impact statement for the planned development.

The assessment team, in cooperation with designated local officials, will then prepare a mitigation plan which shall identify the projected impact, the resulting needs, proposals for meeting those needs, available resources for meeting those needs, contain an environmental impact statement, and any other information pertinent to the Secretary.

Each State, upon review of individual assessment team mitigation plans, will then be responsible for submitting a "statewide investment strategy" to the Secretary of Commerce, establishing priorities among proposed uses; and, once approved, funds will be made available for implementation of those mitigation plans. The bill also provides funding to meet emergency needs for public facilities or public services in impacted areas following certain requirements.

A total of $150,000,000 for each of fiscal years 1979–83 is authorized to carry out the provisions of the act, to be allocated on the basis of various factors as identified in the bill.●

IRV SCHWARTZ, ASD CHIEF OF PROTOCOL, TO RETIRE AFTER 38 YEARS OF FEDERAL SERVICE

HON. CHARLES W. WHALEN, JR.

OF OHIO

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. WHALEN. Mr. Speaker, I rise on this occasion to pay tribute to an outstanding member of the Dayton, Ohio community, Irving Schwartz.

A transplanted New Yorker, Irv has earned great respect for his extensive participation in many activities both professional and civic. Next week, he concludes 38 years of service with the Department of the Air Force when he retires as the Chief of Protocol of the Aeronautical Systems Division at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

Irv, a man of boundless energy, enthusiasm, and ability, will not retire in the normal sense. The event merely means that he will have more time to devote to community undertakings in which he has participated in the past.

He has made notable contributions to the city of Dayton as a member of the important plan board and also to Temple Israel. As a qualified and interested individual, Irv doubtless will continue to apply his talents to the area of educating our young people, a task in which he has been engaged in the past.

Irv Schwartz has given the Federal Government his best during a long and distinguished career. The list of generals who could testify to his sagacity is a long one indeed as is that of his many associates at Wright-Patterson Air Force Base.

For me to praise Irv Schwartz is no idle matter since I count him as one of my oldest friends, back to our student days at the University of Dayton.

He is an outstanding citizen whose departure from Government service only means the gaining of more of his time by the Dayton community.

Mr. Speaker, I am honored to be able to commend Irv for his many contributions and to wish him well in his future endeavors.●

SUGAR STABILIZATION ACT OF 1978

HON. RAYMOND F. LEDERER

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. LEDERER. Mr. Speaker, I would like to share with my colleagues in both Houses an article in the July 1978 Consumer Federation of America News warning of the dire consequences which would result from the enactment of S. 2990 and H.R. 12486, the Sugar Stabilization Act of 1978.

Unfortunately, matters affecting the sugar policies of this Nation have been afforded a low visibility, allowing legislation not in the best interests of the consuming public or this country to be enacted into law. Serious questions of ethics have been raised concerning the practices of many of the narrow special interest groups attempting to promote such legislation.

When these practices come fully to light and such legislation is considered with the interests of the consuming public in mind "solutions" as proposed in S. 2990 and H.R. 12486 should be rejected summarily in both Houses of Congress.

The article follows:

SUGAR STABILIZATION ACT OF 1978

In testimony before the Senate Finance Committee on May 11 Legislative Director Kathleen D. Sheekey raised CFA's objections to S. 2990, the Sugar Stabilization Act of 1978.

1. The cost of sugar to consumers would drastically increase. Based on estimates of the President's Council of Wage and Price Stability, the restrictions on imports provided by the Sugar Stabilization Act of 1978 would raise the price of raw sugar from its present level of about 14¢/lb. to 17.5¢/lb. This 3.5¢/lb. increase would raise the costs to consumers for sugar subsidies to $2.4 billion annually and add a full percentage point to the Consumer Price Index for food.

2. Cost of corn sweeteners would also rise. Any measure designed to raise the price of sugar above reasonable levels is likely to result in a further increase in the use of sugar substitutes such as corn syrup. In opening the door to this heavy competition, the supporters of S. 2990 could actually push out the sugar farmers they were intending to help.

3. Costs would be disproportionately borne by low-income consumers. Studies by the U.S. Bureau of Labor Statistics show that sugar accounts for a larger percentage of the budgets of low-income consumers than other segments of our population. Therefore, those who can least afford it will be hardest hit by rising sugar prices.

4. The Future of the International Sugar Agreement will be seriously jeopardized. Although a stated purpose of S. 2990 is to implement the International Sugar Agreement, the objective being to stabilize world prices, passage of S. 2990 would drastically decrease U.S. sugar imports and thereby seriously compromise the fledgling ISA's intent.

5. Sugar workers would not benefit from increased sugar prices. Since workers did not even benefit from the 1974 sugar price explosion, it is highly unlikely that passage of S. 2990 would result in increased wages for sugar workers.

6. Higher prices will not result in reduced consumption. Although CFA is firmly committed to measures which will educate consumers in a meaningful way of the health risks associated with sugar (e.g., restricting TV advertising of heavily sugared products to children), we are unconvinced that supporting higher sugar prices will discourage consumption. This was not the case when prices soared in 1974.

Sheekey recommended to the Committee CFA's preference of an interim program which maintains market prices at about 13.5¢/lb. consistent with the minimum ISA price. If cost of production should rise above this market price, then a system of direct payments should be used to compensate efficient producers for the difference.

Mark-up of S. 2990 is not yet scheduled by the Senate Finance Committee. CFA commented on similar measures, H.R. 12486, 12667, and 12604, when they were before the House Committee on Agriculture. They also await markup.

The House bills, as well as an Administration bill submitted on request by Representative Vanik (D-OH), are scheduled for hearings in July before the Subcommittee on Trade, Committee on Ways and Means, to which they were jointly referred.●

URGENT NEED FOR STRONG MEASURES AGAINST TERRORISM

HON. BENJAMIN A. GILMAN

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. GILMAN. Mr. Speaker, we have become all too familiar with the bombings, kidnapings, assassinations, and hijackings that terrorists wantonly commit. It is not enough to denonuce international terrorism after one of these unconscionable acts grabs the headlines. More important, we must develop an effective policy to prevent these heinous crimes, and in those instances where terrorists continue to strike, impose harsh penalties on these international criminals and strong sanctions against those nations and groups which support terrorists.

Testifying on July 19, 1978, before the Public Works and Transportation Committee's Subcommittee on Aviation in support of H.R. 13261 of which I am a cosponsor, introduced by the distinguished subcommittee chairman, the gentleman from California, Mr. ANDERSON, and House Concurrent Resolution 72, a measure I introduced, I joined with several of my colleagues and other concerned individuals in urging the subcommittee to take expeditious action on legislation that would greatly strengthen U.S. efforts to act decisively against terrorists.

To share my findings and recommendations concerning necessary actions to be taken against international terrorism, I submit the full text of my statement before the Subcommittee on Aviation be inserted at this point in the RECORD:

AN ACT TO COMBAT INTERNATIONAL TERRORISM

Mr. Chairman and other distinguished members of the subcommittee:

It is a privilege for me to appear before the Public Work's Aviation Subcommittee and to join you in these important proceedings. You are to be commended for your efforts to focus attention on the problems of international terrorism and for seeking possible legislative remedies to these problems.

The sad fact is that living with terrorism has become a way of life for many millions of people around the globe. The pattern of terrorism continues to grow and spread throughout the world. As cooperation between terrorists and terrorist organizations increases, so do the bombings, kidnappings, assassinations and hijackings.

These acts of terror have become a popular tool for all those seeking to impose their will on a world community which is unable or unwilling to defend itself. The most frightening aspect of this trend is its arbitrary nature, where innocent victims are gripped by the consequences of terrorist activities often being slaughtered for no apparent reason. As indicated by a PLO terrorist leader in 1970:

"There can be no geographic boundaries or moral limits to the operation of the people's camp. In today's world, no one is innocent, no one is neutral."

As a product of this insanity, over the last ten years, worldwide, there has been nearly 1000 terrorist incidents resulting in the deaths of more than 1300 people and more than 3600 wounded. Unfortunately, under current laws and current levels of international cooperation, more than three-fourths of all terrorists escape punishment for their actions while they are almost certain to achieve their aim of gaining widespread publicity.

The conviction rate for terrorists and the length of actual sentences imposed has been unimpressive. While the FBI has a better than 90 percent capture rate for criminals involved in kidnapping for ransom, a terrorist involved in an international kidnapping has about an 80 percent chance of escaping capture or death. Sadly, the average sentence for those who are caught and brought to trial has been only eighteen months.

At a time when the threats of terrorism are at an all time high, our current domestic and international efforts fall way short of the tasks before them. Earlier this year, FBI Director William Webster testified before the Congress that the bureau's presently strained resources are not adequate to cope with a major terrorist campaign. In fact, he warned that proposed budget cuts this year would threaten already existing investigations of terrorist incidents.

The people of this nation through their government must respond to this attack on the civilized world. We must join together in seeking to mobilize the necessary forces in this and other nations which would be equal to the task of combating the bands of terrorists fanatics and the conditions from which they spring. We must seek to deny a safe haven to terrorists and to establish sanctions against states which aid them, harbor them, or fail to prosecute or extradite them.

We must impress upon each other the collective threat posed by terrorism. As history has shown, terrorism begets other acts of terrorism and violence. Our response can only be to create a dedicated, aggressive, coordinated, multinational effort to apprehend and punish terrorists wherever and whenever they strike. We must meet this challenge. As pointed out by the Washington Post in its March 17, 1978 editorial:

"The terrorists are pressing the question whether a government actually exists—or is it only the legal shell of a government, with nothing inside? Is it capable of acting, at last, to preserve itself and public order?"

During the past few years in different forums, I have sought to denounce terrorism and to alert those still unmoved to action, that terrorist acts feed on each other. A civilized society cannot for long fail to respond to the threats to its very existence which are posed by the ever increasing incidents of terror. It is impossible to forget that the hateful creed of the terrorist is that there are no innocents; any individual regardless of age or sex, regardless of station is a potential victim.

I have had the privilege in the past and in the present Congress of authoring and cosponsoring much needed legislation to deal with terrorist-related problems. One such resolution, H. Con. Res. 72 which is currently pending before this Committee, deserves your attention. The resolution calls for an international study of the causes of terrorism, urges the President to both take action against nations aiding terrorists, and to seek stronger international sanctions against such countries, and strive for conclusion of an effective international convention against terrorism.

In the specific area of air piracy and hijacking which is currently under study by this Subcommittee, H.R. 13261 will, as stated by its author, Chairman Anderson, "deal in a comprehensive way with the threat terrorism poses to Americans both at home and abroad." This bill and similar legislation now before you can contribute meaningfully by enabling our nation to deal more effectively and promptly with terrorism.

As a compliment to these vital efforts, we must encourage the world community to fully support the existing international treaties dealing with air piracy and hijacking.

The Tokyo Convention of 1963, the Hague Convention of 1970 and the Montreal Convention of 1971 provide for the classification of air piracy as an international crime and provide for the extradition or prosecution of hijackers. Unfortunately, these conventions have not had unanimous acceptance or adherence.

Recently, however, there have been some encouraging signs of an awakening in the world community to threats posed by terrorist hijackings. On November 3, 1977 the United Nations General Assemby, for the first time, adopted a resolution condemning air piracy and called upon all governments to take steps to tighten security and to agree to prosecute or extradite hijackers. In addition, at this week's Bonn Economic Summit Conference, the seven heads of state reached an important agreement on air piracy and terrorism that includes a call for suspension of air flights to and from those countries that provide assistance to hijackers.

I urge the members of this Subcommittee to seize this opportunity to strengthen these efforts through the passage of the legislation before it, thereby strengthening our nation's hand in combating terrorism. The terrorist challenge to the civilized world was summarized recently in a Washington Post editorial of May 16, 1978:

"The breakdown of law enforcement tends, unfortunately, to be circular. One successful crime incites other people with guns to try the same thing. Demoralization among the police spreads. To reverse the deterioration requires vigorous political intervention by the national leadership."

This Subcommittee is playing an important role in providing the needed leadership to combat terrorism. Now the United States as a nation must take the lead to enlist all nations and peoples that are outraged by the brazen attacks, assassinations, threats, the taking of innocent hostages, and other vile forms in which international terrorism manifests itself.●

SMALL BUSINESS

HON. PARREN J. MITCHELL

OF MARYLAND

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. MITCHELL of Maryland. Mr. Speaker, on numerous occasions, I have stressed and reiterated the continuing need for more emphasis in the direction of small business development. I would like to briefly address that issue and the need for a stronger approach to its incorporation into the educatory process.

It is my feeling—and I am sure that many of my colleagues in the House will agree—that it is imperative that the Congress and the Nation as a whole recognize the need for the development of new educational and training programs specifically designed to assist prospective and established small business persons with problems they continually encounter in the daily operation of their businesses. Startling reports from the Small Business Administration citing the failure of some 400,000 of the 440,000 small businesses that are initiated annually, are certainly indicative of the dire need for such programs. It is further reported that 50 out of every 100 small businesses starting today will fail in 2 years and approximately 90 out of 100 will fail after 10 years. Sadly enough, these facts disturbingly point out that, after 10 years, only 10 of the original 100 businesses will still be viable.

During the early days of our Nation, the self-employed small business person could survive with little or no training or education and with little knowledge of management techniques, technology, and governmental regulations. However, we must now face the fact that the world of small business is vastly more complex, and there is a need for the small business person to be proficient in these areas. Oftentimes, the small business owner finds him or herself wholly unprepared to meet the challenge of our changing economic picture. This is because, contrary to what is generally believed, many small business people have barely a high school education and lack even the rudimentary educational and business management skills.

It is known that many of the present programs involving business and management educational training are generally geared to the managers of large corporations, and thus have little or no application to the problems encountered in the daily operation of a small business. Consequently, the small business person finds his options for educational training extremely limited.

With the incorporation of simple training programs in the basics of business management and operation into high schools, colleges, adult education, and night schools, a substantial number of small business persons who have encountered various problems as well as those who are preparing for small business careers, can be greatly helped.

Of course, for prospective small business persons these training programs may be of tremendous value since those persons would be made more aware of potential problem areas and instructed as to how to effectively deal with these problems. In addition, both potential and actual small business owners and managers would be made aware of the additional resources for assistance within the community. Further, these training programs would improve the survival potential of many small businesses, and would thus have a significant positive impact on the small business community.

Let me further emphasize my feeling that the increased survival of small business will have a significant impact on unemployment and on the national economy. The Small Business Administration has cited that small businesses employ 58 percent of the national work force and that 1 out of every 10 new jobs is generated in the area of self-employment. This, of course, would allow for the succession of more businesses as well as the generation of more income, jobs, products, and services for the benefit of the general population.

Presently, many of us are desparately searching for noninflationary solutions to the devastating problem of national unemployment. The wide-scale introduction of training programs in the area of small business development can be a giant step in the direction of alleviating this situation. Hopefully, as we initiate new legislative efforts, we can attempt to formulate policies that will be pertinent to the development of new educational and vocational programs of specific application and benefit to prospective and existing small business owners and managers.●

WARREN, MICH., CHOIR TO TOUR ROMANIA

HON. JAMES J. BLANCHARD

OF MICHIGAN

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. BLANCHARD. Mr. Speaker, I am pleased to take note of an upcoming tour of Romania by the Warren Woods Concert Choir of Warren, Mich.

The tour is being sponsored by the Friendship Ambassadors, a nonprofit organization which has sponsored many tours of foreign countries by performing American artists.

The Warren Woods Choir will appear in the following Romanian cities: Bucharest, Sibiel, Sibiu, Kluz, Trigu Mures, Poiana Brasob, Piantra Neamt, Galati, and Olimp.

I know that the people of Romania will thoroughly enjoy this fine choir from Warren. I feel that cultural exchanges of this kind are especially important because they give people an opportunity, at a very human level, to gain valuable insights into differing ways of life.

I am sending a letter to each of those cities and their leaders expressing my appreciation for their hospitality and cooperation in this venture.

At a time when there is great tension between Eastern and Western nations, I believe that this concert tour, which is organized in a spirit of international friendship, will help strengthen the bonds of good will and understanding.●

PARKS PACKAGE PRAISED

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, I would like to note the outstanding accomplishments of my colleague, the gentleman from California (Mr. PHILLIP BURTON). His quiet efforts toward attaining a more perfect degree of environmental quality through an expansion of our national parks and recreation areas will remain a symbol for future generations of what can be done by the collective wisdom of concerned Members of Congress, and their leader.

On this issue, it was Mr. BURTON who provided that leadership.

More than a decade has passed since the last major legislative initiative affecting this Nation's parklands has been considered by the Congress. The National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978, originated by Mr. BURTON, is an accumulation of loose ends and incomplete thoughts that have remained during the past decade of near neglect.

I offer, for the CONGRESSIONAL RECORD, those comments by four major environmental groups that relate to this legislation and to Mr. BURTON'S foresight.

The efforts of the Sierra Club, the Wilderness Society, the Friends of the Earth, and the American Rivers Conservation Council were impressive in shoring up support for the bill.

We can only hope that the Senate can act judiciously and without haste to pass this bill and to send it on to President Carter for his signature into law.

PARKS PACKAGE PRAISED

The Wilderness Society heaped praise on the National Parks Omnibus Bill passed by the House of Representatives today.

Calling it "the most important parks legislation since the establishment of the National Park System," Celia Hunter, Executive Director of the Wilderness Society, praised its chief sponsor, Rep. Phil Burton, who "deserves tremendous credit for the outstanding job he has done in pulling together this remarkable piece of legislation."

The bill if approved by the Senate will:

Designate more national park wilderness than any bill since the 1964 act establishing the National Wilderness Preservation System—almost quadrupling the amount of national parks wilderness.

Provide $650 million in matching grants to local communities to rehabilitate their parks and recreation systems.

Designate more wild and scenic rivers than any bill since the 1968 Wild and Scenic Rivers Act—seven new rivers and nineteen study rivers.

Add thirteen new areas to the National Park System.

Add four new trails to the National Trail System.

"There are literally dozens of items in this bill that are essential if we are to protect and manage our national parks at all adequately," said Hunter. "It's high time that someone took the initiative and did this job. It should have been done years ago. We'll all benefit from Rep. Burton's good work."

AMERICAN RIVERS
CONSERVATION COUNCIL,
Washington, D.C., July 12, 1978.

The American Rivers Conservation Council hails H.R. 12536, the National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978, passed by the House today as a landmark measure in the preservation of our natural heritage. This will be by far the most significant addition to the National Wild and Scenic Rivers System since the original 1968 Act. In addition to the designation of 7 rivers and authorization of 19 studies for potential additions, the bill includes several policy measures which should improve the wild and scenic rivers program and encourage river preservation action by the states.

Chairman Burton and the National Parks Subcommittee are to be praised for the vision they showed in putting this package together. H.R. 12536 will go far towards improving the quality of life for future generations.

The gem of the whole bill though is the wild and scenic designation for the Middle Delaware River. This will help resolve a long standing threat to one of the most outstanding natural areas in the East and allow the recreational use of this marvelous resource within a days drive of one quarter of the U.S. population. Meyner's vote defeating the Thompson amendment was a real high for those who care about our nation's rivers and natural areas. Congratulations to Chairman Burton and Congresspersons Kostmayer, Meyner, Fenwick, McDade, and all the others who attributed to this great victory.

HON. PHILLIP BURTON.
Chairman, Subcommittee on National Parks and Insular Affairs

DEAR CONGRESSMAN BURTON: Congratulations on a job well done on a bill for which you can always be proud. The National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978 is the biggest step forward for the National Wild and Scenic River System since its 1968 enactment, and is of similar importance for other aspects of the struggle to insure that future generations will have the opportunity for outdoor recreation and for experience with the natural world.

Together with the Redwoods, Boundary Waters, and Alaska legislation which you and Chairmen Udall and Seiberling have fostered, the 95th Congress is certain to be remembered as a high point in the preservation of our natural environment.

We will do all we can to insure that these bills are passed by the Senate and signed by the President in as strong form as they passed the House. Our press release on H.R. 12536 is enclosed.

Sincerely,

HOWARD BROWN.

SIERRA CLUB PRAISES BURTON PARKS AND RECREATION BILL

The Sierra Club today hailed the passage of H.R. 12536, the National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978, authored by Rep. Phillip Burton (D., Calif.), as "a milestone in conservation."

Michael McCloskey, Executive Director of the Sierra Club, said in a telegram to Rep. Phillip Burton: "May we offer our hearty congratulations for your superb work in guiding the omnibus parks bill through the House of Representatives. We think this is a milestone in conservation. Your skill and perseverance made it possible. We are immensely grateful. We look forward to carrying the work forward now in the Senate."

After the passage of the bill in the House, Linda M. Billings, a Washington Representative for the Sierra Club, said: "We are elated that this major legislation passed the House with such a large margin of support. Rep. Burton deserves high praise for his vision and courage in crafting the legislation and for his political skill in guiding it to victory. The bill has made great strides towards bringing a number of programs forward which have made very slow progress over the past decade. We are particularly pleased with the provisions for wild and scenic rivers, national trails, national park wilderness, urban parks recovery, and new areas protection such as the Santa Monica Mountains, the Chattahoochee River, and the Pine Barrens. We are also gratified that the bill settles some longstanding controversies such as the lower canyons of the Rio Grande, the middle Delaware River and Tocks Island Dam project, and Mineral King Valley in California. We urge the Senate and the Carter Administration to look favorably upon this legislation and to insure its enactment in this Congress."

FRIENDS OF THE EARTH,
San Francisco, Calif., July 18, 1978.

Hon. PHILLIP BURTON,
Rayburn House Office Building,
Washington, D.C.

DEAR PHIL: Friends of the Earth congratulates you for your leadership and vision in putting together H.R. 12536, the National Parks and Recreation Act of 1978, and for so skillfully steering this historic bill through the House of Representatives.

This omnibus bill not only addresses the need of the American people for additional parks, wild rivers, and recreation areas, it recognizes that we must act swiftly to protect our scenic resources from development. Our California office is most familiar with the threats to areas in this state included in your bill, Mineral King, the Santa Monica Mountains, Golden Gate National Recreation Area, etc. . . . Certainly the threats in other parts of the country are no less great.

H.R. 12536 is not only one of the most significant pieces of environmental legislation to come before the Congress, it is one of the most constructive. In recent years, both the Congress and environmental organizations have had to spend far too much time in fighting off attacks to existing parks—open pit mining in Death Valley, logging outside of Redwood National Park, and the concessionaire scandal in Yosemite, were just three such battles in California. There has been little time left to devote to protecting new areas, as you have done in H.R. 12536.

Many of the proposals in the omnibus bill have been brought up time and time again but have not been acted upon for one reason or another. H.R. 12536 has been accurately characterized as "catch up" legislation. But it took your hard work and dedication to give the Congress the opportunity to catch up on the urgent business of preserving our natural and historic resources.

We hope the Senate will not wait long to follow suit.

Sincerely,

CONNIE PARRISH,
California Representative.●

TAXING PROBLEMS

HON. EDWARD J. DERWINSKI

OF ILLINOIS

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. DERWINSKI. Mr. Speaker, Carl Richards, retired editor and publisher of the Palos Regional, a local newspaper serving my district, can best be described as one of the deans of the weekly community newspaper. Carl is a homespun philosopher as well as a discerning journalist.

Therefore, I wish to insert into the RECORD the editor's note and column of the July 6 Palos Regional which I commend to the attention of the Members:

TAXING PROBLEMS

Carl Richards was lucky. His newspaper survived. But countless other publications have not been able to cope with the monumental tax increases incurred by small business owners. This tale, reprinted from his column of April 14, 1977, is of one such unlucky publisher.

This column is especially timely in light of the recent success of California's Proposition 13, dubbed the property taxpayers' revolt.

Richards told this editor that he thinks that politicians across the nation will now have to listen to their constituents who are demanding that taxes be cut.

We stopped at the front door of a small town newspaper plant last Thursday and read a sign which said that the business has been closed by order of the Internal Revenue Service.

That meant only one thing—the publisher had not paid his taxes.

We do not know the name of the present publisher, nor why he didn't (or couldn't) pay his taxes, but we do know the couple who founded the paper 10 years ago, and some of the paper's history.

It was started by a couple with five or six children and everybody in the family worked on the paper. They served their community and most people in town seemed to like them. After five years of hard work they gave up. He told us that he just couldn't make a living with the paper and he got himself a job with some company in Michigan.

We hear that the same pattern existed with the present publisher.

In the past 20 years the federal, state, county and local governments have piled so many taxes on those who operate a business that it is a wonder that there are any small businesses left. Let's see what faced that small publisher.

He had to withhold income taxes for all of his employees, and himself, and send the money to the Internal Revenue Department. He had to withhold and pay the Social Security tax for all of his employees and pay the same amount himself for all of his employees and himself. He had to pay state unemployment tax, tax on all supplies and equipment he purchased and taxes on everything for his own personal use. Also, real estate taxes, personal property taxes and dozens of hidden taxes.

With the amount of reports he had to file he probably paid an accountant $100 a month or spent nights trying to make out the forms and learn how to be a tax expert. He also had his company and personal income tax returns to make and unless he had professional help he could mess it up and stand the chance of drawing penalties for improper returns. Or, appear before a court which literally says you are guilty before you are tried. If a small businessman would keep a record of the hours he puts in doing bookkeeping and collecting for governmental agencies, and would charge them for it, he could ask for one tax-free year.

Let's assume that this publisher had put aside the amount of money necessary to pay his withholding, Social Security, sales tax, real estate tax, income tax and his unemployment tax, and an emergency hits his family—his wife or kids get sick, or in an accident, and he runs up big hospital and medical bills. Or, he gets sick for a long period and cannot make money for the newspaper. A federal or state sticker appears on the door.

An auction of the newspaper plant and equipment was to have been held Tuesday. We couldn't have gone if they had been giving the machinery away. We couldn't stand to see 10 years of hard work crushed and destroyed by a giant federal government that has long forgotten that our flag once flew over "The land of the free."●

FORMER CHAIRMAN OF THE COUNCIL OF ECONOMIC ADVISERS, ALAN GREENSPAN, TESTIFIES IN SUPPORT OF THE KEMP-ROTH TAX RATE REDUCTION ACT AND ANSWERS THE INFLATION QUESTION

HON. JACK F. KEMP

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. KEMP. Mr. Speaker, the former Chairman of the President's Council of Economic Advisers, Dr. Alan Greenspan, testified last week before the Senate Finance Committee's Subcommittee on Taxation and Debt Management in support of the Kemp-Roth Tax Rate Reduction Act. Dr. Greenspan was Chairman of the Council under President Ford and is now president of Townsend-Greenspan & Co., in New York City.

Dr. Greenspan testified:

I support the Roth-Kemp Tax Reduction Act as a vehicle that will help us break away from an economic policy which looks increasingly unlikely to resolve the problems facing this country.

* * * * *

A new approach must be initiated, one which has a fighting chance of breaking us out of the discouraging cycle and restoring long-term balance to our budget and economy. We need the equivalent of Proposition 13 for the nation as a whole. Roth-Kemp combined with modest restraint in expenditure growth could move us a long way in the right direction.

Then, Dr. Greenspan addressed himself to the recent attacks on Kemp-Roth, attacks that it would be inflationary, by putting it in the context of what our choices are:

It strikes me that those who label Roth-Kemp as inflationary are assuming the same type of federal expenditure growth which has created our current problems. There is no question that should we continue on the current path, we will be running large deficits and highly inflationary fiscal policies. But this would occur with, or without, Roth-Kemp. Our problem is that we tend to spend whatever we have. The great advantage of Roth-Kemp is that it would restore a significant part of the normal increase in tax revenues coming from the growth in the economy to taxpayers, rather than employing them for new expenditure programs. It is not Roth-Kemp that is inflationary, it is the process of federal outlays which Roth-Kemp may succeed in curbing.

Dr. Greenspan's written testimony follows in its entirety:

TESTIMONY OF ALAN GREENSPAN BEFORE THE SENATE SUBCOMMITTEE ON TAXATION AND DEBT MANAGEMENT, COMMITTEE ON FINANCE, JULY 14, 1978

I support the Roth-Kemp Tax Reduction Act as a vehicle that will help us break away from an economic policy which looks increasingly unlikely to resolve the problems facing this country.

We are confronted with an insufficiency of investment and a disturbing shortfall of risk-taking. We have observed, as a consequence of growing inflation fears, an increasing unwillingness on the part of the business community to commit to longer-lived assets: That is to the future of this country. The ability of the market economy to address future imbalances has accordingly been weakened and productivity and real income growth have slowed. We have experienced over the years a gradual deterioration in fiscal restraint and allowed budget expenditures to expand in excess of the capacity of our economy to finance them. While our political leaders are rhetorically eloquent on matters of fiscal restraint, their specific decisions based on short-term political pressures seem inexorably to pad federal outlays.

I had hoped that the recent rhetoric for fiscal restraint would lead to a curbing of expenditure growth, thereby gradually reducing the federal deficit and removing the inflationary pressures from our economic system. The recent inflationary upsurge has apparently put some fiscal backbone into the executive branch and, clearly, the proddings from their constituents have produced a number of new converts to fiscal conservatism in the Congress.

However, with increasing pressure on the financial side of our economy, the chances of a recession within the next two years are now better than even. I fear that when confronted with economic weakness and a newly rising unemployment trend, much of the recent fiscal restraint will dissolve. New short-term fiscal stimulus would then throw the prospect of budget balance indefinitely into the future and, presumably, add little to real growth.

A new approach must be initiated, one which has a fighting chance of breaking us out of this discouraging cycle and restoring long-term balance to our budget and economy. We need the equivalent of Proposition 13 for the nation as a whole Roth-Kemp combined with modest restraint in expenditure growth could move us a long way in the right direction.

Are there risks in the Roth-Kemp proposal? Of course there are. But the level of risk in initiating such a fiscal policy is less, and the potential rewards significantly greater, than the course which we now appear to be following.

Let us remember that the basic purpose of any tax cut program in today's environment is to reduce the momentum of expenditure growth by restraining the amount of revenues available and trust that there is a political limit to deficit spending. For if expenditures are not curtailed in line with tax reductions, or if tax cuts do not greatly expend taxable incomes, a tax cut is an illusory increase in real purchasing power. Inflation will eat away at whatever increase in nominal incomes is produced.

Hence, any tax program must be associated with programmed curbing of growth in outlays. Fiscal 1978 receipts are currently estimated at $401 billion. Under current tax law, extended, the January budget projected revenues of $608 billion for fiscal 1981 and $686 billion for fiscal 1982. Roth-Kemp would probably reduce 1981 revenues to about $500 billion, still 25 percent above the current fiscal year, and to approximately $560 billion for fiscal 1982. Even if Roth-Kemp did nothing to enhance the economic outlook implicit in this January's budget, a balanced budget by fiscal 1982 under Roth-Kemp would still allow a rise of 5½ percent annually in federal outlays during the next four years. The implied level of fiscal 1982 outlays, I might add, would be precisely the amount that President Ford recommended in his January 1977 budget. To the extent that the Roth-Kemp bill enhances the economic outlook beyond that embodied in the January forecast, revenues would be higher and expenditures could grow faster than 5½ percent annually and still reach a balanced budget.

It strikes me that those who label Roth-Kemp as inflationary are assuming the same type of federal expenditure growth which has created our current problems. There is no question that should we continue on the current path, we will be running large deficits and highly inflationary fiscal policies. But this would occur with, or without, Roth-Kemp. Our problem is that we tend to spend whatever we have. The great advantage of Roth-Kemp is that it would restore a significant part of the normal increase in tax revenues coming from the growth in the economy to taxpayers, rather than employing them for new expenditure programs. It is not Roth-Kemp that is inflationary, it is the process of federal outlays which Roth-Kemp may succeed in curbing.

There is some inflationary risk involved in the Roth-Kemp bill. It does, in the very short run, increase the federal deficit. It does create the types of risks we shouldn't have to be taking. But fiscally irresponsible policies have brought us to the point where we are required to use the type of sledge hammer approach embodied in Proposition 13 to break us out of a stagflation oriented policy scenario. We appear to have a potential very substantial backlog of capital investment, which is being stifled by high risk and required rates of return. This backlog could be activated if we can somehow create greater incentives and increase confidence in cash rates of return on future investments. Such an investment boom would generate a broad expansion in economic activity, in productivity and, hence, in standards of living.

The structure of the Roth-Kemp bill is in the right direction. But, I would go further. I would prefer more emphasis on corporate tax cuts and cuts in the upper-middle and upper income brackets. Hence, I am also in favor of the Steiger Amendment which could compliment Roth-Kemp. Such a program would certainly enhance incentives and expand investment and economic activity. Those who would benefit most from such a tax cut are those who exist at the margin of the economy, those who are most vulnerable to unemployment when the economy sags, and those who are hired or upgraded as the economy expands—namely the middle and middle-lower income earners. To argue that the Roth-Kemp or Steiger initiatives help the rich at the expense of the poor is shortsighted. Everyone should benefit, the poor most of all.

Finally, let me address the issue of the effect on increasing tax rates on the tax base. Unless we initiate a new policy, we will presumably continue to allow inflation to boost effective tax rates, thereby increasing the burden on investment and initiative in this country. We will surely, in the process, give lip service to cutting taxes and will periodically cut rates, but not enough to offset fully the inflation tax. There are those who believe that we have already reached the point where taxation has become counterproductive, that further increases in tax rates will erode the tax base and thereby increase the federal deficit. While evidence is lacking, we know in principle that there is a point where increased tax rates become counterproductive to economic growth.

The problem is that we are unlikely to be aware we have reached such a point until perhaps three or four years after the fact. There is no way analytically to ascertain developing stagnation except in retrospect. Unfortunately, once that stage is reached, as the British have sadly concluded, the pain, economic and social, in reversing it, is close to intolerable. The British have North Sea oil to help them in their transition back to economic sanity. No such bonanza seems pending for the United States. We must avoid, at all costs, slipping into the British disease.

Can we say with a reasonably high degree of assurance that we are not now, nor are we about to, approach a rate of taxation which will engender economic stagnation? While I suspect that we have not as yet reached the danger point, there is surely enough peripheral evidence on investment shortfalls and lagging basic research to give us sufficient concern that we may be entering a level of effective taxation which could cause us trouble.

Since the cost of stagnation politically, socially and economically is so large, we have to lean over backwards to avoid it. A program of well structured tax cuts and expenditure restraint is an insurance policy we badly need.●

INFLATION CZAR

HON. CHARLES E. GRASSLEY

OF IOWA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. GRASSLEY. Mr. Speaker, in recent weeks we have seen much attention given to the problem of inflation. We even now have an "inflation Czar" who is supposed to lead us in our fight against inflation, which is again recognized as our country's No. 1 problem.

Yesterday, July 20, 1978, an article appeared in the Washington Post with the title "Farmers Reap Loss on Inflation." The article accurately points out that farmers have also suffered from the high rate of inflation with which we are now having to live. Farmers have had to endure this high inflation on top of the low commodity prices many of them received last year and the adverse weather conditions which hit some parts of the country.

We all must realize that inflation hits everyone. It is a hidden tax which leaves no one untouched. If we are ever to regain stability in our economy and lower the rate of inflation, we must halt the proliferation of Government spending. The Government cannot solve all of our problems or provide us with everything.

The article provides an excellent insight to the problems facing farmers and in order to share it with my colleagues the text follows:

FARMERS REAP LOSS ON INFLATION—CONSUMER GOODS GO UP AS CROP PRICES SLIDE

(By Bradley Graham)

NORTH PLATTE, NEBR.—Alice Phelps has the patient, tolerant look that comes from a lifetime of farming. She is generally slow to anger and quite diplomatic about most things. Which is why her friends continue to elect her to head the local Farm Bureau chapter, her protestations to the contrary.

But the other day she was obviously disturbed. Her visitor from the East, simply did not understand the facts of farming. He had suggested that current high food prices meant farmers were getting rich.

"Don't blame us for inflation," she said in her most admonishing way, which is very effective. Whereupon she rose from her kitchen chair, walked to a cupboard and reached for a box of Post Grape Nut flakes.

"This box of cereal costs $1.04. It weighs 18 ounces. Know what's in it?" She glanced at the side of the box. "Basically, wheat and barley. Know what a bushel of barley is selling for today? About $1.75. A bushel of wheat goes for about $2.50. Each bushel weighs 50 or 60 pounds. That's a lot of cereal." She paused.

"No, inflation doesn't make us richer," Alice Phelps said, "only poorer."

After several days in this central Nebraska town, it is readily apparent that the current round of inflation has been more bane than boon to crop farmers. In fact, inflation has struck here with a vengeance. For while the prices of consumer goods have been accelerating upwards, the wholesale prices of grains have slid to hardship lows.

It was only a short while ago that this agricultural community knew very good times. In 1974, thanks to a surge in world demand for American grain, crops here were selling at record highs of $4 per bushel and more. Now, a bushel of dried corn can't fetch above $2.

In the meantime, the prices of farm machinery and farmland, sparked by the bumper farm profits and splurge in farm spending of several years ago, have anything but reversed themselves. A 125-horsepower tractor which sold for $14,000 in 1973 is on the market today for $31,293. An acre of prime farmland has soared in price from $800 to more than $2,000.

It is this disparity between the prices farmers can get for what they sell and the prices they are having to pay for what they need that irks them the most about inflation. It doesn't seem fair to them that some prices should rise while others slip back and they get caught in the squeeze. "If everything fluctuated as grain prices do, we'd do all right," said Glen Phelps who, with Alice, grows corn on several hundred acres north of town. "But they don't. They go up and up and then just stay there."

Farming used to be a lot simpler, and farm life more sheltered from fluctuations in national and world markets. Now, everything seems affected by everything else. The tone and tempo of life on the Plains has changed, and inflation is part of the change.

Glen Phelps recalled that his parents 30 years ago had a dairy farm and would trade milk and cheese with neighbors in return for meat and vegetables. "We didn't deal with money then. We bartered for things. Today, everything is money and inflation. I wouldn't mind going back to trading with the neighbors."

The Phelps are still largely independent of the stores in town. Alice grows just about everything imaginable in the garden and the family draws its meat from the cattle they raise. But Alice still must shop for staples such as coffee, sugar and flour. Many of her friends, she said, have abandoned their gardens altogether. "We've all become somewhat spoiled, I guess," she noted.

Farmers here stress how little influence they have over the price of food. They say they themselves are at the mercy of uncontrollable forces, including the weather, the demand for grain exports and—something that's currently on everyone's mind in Nebraska—grasshopper plagues. The ones really responsible for inflation, they say, are the groups that can control prices, and do.

A favorite target is labor unions, represented in North Platte by the Union Pacific Railroad. The railroad operates a large roundhouse just west of town and employs about 15 percent of the county's eligible work force. Every farmer interviewed sooner or later mentioned the Union Pacific, claimed its workers were overpaid, and blamed inflation on it—at least in part.

Big business, too, comes in for a scolding in these parts, charged with manipulating supplies to raise prices artificially and fatten profits. "Lots of folks remember how the price of fertilizer nearly doubled in 1974 because of a reported shortage of natural gas," said Ron Sobotka, manager of a local grocery store. "The next year you could get all the fertilizer you wanted. The same thing happened with the supply of baling wire here a short time ago."

As much as farmers talk about the advantage in pricing that comes from being organized, they have stubbornly resisted attempts to create a national coalition. Part of the reason may be found in that traditional sense of righteousness, of rural piety, which still prevails here. Part of the reason may be found in the fierce independence farming seems to breed.

In any case, the American Agricultural Movement, which stirred many to drive their tractors to Washington last fall, fizzled here and elsewhere in the spring when planting time came. "They all went back to their own farms," said Harlon Luttrell, this area's farm extension agent. "No one really believed they would strike like they threatened to, not when it came right down to giving up a year's crops."

The cry of hard times on the farm seems to ring inconsistent with the looks of the expensive rigs standing in the fields here. The tractors and combines are large and powerful and come equipped with air conditioning, stereo speakers and even telephones. But these, farmers say, have simply become the tools of the trade. "It's not a question of how we can afford them," said Luttrell, "but whether we could do without them. Farming isn't a small scale operation anymore. The capital investment necessary in a farm today is enormous. The mowers, the mixers, the sprayers, the loaders, planters, rakes, balers, tractors—the average investment per farmer is somewhere around $120,000."

This figure, Luttrel said, has increased with inflation, not only because machinery costs more today, but also because the average size a farm must be in order to be economical has increased—and larger farms require larger machinery.

On the other hand—and here is the only benefit higher prices have had on farming—the tremendous appreciation in land values has meant an increase in personal equity for the many farmers who own their own land, allowing them to borrow more to finance more expensive machinery.

"Land is the best thing you have going for you in the credit market," said Lee Harris, a 41-year-old corn farmer from nearby Cozad who bought his 2,500-acre spread in 1971 for about $800 an acre. Harris estimates his land is now worth at least $2,000 an acre, and last year he found it easy to borrow the necessary $50,000 for a new irrigation system and storage bin.

Though on paper inflation has turned some here into millionaires, farmers say they have had to work harder than before to get their farms to pay. They say they have no fat left to cut. Their only choice is to become more efficient.

Ernie Mehl, a beet farmer, called in a consultant from International Harvester to tell him how to improve his operation. The result: he now grows beets in 30-inch rows instead of in 22-inch ones and uses bigger equipment to harvest them. Gerald Beattie, a grain farmer, also hired a consultant when the cost of pumping water went from $15 to $50 an acre.

With farmers investing what money they have back in their farms, towns like North Platte have been seriously affected by a slump in retail sales. Sales here grew only 2 percent last year—"Hardly enough to keep up with inflation," said Gary Toebbin, director of North Platte's Chamber of Commerce. William Dietemeyer, president of the First National Bank of North Plattee, spoke of a "new conservative attitude" he has seen among farmers.

Over 80 percent of the farmers in this area participate in some kind of federal agricultural support program, receiving payment from the government either for storing their grain or letting some fields lie fallow. While these programs help pay farm bills, they are hardly enough to keep up with the inflation rate, farmers say.

Alice Phelps said the most she can hope for is that grain prices will not stay at their current depressed level long, but rise as beef prices have recently. It is all a matter of supply and demand she knows and all out of her control.

But she won't leave farming. She likes life in the country she said and the independence of farming. "I also like to watch things grow" she added with a smile. "It gives me satisfaction." ●

1980 OLYMPICS SHOULD NOT BE HELD IN MOSCOW

HON. WILLIAM LEHMAN

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, in the aftermath of the Soviet trials and sentences of Anatoly Shcharansky, Aleksander Ginzburg, and other Soviet Jews and monitors of Soviet compliance with the Helsinki agreement, we must let the Soviets know that we will not tolerate such outrageous abuses of human dignity and blatant disregard for international covenants. There is no alternative except to increase our efforts to seek freedom for these courageous people and to apply more sanctions to the Soviet Union linking human rights violations with technological and cultural exchange programs.

The most effective way to tell the Soviets that we will not acquiesce to their disregard of human rights and the Helsinki agreement is for our Government to support the removal of the 1980 Olympic games from Moscow. Not to take this kind of action, in effect, makes the United States an accomplice to the acts we so strongly deplore. There is no neutral stance that absolves us from the moral responsibility of acting to resist the violation of human rights, for to fail to do so places the human rights of us all in jeopardy. Unless there is some change in the Soviets' repressive policies and a movement toward the respect of human rights is indicated, the Soviets should not have the privilege of hosting the 1980 games.

The last time a country hosting the Olympic games was involved in a campaign of antisemitism, the world did nothing to respond and, therefore, acted in support of the Nazi propaganda effort. Not only did the United States fail to boycott the 1936 Olympics, but the American team cooperated with the Nazi request to remove two American athletes from competition because they were Jewish. To remove the Olympic games from Moscow would signal our refusal to allow any country to again make such a disgusting display of hypocrisy.

A few weeks ago, I wrote to the president of the International Olympic Committee in Lausanne, Lord Michael Morris Killanin, urging the committee to speak out against the exploitation of these games by the Soviet Union made evident by its campaign to eradicate from its major cities critical elements which may be visible during the Moscow Olympics. I am writing again with my colleagues to urge the removal of the games in Moscow.

I urge my colleagues to join me in cosponsoring House Concurrent Resolution 1268 calling for the removal of the 1980 Olympic games from Moscow. Let us also ask other countries to join us in this effort and in our forthcoming sanctions against the Soviet Union's continued persecution of Soviet Jews and monitors of the Helsinki agreement.●

LARGO WORLD BAND OF GOLD

HON. C. W. BILL YOUNG

OF FLORIDA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. YOUNG of Florida. Mr. Speaker, on the evening of July 27, three new gold medals will be arriving in the United States. These medals were won on the playing field, but a musical, not an athletic playing field, and the players who marched off with the gold medals were not discus throwers or skiers, but 210 talented young band members from the Largo Senior High School in my district. They will be bringing their medals with them as they triumphantly return from Europe where over the weekend of July 15–16, they marched away with the World Band Title at the World Olympics of Music in Kerkrade, Netherlands.

Competing against 250 bands representing 26 nations, the Largo Band of Gold, as they are more familiarly known, captured their first gold medal in the concert section, playing a medley including works from Beethoven to the Beatles. They outdistanced all competition in the show section by scoring 175 out of a possible 180 points, to win their second gold. And, in placing third in the march section, garnered sufficient points to win the third gold medal, the one awarded to the all-around winner of the competition.

Winning is nothing new to these youngsters, a class AA show band of world standards, winners of national parade, concert and field championships, and in this very same competition from which they have just emerged as world champions, they were last year winners of two gold medals. Credit must be given to the community which has so loyally supported them, their own mayor, the Honorable Warren Andrews accompanied them to Europe and to their fine musical director, Bob Cotter, whose talent and tireless effort has helped develop and to maintain this musical organization at such a high level of excellence. But for now, I think the spotlight belongs to this very wonderful group of boys and girls who have once more helped to prove that the United States is the very best.

I wish I could introduce my colleagues personally to the members of this band which has so ably represented our country in world competition, but since I cannot, I would at least like to share with you the names of the members of the "Largo World Band of Gold."

APATHY

HON. HAROLD C. HOLLENBECK

OF NEW JERSEY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. HOLLENBECK. Mr. Speaker, it is often helpful for Members of Congress to consider actions taken at the State and local level before trying to pass Federal legislation in a particular area. Although the election day voter registration bill, H.R. 5400, did not reach the floor last year, it might be helpful to us in future years to study the effects of similar proposals in individual States.

In that regard, a recent editorial by the Hudson (N.J.) Dispatch vividly illustrates some of the problems inherent in recent State legislation. The editorial takes special note of the real reason for low voter turnouts: apathy. The challenge for us is not mandate automatic or 1-day registration procedures, but to demonstrate to the electorate the continuing strength and vitality of the democratic process.

I insert the Dispatch editorial into the RECORD for the benefit of my colleagues:

EDITORIAL

The instant voter registration bill sounds good on paper. It's the practical effect we have qualms about.

If it becomes law, New Jersey residents could register and vote in general elections on the same day by going to the municipal clerk or the county election office and presenting a driver's license or other "suitable identification" or merely having a registered voter vouch for them.

The bill passed the Senate last February and yesterday the State Government Committee of the Assembly voted to release the bill without any recommendation pro or con.

An amendment approved by the committee would enable unregistered voters to cast a ballot after bringing proof of residency to the polls. Prospective voters would have to be accompanied by a sponsor registered to vote in that district. A second amendment would provide a 25-day period after the election for officials to verify residency.

Fraudulent registration would be punishable by a fine of up to $1,000, a three-year prison term, or both.

The theory behind the bill is that the decline in voter participation is due to the inconvenience of the current voter registration process. By allowing registration and voting in one simple process, the theory goes, the state would be opening up the franchise to many people who would otherwise not vote.

Republicans generally oppose the bill because they believe most of the new voters will be potential Democrats.

We oppose the bill the way it now stands for other reasons.

First, it will be an easy avenue for fraud. We have no problem imagining party regulars merrily skipping from municipal clerk to municipal clerk, vouching for each other's residency. There would have to be better safeguards against this easy kind of fraud.

Second, if they wanted to truly open up the franchise, why did legislators limit instant registration just to general elections? In many countries primaries are where the action is. Of course, they are also where organizations have the most control. Maybe party heads are fearful they will lose power if the electorate can register and vote as party members in one day.

Third, the bill doesn't provide additional funds to cover the potentially enormous administrative expense municipalities must bear as a result of instant registration. In Wisconsin, which has a similar statute, 216,000 people registered and voted on Election Day in 1976.

The major defect in the bill, however, can't be addressed by amendments. It is the underlying assumption that democracy will automatically be strengthened by having more voters turn out at the polling booths.

This may have been true 30 years ago, when many states had poll taxes, property requirements, grandfather clauses and other legal barriers to voting for whole groups of people. But these have been eliminated, as have many of the physical impediments to registration.

Today, most people don't vote simply because they feel their vote doesn't make a difference. They feel politics is an irrelevant game participated in by two-bit players concerned only with power or wealth.

California's Proposition 13 and other referenda have hit a responsive chord in voters partially because they permit voters to directly affect the operation of a government that seems to ignore them. Instant voter registration aside, then the message for politicians is that when voters feel they can make a difference, they will go to the polls.●

A SALUTE TO STEVE ACUNTO

HON. RICHARD L. OTTINGER

OF NEW YORK

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. OTTINGER. Mr. Speaker, I am delighted to have as one of my constituents. Steve Acunto—an outstanding citizen who gives tirelessly of himself to people of all ages. Steve is a devoted family man who has helped countless young people in Westchester develop their sports potential. I am pleased to share with my colleagues an article which appeared in the Westchester Rockland newspapers in honor of Steve:

SALUTING ACUNTO, A VERY SPECIAL DAD

(By Helen Ganz Spiro)

Mention the name Steve Acunto in most any home and chances are one member, or even all members, of the family will connect his name with either boxing, Little League, bicycling, politics, journalism, or radio.

There are few children, teenagers, or adults in Westchester County who have not at some point or other crossed paths with Stephen Acunto II . . . father, teacher, coach, sportsman par excellence, columnist and radio sportscaster, whcse high principles have been instilled in many.

And it is for this reason we feel the title of Westchester Father of the Year 1978 should be bestowed on this man whose love for children, devotion to fair play, is undisputed.

There are few children who don't know him from the ballfield, where he has been very much in evidence with Little Leaguers. As an examiner and teacher of safety measures for cyclists his lectures are hard hitting, but with an ulterior motive . . . safety. He is a familiar figure with a pair of boxing gloves on, teaching youngsters self defense, sparring with the older set, or just giving an exhibition.

Acunto is mentor to thousands as well as father to his own four children, now adults—Stephen III, Laura Markevitz, Stephanie, and Donna.

Natives of Staten Island, the Acunto family moved to Westchester in 1935. "My father, the original Stephen, was quite comfortable, and he bought the house we presently live in on Fletcher Avenue. It has always been known as the 'big house' and has been the center of family activities."

Acunto senior was a professor of music, a composer, a music critic and then president of a piano company, the sportsman recalls. "When I was graduated from St. Francis Xavier High School in New York my family wanted me to have a professional career . . . to become a lawyer. But somehow that wasn't what I wanted. Guess I was sort of a maverick.

"I liked to hang out at Stillman's gym and watch the boxing greats train," says the man who presently is director of the Crime Prevention Unit and Youth Activities Unit of the County's Sheriff Department. (Through the years his vocation has been as a salesman, a teacher of physical education, and with a bank.)

But of all his avocational sports, boxing has always been Acunto's favorite and during the years he frequented Stillman's he boxed in exhibition bouts with some of the top notch professionals. "That sport," he says, "helps teach youngsters discipline and confidence," two traits he considers vital.

"Youngsters need and want to be disciplined first at home by their parents, then in school by their teachers and then in sports. Boxing teaches young people to discipline themselves by keeping physically fit, training to participate in the sport and then to respect the ability of their opponent. It's also a way to teach kids self confidence to face life," Acunto says.

He feels children aren't born bad, but they do have to be steered and taught, sternly and lovingly, first by their parents, and then by their teachers. "Young people can go bad at an early age if parents give them too many material things. Giving a child everything is never the substitute for spending time and sharing interests with one's offspring."

Acunto, the man who has been honored by numerous local and national organizations, whose manner is gentle and who radiates kindness, is critical of plea bargaining and of jails that are like country clubs. "If someone does something wrong, there should be a mandatory sentence for the wrongdoing. Sometimes young people get into trouble because of the company they keep, or because of peer pressures. But still they have done something wrong and should be punished for what they have done."

What about the upbringing of his own children? "I was a strict father," he says. "Maybe my children resented it, but later on they realized that what my wife and I did in the way of disciplining them, was for their own good."

And how will this Father of the Year spend today? His wife, Mercedes, and their four children and grandchildren will spend the day together, as they have in many years gone by, at the "big house on Fletcher Avenue." ●

IMPACT OF LEGISLATION ON FAMILIES

HON. GEORGE MILLER

OF CALIFORNIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

Mr. MILLER of California. Mr. Speaker, as a Congressman whose major legislative interest lies in the area of children and families, I strongly support efforts to remove antifamily policies from Federal laws. After laboring over foster care and adoption reforms for over 3 years, as well as several other matters, it is evident to me that there do exist many extremely antifamily provisions in Federal laws, many of which we in Congress would be surprised to learn exist.

In particular, I would like once again to point to the financial incentives for the breakup of the family which are contained in the present foster care program. We will continue to pay hundreds, even thousands, of dollars a month to keep a child in foster care (often far longer, or in far more costly a setting than necessary for the benefit of the child), but we will not pay adoption supports to a qualified family willing to give that child a permanent home. We have not developed the necessary, and cost-effective, review procedures to assure that children are removed from the system at an appropriate time.

Thus, the studies all show that as many as two-thirds of the children in foster care are inappropriately placed. A study by the New York Comptroller last year showed that the cost of these inappropriate placements in New York City alone is in excess of a quarter of a billion dollars.

Many of these problems could be remedied with the comprehensive, and widely supported reforms contained in the H.R. 7200, which this House approved over a year ago. Inaction by the other body has not only delayed enactment, but has contributed to the unnecessary costs of foster care, to the very great detriment of thousands of children who have unnecessarily entered, or remained in inappropriate placements. Once again, I call upon the Senate to act expeditiously on the child welfare provisions of H.R. 7200.

But foster care is not the only problem area. As the attached article from the Wall Street Journal notes, the antifamily aspects of the current welfare program, and even of some of the proposed reforms need further study and improvement. Much of this very essential review is currently being undertaken by the family impact seminar at George Washington University. The FIS, headed by Sid Johnson, an extraordinary talented man, has been engaged in the development of policy analysis techniques so that this Congress will be able to act far more wisely in developing legislation which will benefit, and not interfere with, family life. The second article which I am submitting today describes the very important work of the family impact seminar, which deserves the support and attention of every Member of the Congress concerned with family life.

[From the Wall Street Journal, July 11, 1978]

WHEN WELFARE FAMILIES KNOW THEIR RIGHTS

(By Bradley R. Schiller)

In offering his welfare reform proposals last year, President Carter noted that "the welfare system is antiwork and antifamily." It is antiwork because it provides income guarantees to those who don't work, and imposes high taxes on the wages of those who do. It is antifamily because in most cases it disqualifies poor families that remain intact with an unemployed or low-wage father.

There has never been any serious disagreement about the theoretical impact of the welfare system on the emp'oyment or family stability of poor families: The system is indeed both antiwork and antifamily. What has kept the welfare debate alive for so long is that the actual antiwork and antifamily effects of the welfare system have not been that large.

For example, one out of four welfare mothers holds a job at least part of the year, despite the fact that the welfare system may take away as much as 67 cents out of each dollar she earns. Even more remarkable is the fact that one out of 10 welfare mothers works full time, despite the very high tax (as much as 67 percent) imposed on her very low wages (around $3 an hour).

Such evidence suggests that welfare mothers have a much stronger work ethic than most Americans (as Leonard Goodwin documented in some fascinating Brookings Institution studies) or that they respond "irrationally" to market incentives. The irrationality argument is based on the premise that welfare mothers are not completely informed about the loss of welfare benefits implied by a decision to work, either before or after they take a job.

The same kind of discrepancy between theory and practice is evident with respect to the antifamily provisions of the Aid to Families with Dependent Children (AFDC) program. There is a very strong financial incentive for poor fathers to desert their families, as desertion of the father (in fact or in appearance) makes the mother and children eligible for welfare (AFDC) benefits.

In view of this incentive, it is truly amazing that nearly three million poor families—including over 11 million individuals—continue to be headed by a male, despite the fact that nearly all of these families would be better off financially if they split up. What should one conclude? Do poor people have stronger family ties than the rest of us? Or don't they understand the complexities of the welfare system?

Recent evidence from the continuing welfare experiments in Seattle and Denver provides some answers. The basic intent of the experiments is to test the impact of different welfare-benefit provisions (especially higher guarantees and lower tax rates) on poor families. However, the most "startling" finding reported to Congress by the Stanford Research Institute economists conducting the study is that the experimental families are splitting up faster than anyone expected. Indeed, the rate of family break-up increased by 61 percent among black families and by 58 percent among white families after they began participating in the experiment.

The initial reaction to this extraordinary increase in the rate of family breakup has been greeted with dismay by welfare officials. HEW has been quick to point out that the Seattle-Denver experiments do not provide the jobs promised by President Carter's welfare reform proposal, and that such jobs might foster greater family stability. But such responses not only obscure the fact that President Carter's proposals also contain antifamily incentives, but miss a more fundamental point: What really distinguishes the welfare experiments from the regular welfare system is the amount of information provided to welfare recipients.

Families in the Seattle-Denver experiments are completely informed about their welfare rights and the consequences of employment and family break-up for their welfare benefits. By contrast, most welfare families are uninformed about welfare regulations and must go to extraordinary lengths to obtain clear, succinct answers about their welfare rights.

In other words, the distinguishing feature of the welfare experiments is that they encourage "rational" behavior. In so doing, they are quickly closing the gap that has long existed between welfare theory and welfare fact.

The current welfare system is in fact both antiwork and antifamily, and we have not yet witnessed the full implications of its perverse incentives; the Seattle-Denver experiments have provided a preview of what lies ahead. The question now is whether Congress will be sufficiently impressed by this glimpse of the future to undertake serious welfare reform before the full burden of the present system is evident.

STUDYING GOVERNMENT ROLE IN FAMILY

(By Steven V. Roberts)

WASHINGTON, June 23.—When A. Sidney Johnson's mother took sick recently, he wanted to care for her at home. But since Medicare will pay for a nursing facility and not for home-based care, it would have been more expensive to keep his mother in her own house, surrounded by her own family.

This sort of situation infuriates Mr. Johnson and his colleagues at the Family Impact Seminar. Their purpose is to determine ways that government can help families cope with an age of bewildering change. But all too often, they find, government hurts more than it helps.

Supported by several large foundation grants, the seminar is one of dozens of institutes and agencies that have sprouted around the country in recent years to examine the family and its role in modern America. But unlike some of these researchers, who act more like morticians, the seminar staff believes that the family is in good health. "The family," said Ruth Hubbell, the seminar's research director, "is still the best way to do a lot of things, such as raising children and meeting economic needs."

Theodora Ooms, the deputy director, senses a reaction against "professionalism" and the notion that families do not know what is best for themselves. "We have to change practices to meet family needs," she said, "rather than take over family functions."

CHANGES IN THE SOCIETY

Impetus for the seminar came from several sources, among them the devastating societal changes currently affecting the family. Over half the mothers with school-age children are now in the work force, as are more than one-third of those with preschoolers. The rising divorce rate, the increase in single-parent households and the growing career aspirations of women are all shaking the foundations of the traditional family structure.

Furthermore, the findings of the well-known Coleman report of the mid-1960's had stressed that family was more important to a child's development than school or other influences. Professionals realized more than ever that they could not study children in isolation, as if they were laboratory animals, but also had to consider social and economic forces.

A third source was political, since Mr. Johnson, the seminar director, had spent six years as staff director of the Senate Subcommittee on Children and Youth under then Senator Walter Mondale.

The seminar was established in early 1976 with the idea of testing the feasibility of a family impact statement, similar to the environmental impact statements now required for legislation affecting the environment. Some advocates wanted to push the idea through Congress immediately, but Mr. Johnson felt it would be better to study the concept and let it "bubble a bit."

A SENSITIVE ISSUE

Family issues touch on highly emotional and controversial subjects, and there is no one model for a successful, functioning family. The sensitivity of the issue was demonstrated recently when Secretary of Health, Education and Welfare Joseph A. Califano Jr., announced a two-year delay in the White House Conference on Families after different groups had started squabbling over the choice of director and the orientation of the conference.

The seminar consists of 22 experts in the field of family study, who meet periodically to guide and review the work of the small professional staff. Right now, the staff is drafting some model impact statements.

The first model concerns the Federal Government as employer and evaluates the experience of about 140,000 employees who have been working on flexible time schedules.

The seminar members believe that the impact of work on family life has long been underestimated. As Halcy Bohen, chief author of the model impact statement put it, "the competition between time for work and time for family has become a growing problem for an increasing number of Americans."

According to an interim report published in April, many workers say that flexible work hours improve their morale and give them more time for such family-related events as doctors' visits and school days.

CHILDREN IN FOSTER CARE

The second subject for a model impact statement is the foster care system, which is directly influenced by government policy. Seminar studies show that many foster children are allowed to drift in a sort of limbo, since government regulations make it difficult to reunite them with their biological families or put them up for adoption.

After two years of study, the seminar staff has realized that many of the key decisions affecting families take place on the local level, where services are delivered, rather than at the national level. The hours of a hospital clinic or after school day care center, for instance, can be far more important to a family than a Congressional vote on welfare policy. Accordingly, the seminar is also trying to develop a sort of checklist for consumers, a set of questions that can be asked at city council meetings or in letters to the editor, which would help illuminate a policy's impact on families.

Since the seminar places top priority on the family, it encounters some resistance from groups that have other goals. Some feminists; for example, see the emphasis on family as a threat to the full independence and liberation of women.

Focusing on the family can also seem threatening to advocates of "self-acutalization," and to those who believe that "doing your own thing" precludes compromise within a larger social group. "There's been tremendous interest in self-actualization and self-fulfillment, but I think it's gone too far," Mrs. Ooms asserted. "People need some rootedness, some sense of responsibility."

For all its faults, the seminar seems to be saying, the family will, and should, endure. "I find some family talk nauseatingly sweet," Mrs. Ooms said, "but it is still the most intense way in which we get meaning in our lives."

BALANCE(S) OF POWER SERIES—SOVIET INTENTIONS AND DOCTRINES IV(i)

---

HON. JOHN BRECKINRIDGE

OF KENTUCKY

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. BRECKINRIDGE. Mr. Speaker, current Soviet military doctrine, adopted by the party in the late 1950's, "requires that the Armed Forces, the country and the whole Soviet people be prepared for the eventuality of a nuclear-rocket war." This doctrinal decision required a new strategy, which was made known to the West in August 1962, through the publication of Marshal Sokolovskiy's Military Strategy. Further explanations of Soviet military doctrine and strategy have been presented since that time in hundreds of Soviet books, pamphlets, and articles. Subsequent events, such as the Cuban missile crisis, the Nuclear Test-Ban Treaty, and SALT negotiations have not altered their basic provisions. Development, production, and deployment of Soviet weapons systems have been in accordance with stated military objectives and principles.

Despite the clarity with which Soviet military doctrine and strategy have been stated, many Western analysts throughout the 1960's misinterpreted or ignored their basic thrust. While seeking to find internal dissension among the Soviet political-military leadership, Western analysts have failed, as a group, to inform the public about the fundamental tenets of military doctrine and strategy upon which Soviet military-political policies are based.

I should like to continue my ongoing Balance(s) of Power series by initiating herewith a Soviet Intentions and Doctrine book in addition to my book I previously printed, and books II and III now appearing regularly in the RECORD. My first selection is by Dr. William F. Scott, Colonel USAF retired, appearing in the Strategic Review, summer, 1975, and entitled, Soviet Military Doctrine and Strategy: Realities and Misunderstandings. The first part of Dr. Scott's article follows:

I. REALITIES

It has been said that the scholastics of earlier ages spent days in endless discussions considering, for example, how many teeth should be in a horse's mouth. Writings of Plato were examined for views that might shed light on this matter. The size and shape of a horse's head, as found in paintings of that time, were carefully studied. Finally, after centuries of scholarly analysis, the club rules were broken. Although reportedly later ostracized, one man finally dared to go into a stable and there opened the mouths of a number of horses and counted the teeth that each possessed. Thus the scientific age was introduced.

It is difficult, and often impossible, to obtain first-hand information on the Soviet Union. Of her 400 largest cities over 325 are closed to foreigners. Less than three per cent of the total Soviet land area can be visited by foreign tourists. However, in matters of military doctrine and strategy Soviet writings are remarkable revealing. The Party-military leadership apparently wants the entire nation to understand fully the reasons for the massive defense effort, and what is expected of each individual.

There is no excuse today for mere speculation among Western analysts about the basic content of Soviet military doctrine and strategy. We have readily available a vast amount of Soviet military and political-military writings. To ensure that military doctrine is not misunderstood, Soviet spokesmen are clear and concise. In this period of detente and negotiations, Soviet readers are reminded:

"Placed in a nutshell, the Soviet military doctrine, as Marshal R. Ya. Malinovskiy wrote, states that: the next war, if the imperialists manage to unleash it, will be a decisive armed conflict between two opposing social systems; according to the character of the weapons employed, it will inevitably be a thermonuclear war, a war in which nuclear weapons will be the principal means of delivering weapons on target. This war will be characterized by an armed struggle of unprecedented ferocity, dynamic, highly mobile combat operations, the absence of continuous stable front lines or distinction between front and rear, greater opportunities for dealing surprise strikes of great strength against both troops and the deep rear areas of the belligerent countries."

After quoting from this 1962 work by the late Soviet Minister of Defense, the Soviet authors of the SALT era go on to assert:

A future war will inevitably be intercontinental in scope and most destructive in character, resulting in the death of hundreds of millions of people, with whole countries being turned into lifeless deserts. But the struggle to victory cannot be restricted to nuclear strikes, hence the war may drag out and require the protracted straining of all the forces of the Army and the nation practically to the breaking point. Naturally, the ultimate victory can be achieved only as a result of the joint efforts of all the services and arms involving the participation of mass armies millions strong.

The Soviet military doctrine requires that the Armed Forces, the country, the whole Soviet people be prepared for the eventuality of a nuclear rocket war.

The statements above have been the bases of Soviet military doctrine and strategy, as well as the rationale for the development, production and deployments of Soviet weaponry for over a decade. These statements also give the rationale for much of Soviet industrial planning, as well as for the military indoctrination of the entire Soviet population.

It apparently is difficult for most Western analysts—and for most Western political and military leaders as well—to accept the possibility that the Soviet leadership is, in fact, "preparing the Armed Forces, the country and the whole Soviet people for the eventuality of a nuclear war." Such doctrinal statements may sound irrational by Western standards, and generally are dismissed as utterances of a few dissident elements within the Soviet military structure.

Hence, the military doctrine of the Soviet Union, first formulated in the early 1960s, and the strategy which stems from it, often have been misinterpreted or ignored in both the United States and Great Britain.

If we are to negotiate successfully with Soviet political-military representatives, we first must understand their military doctrine and strategy, regardless of how irrational it may appear. Only through this understanding can we appreciate the continued militarization of the Soviet Union, and the nature of its military forces.

A CONCEPT OF DOCTRINE

The first key to understanding Soviet military affairs is to recognize the significance of doctrine. "The nuclear age demands above all a clarification of doctrine." With reference to nuclear weapons, "only a doctrine which defines the purpose of these weapons and the kind of war in which they are to be employed permits a rational choice." Further, "strategic doctrine transcends the problem of selecting weapons systems. It is the mode of survival of a society."

We might reflect on the situation in which we in the United States find ourselves in 1975. "In the absence of a generally understood doctrine, we will of necessity act haphazardly, conflicting proposals will compete with each other without an effective basis for their resolution." We might consider our own military planning and attempts to negotiate in light of this statement: "The quest for numbers is a symptom of the abdication of doctrine."

The above views on the importance of doctrine were expressed by Dr. Henry Kissinger in 1957. His plea for the need of doctrine was never faced, or perhaps never understood, by the political and military leaders in the United States. However, within one year after his book, Nuclear Weapons and Foreign Policy, was published, his concepts were being quoted by Soviet theorists. By 1959 his book had been translated by Voyenizdat, the publishing house of the Soviet Ministry of Defense, and could be found in military bookstores from Leningrad to Khabarovsk. The Soviet political-military leadership grasped the significance of doctrine, so well expressed by the then-Harvard professor.

According to Soviet theoreticians, the basis of the new Soviet military doctrine was announced by the First Secretary of the Communist Party in his report to the Supreme Soviet on January 14, 1960. (This explanation is given even today, although Nikita Khrushchev, First Secretary at the time, subsequently became a non-person.) A more detailed explanation was given by Marshal Malinovskiy when addressing the XXII Party Congress the following year. In December 1962, within weeks of the Cuban Missile Crisis, a further explanation of the new doctrine was given in yet another work by the Minister of Defense, Vigilantly Stand Guard Over the Peace. Since that time Soviet military doctrine, with a few modifications, has remained generally unchanged.

A STRATEGY FOR THE NUCLEAR AGE

The new Soviet military doctrine was based on the assumption that a future world war "inevitably will take the form of a nuclear rocket war, that is, such a war where the main means of striking will be the nuclear weapon and the basic means of delivering it to the target will be the rocket." The doctrinal decision, made by the political leadership in 1959, demanded a new strategy. In the summer of 1962, as the Soviet leadership was preparing their Cuban missile adventure, the first edition of Marshal Sokolovskiy's famed Military Strategy appeared in bookstores throughout the Soviet Union.

A second edition of this work was published in 1963, little change in substance from the first edition. Five years later a third edition was issued. Again, even after the Brezhnev regime was firmly established, the content of this work essentially was the same as that of both earlier editions, which had appeared while Khrushchev was in power.

By 1967 the Soviets rapidly were approaching nuclear parity with the United States. Parity provided a nuclear umbrella under which their own conventional forces might be employed, if desired, providing additional options. However, the Soviet leadership was careful to assert that these new possibilities for the use of non-nuclear forces did not lessen the significance of the nuclear weapon. In 1968 Lt. Colonel V. M. Bondarenko, Candidate of Philosophical Sciences, was tasked to explain this modification to Soviet military doctrine:

"In our times conditions may arise when in individual instances combat operations may be carried out using conventional weapons. Under these conditions, the role of conventional means and the traditional services of the armed forces are greatly increased. It becomes necessary to train troops for various kinds of warfare. This circumstance is sometimes interpreted as a negation of the contemporary revolution in military affairs, as its conclusion.

"One cannot agree with this opinion. The point is that the new possibilities of waging armed struggle have arisen not in spite of, but because of the nuclear missile weapons. They do not diminish their combat effectiveness, and the main thing, they do not preclude the possible use of such weapons. All of this forces the conclusion that the present situation is one of the moments in the revolution in miliary affairs. It flows out of this revolution, continuing it, instead of contradicting it.

"On the basis of this, we are able to define the contemporary revolution in military affairs, as a radical upheaval of its development, which is characterized by new capabilities of attaining political goals in war, resulting from the availability of nuclear missile weapons to the troops."

The continuity of Soviet military strategy can be seen in a book published in mid-1973, Scientific-Technical Progress and the Revolution in Military Affairs. Statements in this book can be traced directly to the 1962 writings of Marshal Malinovskiy and to all three editions of Military Strategy. According to the authors of this post-SALT I work:

"The basic positions (principles) of strategy are based on the conclusions of Soviet military doctrine and at the same time they elaborate and make these conclusions concrete, giving them the character of theoretical and practical rules of solving different tasks of preparation for and waging the armed struggle.

"Soviet military strategy examines and researches world war in contemporary conditions, if the imperialists unleash it, as a decisive clash of two opposed world social-economic systems, in which both belligerent sides will pursue decisive political goals. Such a war might be nuclear with the use by the belligerent sides of all the might of the nuclear rocket weapons in their possession. At the same time, in such a war conventional armaments as well might find use. Under certain circumstances, units and subunits will conduct the struggle with only conventional means. War may be unleashed by different methods, including the surprise use of nuclear weapons or conventional means of destruction."

THE REVOLUTION IN MILITARY AFFAIRS

In the early 1960s an expression became popular in the Soviet military lexicon, which continues to his day—"the revolution in military affairs." Such a revolution, according to Soviet political-military spokesmen, was caused by the introduction of nuclear weapons into the Soviet Armed Forces. Throughout the 1960s and into the 1970s, hundreds of books, articles, pamphlets and speeches refer to this revolution. As a consequence of its occurrence, military power has taken a new meaning:

"Today, the military might of a country is determined by the nuclear rocket weapon, the combat qualities of its nuclear charges and strategic rockets, the level of development of its nuclear and rocket industry, the power of its strategic rocket troops, and the nuclear rocket weapons of all other services of the armed forces."

Soviet theorists assert that the revolution in military affairs took place between 1953 and 1960, although certain phases still continue. The expression was popularized about 1962, after the basic tenets of military doctrine and strategy had been expressed. "Revolution" has a much deeper significance in the Soviet Union than in the United States. The revolution in military affairs was to dramatize and to draw attention to the new military changes, both in military thought and in the restructuring of the Soviet Armed Forces.

In the winter of 1965, within months after Brezhnev came to power, a most significant book, Problems of the Revolution in Military Affairs, was published by the Ministry of Defense. This work had gone to print only two weeks after the ouster of Khrushchev. Its contents consisted of articles that had appeared in newspapers and journals over the two preceding years. The only editing of the articles was to drop all references to the deposed First Secretary. This was one of the first clear indications that the revolution in military affairs, with the resulting new doctrine and strategy, was to continue.

Since the signing of the SALT I agreement in 1972, analysts throughout the Western world have watched carefully to see what changes would take place in Soviet military thought. The publication of Scientific-Technical Progress and the Revolution in Military Affairs in mid-1973, as already noted, strongly suggests that thus far there have been no more changes in Soviet military doctrine and strategy in the aftermath of SALT I than there were after the overthrow of Khrushchev in 1964.

THE TUITION TAX CREDIT ACT OF 1978

HON. MARC L. MARKS

OF PENNSYLVANIA

IN THE HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES

Friday, July 21, 1978

● Mr. MARKS. Mr. Speaker, few issues in the 95th Congress have been more hotly debated than the decision of whether to provide tuition tax credits to offset rising education expenses. As with any highly emotional issue, there were many claims and counterclaims, some valid and some not so valid. I would like to take this opportunity to ferret out the facts in this debate, and explain my reasons for voting for H.R. 12050, the Tuition Tax Credit Act of 1978, as it passed the House of Representatives on June 1.

I. IMPACT ON PUBLIC SCHOOLS

The debate largely centered around one issue: Whether passage of tuition tax credits for elementary and secondary schools (which would primarily benefit families with students in private schools) would have adverse effects on the public school system. This was the crucial issue for me, since I myself as well as my children had attended public schools in Pennsylvania and I had enjoyed many years of close association with teachers in the Pennsylvania public school system and with the Pennsylvania State Education Association. Therefore, I had no intention whatsoever of taking any action on this issue which I thought might prove to be harmful to the public school system.

There were a number of reasons I came to the conclusion that H.R. 12050, as passed by the House, would have little if any adverse impact on public schools. First, while total enrollments for all institutions of education have declined following the baby boom after World War II, public education's share of the total pie has actually increased. and private education's share has decreased. To be specific, in 1966, 87 percent of all elementary and secondary school students in the United States attended public schools. Ten years later, 90 percent of all students were enrolled in public schools. During the past decade, the total number of nonpublic schools has fallen from 19,946 to 17,950, representing a loss of 10 percent or nearly 2,000 schools. Looking to the future, the U.S. National Center for Education Statistics predicts a drop of enrollment at nonpublic elementary and secondary schools from 6.3 million in 1965 to 4.2 million in 1984. Proponents of a tax credit were not arguing that enrollment in private schools would increase, but rather that the decline in private enrollment might simply be arrested.

My second reason for concluding that a tuition tax credit bill would not harm public schools was the evidence that support for public schools is strongest in the States and communities where private education is strongest. For example, in the five States where the largest percentage of students were enrolled in private schools, public school expenditures per pupil average $300 more than in the five States where private schools account for the smallest fraction of total enrollments. In addition. one argument advanced for tuition tax credits was that some relief would be provided for parents now twice billed (paying property taxes for public schools, and tuition costs for private schools), thus perhaps sweetening the mood of local taxpayers, which in many places is very bitter.

Third, the amount of credits contained in the House-passed tuition tax credit bill were insufficient to encourage parents to place their children in private schools if they had not already done so. H.R. 12050 permitted a maximum credit in 1978 of only $50 for tuition paid at elementary and secondary schools, and a maximum of $100 for these schools in 1979 and thereafter. Also, the House voted to permit a credit of only 25 percent of the total tuition costs, which meant that many persons would not be able to claim the full $50 or $100. An amendment to increase the 25-percent limit to 50 percent was rejected by a vote of 142 to 261; I was among those who voted against increasing the amount of the tuition that could be taken as a credit against income taxes.

If we use as an example a private school which charges $800 each year in tuition and we apply the maximum limits set in the House-passed bill, we quickly see that the costs remaining after use of the tax credit are probably still prohibitive to persons considering private schools, if costs were a factor before. The maximum credit that could be claimed under the House bill for an $800 tuition is only $50 in 1978 and $100 in 1979, leaving a balance of at least $700 to be paid directly out of pocket by the student or the student's family. And with the 25-percent limit, a $200 tuition expense would be reduced by only $50 in all years, still leaving $150 in tuition to be paid and still a prohibitive expense to any applicant unable to afford $200 in tuition. Again, the provisions of the House-passed bill would be extremely unlikely to influence families to send their children to private schools unless they had already decided to do so in spite of financial reasons.

Fourth, the House bill would not encourage "white flight" into racially segregated schools since the credits could only be used to offset tuition paid to private schools which meet Government requirements that the institutions do not discriminate on the basis of race. In addition, the proportion of minority students attending nonpublic schools is increasing significantly. A survey of Catholic schools in 10 metropolitan areas in the 1975–76 school year showed that out of nearly a quarter million students, 26 percent were black, 17½ percent were Spanish-surnamed, and 2½ percent were other minorities.

Fifth, tuition tax credits would not result in more Federal aid going to private schools than to public schools. A figure frequently cited during congressional debate on this issue was that the Federal Government contributed approximately $128 per pupil in public schools. The fear was that tuition tax credit legislation would result in much higher expenditures by the Federal Government per private school pupil. However, as passed by the House, H.R. 12050 at best brought the level of "Federal assistance" per private school pupil to $100, and even this overlooks the fact that in 1978 the Federal Government is estimated to forgo $4.6 billion in revenues for public education because property taxes are deducted from Federal income taxes. Thus, all State and local support for education derived from local property taxes—not counted in that $128 figure of direct Federal assistance—is, in fact, deducted from overall Federal revenues and is then indirect assistance from the U.S. Government, which is given to only public schools.

While H.R. 12050 as passed by the House would represent a loss of approximately $1 billion in revenues to the Government, the Joint Committee on Taxation estimated that if the 7.7 million students now enrolled in private elementary, secondary, or higher education institutions were enrolled in tax-supported schools instead, the education bill to the taxpayer would be an additional $17 billion every year. In Erie, Mercer, and Crawford Counties, the additional burden would be approximately $27 million, or roughly the entire operating budget of the city of Erie school district.

Sixth, the argument was also suggested that the existence of tuition tax credits would drain students from public schools with the development of "fly-by-night" schools which would open to capture the benefits of the tax credit. As indicated before, the amount of the credit in H.R. 12050 is hardly sufficient to encourage a single student to leave the public school system. More importantly, however, for a student to be eligible for a tax credit, the student must be attending a bona fide nonprofit institution approved by the Internal Revenue Service, and which must be accredited or approved under the laws of the State in which the school is located.

It was for these reasons, then, that I felt the tuition tax credit, as contained in the House-passed bill, would not damage our system of public schools. I also felt that our Nation's system of public schools is strong and viable, and a system in which we can take great pride.

Although I considered most important the argument of impact on public schools, there were other arguments raised against the tuition tax credit bill. I would like to address those arguments at this point.

II. ADMINISTRATIVE BURDEN

One of these arguments was that a system of tuition tax credits would result in a substantial administrative burden. The fact is that such a credit would create no more of a burden to the IRS that a tax credit such as another one also now being considered by Congress for persons who insulate their homes against rising energy costs. And, in comparison, the administrative burden is far less for tax credits than for the two other education aid programs also suggested, which were the administration's Middle-Income Student Assistance Act and Representative MIKVA's tax deferral plan. According to the Congressional Budget Office, an expansion of the current grant program (the Middle-Income Student Assistance Act) "would involve a greater administrative burden" than tuition tax credits, which require only a one-line entry on tax returns. Also, unlike grant programs, tuition tax credits do not invade personal privacy, as they do not require an individual to reveal his or her personal finances to a bureaucrat. The tax deferral plan would also mandate greatly increased complexity, since massive forms would be needed to keep track of amounts owed the Treasury by each family over a period of several years, and the IRS could encounter the same default difficulties now being experienced under student loan programs. Also, the tax deferral plan fails to provide any permanent relief to the taxpayer, since the money is simply a loan and must be repaid.

III. INCREASES IN TUITIONS

Another fear expressed about a program of tuition tax credits was that of schools attempting to "capture" the benefits of the credit by raising their tuition rates by amounts equal to those permitted in the legislation. Schools are hardly likely to do this, however, if they do, in fact, hope to attract new students and avoid the risk of losing current students. In addition, competition among schools is keen and schools which did raise their tuitions would lose students to those which did not. In a period when total enrollments may continue to decline, this competition will be even keener and the effects of a tuition increase that much more acute.

IV. AID TO THOSE IN NEED

Another question asked about tuition tax credits was whether this approach was an effective way to target education funds to those in need of assistance. I had cosponsored legislation early in the 95th Congress which permitted tax credits for higher education tuition costs, but which also gradually reduced benefits for families which had incomes exceeding $25,000. H.R. 12050 contained no similar ceiling on incomes, so I had hoped to offer an amendment during House debate to impose such a limit. Unfortunately, the rule governing House floor consideration of this legislation permitted only three amendments to be offered to the bill, none of which was a proposal to impose a ceiling on income. For this reason, I voted against the rule on H.R. 12050.

Yet, even with this flaw in the bill, the Joint Committee on Taxation estimated that 85 percent of the total benefits of this bill will accrue to families with adjusted gross incomes below $30,000. According to the U.S. Census Bureau, only 4 percent of all benefits would go to elementary, secondary, and postsecondary students whose families have incomes over $50,000.

Finally, one of my reasons for voting for final passage of H.R. 12050 was that this bill may represent the only tax cut legislation the 95th Congress enacts, since the President's personal income tax reduction proposals have floundered, and Republican efforts to reduce income taxes by one-third (the Kemp-Roth bill, which I cosponsored) have been repeatedly defeated by the Democratic majority in Congress. As the Erie Morning News, one 24th District newspaper, observed in January of this year:

> President Carter's tax cut program, with its slight to the middle class, makes passage of a tuition tax measure even more important.

V. EFFECTS ON OTHER AID PROGRAMS

Another concern over enactment of tuition tax credits was whether cutbacks might be made in grant programs for college students, since the tax credits would be available for all students. This possibility arose, in fact, when the House on June 8 considered the Labor-HEW appropriations bill for fiscal year 1979, which contains funding for education programs. An amendment was offered to reduce the student grant program by $233 million, the amount estimated to implement the Middle-Income Student Assistance Act, and that amendment was defeated on a voice vote. Thus, the House of Representatives has indicated its desire to see a strongly supported program of education assistance. In light of past support in the Congress for these grant programs, frequently over Presidential objections, I fully expect this support to continue.

VI. NEED FOR LEGISLATION

Of course, too, the question arose of whether there was any need at all for any program of assistance, since conflicting data appeared comparing increases in income over a period of years and increases in tuition costs over those same years. While some charts did indicate that before tax incomes had kept pace with rising tuition costs at institutions of higher education, additional data revealed that after tax incomes had fallen behind tuition increases. Between 1970 and 1977, the average cost of attending a public college rose 57 percent, and the cost of attending a private college had climbed 54 percent. But during this same period, the median income of families with college-age dependents increased just 46 percent. This data is particularly relevant for our own State of Pennsylvania since, as another 24th District newspaper, the Titusville Herald, noted on October 5, 1977:

> Tuition at Penn State ($1,263), Pitt ($1,310), Temple ($1,450), and Lincoln ($1,168) already is the highest among all public colleges and universities in the nation. Further tuition increases will price the cost of an education beyond the reach of the average Pennsylvania family.

VII. CONSTITUTIONALITY

Finally, the question of constitutionality was raised. Since the Supreme Court has never ruled on a Federal program of tuition tax credits, and since previous State programs differed significantly in several respects from H.R. 12050, no precedent has been set for this bill. Since the benefits will go to families and not the schools, the bill may very well be constitutional, as many eminent constitutional experts believe. Until a Federal tuition tax credit program is enacted by Congress, the Supreme Court will have no opportunity to review its merits.

VIII. CONCLUSIONS

There were several reasons, most commented on earlier in my remarks, that the House of Representatives chose to consider the tuition tax credit bill during this year. It has become increasingly clear, first, that incomes of families who wish to send their children to college are rising above the maximum qualifications for Federal financial aid programs so that more and more middle-income families cannot obtain this assistance. At the same time, however, tuitions are increasing faster than incomes. Thus, middle-income families are caught in a financial squeeze and find it increasingly difficult to obtain a quality education for their children.

Second, the Nation's taxpayers are sending the message loud and clear to their elected representatives that they demand tax relief. One method of providing such relief is the tuition tax credit legislation. The demand for tax relief is entirely legitimate, and the Congress is responding to that need.

Third, with the steady decline in enrollment in private schools, some action is needed to retard that decline and thus maintain a strong and healthy dual education system. Our dual education system has been a part of this Nation since its birth, contributing in countless ways to our society as well as saving on tax dollars going for public education. We should not aid one system over another, but we must make certain that both survive.

Finally, our Nation was also founded on the principle of freedom of choice, and the belief that a good education is the best possible legacy we can leave our children. We have long believed that the way to break the cycle of poverty and rise to a better life is through education. We have recognized that the way to improved employment is through a good education. To give our children the best education possible, we consider all available alternatives. Most parents choose the public school system, and public schools do provide excellent educational opportunities. Some parents prefer to send their children to private schools, feeling that a particular private school would better meet their needs. The House of Representatives, in approving the tuition tax credit bill, wished to help assure the freedom to choose the school which best provides the educational needs of all children.

For the first time ever, the House of Representatives voted on legislation providing tuition tax credits for education expenses. Much controversy surrounded the issue, and the debate is not over yet. Knowing the importance of this legislation, I examined it in great detail, analyzing the arguments and finally voting as I determined would best benefit the varied educational needs of the 24th District of Pennsylvania and the rest of the Nation.●

HOUSE OF REPRESENTATIVES—Monday, July 24, 1978

The House met at 12 o'clock noon.

The Chaplain, Rev. Edward G. Latch, D.D., offered the following prayer:

The Lord is near to all who call upon Him, to all who call upon Him in truth.—Psalms 145: 18.

O God, our Father, as we draw near to Thee in prayer do Thou come near to us and stay with us all through the activities of this day. With Thee we can make our decisions wisely; with Thee we can do our work worthily; with Thee we can plan our day wonderfully. So we place our hands in Thine to be led by Thee through the coming hours.

We pray for the people in our districts whom we endeavor to serve faithfully and fully. Make us sensitive to their needs, careful to evaluate their requests, and ready to do all we can to help them.

We pray for our Nation that we may help to so strengthen her foundations that our greatness may be in character, our security in spirit, and our life together in good will.

We pray for all nations that the spirit of fraternity may begin to bind us together and make this planet a fairer place for all to live together in peace.

In Thy holy name we pray. Amen.

THE JOURNAL

The SPEAKER. The Chair has examined the Journal of the last day's proceedings and announces to the House his approval thereof.

Without objection, the Journal stands approved.

There was no objection.

MESSAGE FROM THE SENATE

A message from the Senate, by Mr. Sparrow, one of its clerks, announced that the Senate had passed without amendment a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 1420. An act for the relief of Umberto Ruffolo.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendments of the House to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 785. An act to declare that all right, title, and interest of the United States in two thousand seven hundred acres, more or less, are hereby held in trust for the Paiute and Shoshone Tribes of the Fallon Indian Reservation and Colony, Fallon, Nev., to promote the economic self-sufficiency of the Paiute and Shoshone Tribes, and for other purposes.

The message also announced that the Senate agrees to the amendment of the House with an amendment to a bill of the Senate of the following title:

S. 920. An act relating to the disposition of certain recreational demonstration project lands by the State of Oklahoma.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed with an amendment in which the concurrence of the House is requested, a bill of the House of the following title:

H.R. 8449. An act for the relief of Lourdes Marie Hudson.

The message also announced that the Senate had passed bills of the following titles, in which the concurrence of the House is requested:

S. 85. An act for the relief of Raul Arriaza, his wife, Maria Marquart Schubert Arriaza, and their children, Andres Arriaza and Daniel Aivouich Arriaza;

S. 140. An act for the relief of Dr. Kok Liong Tan, and his wife, Gloria Siao Tan;

S. 340. An act for the relief of Dr. Belinda A. Aquino;

S. 613. An act for the relief of Kwok Hung Poon and his wife, Sandra Shau Man Lai Poon;

S. 1564. An act for the relief of Tomiko Fukuda Eure;

S. 2061. An act for the relief of Dr. Angelito Dela Cruz;

S. 2067. An act for the relief of Cesar B. Ibañez II, doctor of medicine;

S. 2209. An act for the relief of Munnie Surface;

S. 2243. An act for the relief of Rohini;

S. 2326. An act for the relief of Anupama Alis Chandrakala;

S. 2377. An act for the relief of Muradali P. Gillani;

S. 2509. An act for the relief of Rodolfo N. Arriola; and

S. 2639. An act for the relief of Mrs. Kerry Ann Wilson and Jason John Barba.

CYPRUS AND THE SENATE

(Mr. BRADEMAS asked and was given permission to address the House for 1 minute, to revise and extend his remarks, and to include extraneous material.)

Mr. BRADEMAS. Mr. Speaker, I take this time only to call to the attention of the Members of the House an excellent editorial appearing in the New York Times of Saturday last, July 22, 1978, entitled, "Cyprus and the Senate." The New York Times editorial argues very forcefully, and I think correctly, that it would be most unwise, for several reasons, for the Senate to vote to repeal the limitations on arms sales to Turkey.

Mr. Speaker, I insert the editorial at this point in the RECORD:

CYPRUS AND THE SENATE

The Senate is about to vote on whether to continue the limitations on arms sales to Turkey. They were imposed after Ankara used American-supplied weapons to occupy two-fifths of Cyprus in 1974, in violation of a Congressional prohibition. We have argued in the past that the limits should be kept until Turkey indicates it will withdraw its forces. We still think so.

Few controversies are as vexing as the feud between the half million Greek Cypriots and the 120,000 Turkish Cypriots over how they will coexist on their island. Their centuries-old quarrel has reached into American politics. The Turks and Turkish Cypriots and their American sympathizers contend that national pride forbids concessions on Cyprus so long as the "embargo" stands. Directly, they predict that maintaining last year's $175-million limit on arms sales will drive Turkey out of NATO, perhaps even into Moscow's arms. But it would be no gain for the West to purchase Turkish good will at the price of Greek resentment.

When Jimmy Carter was a candidate for President he held that the restriction on arms sales should stand until Ankara withdrew the force that enables Turkish Cypriots, with 20 percent of the island's population, to occupy roughly 40 percent of its territory. This spring, however, he urged that the embargo be lifted. Administration spokesmen maintain that once it is lifted, Ankara will make generous diplomatic proposals. But the Government of Prime Minister Bulent Ecevit has so far given no sign that it is prepared to risk the domestic consequences of offering the concessions needed to reach an accommodation. The vague proposal put forward by the Turkish Cypriots on Thursday for resettling some Greek refugees is welcome but scarcely sufficient. The Turkish concessions need to be territorial.

Where Greek Cypriots go wrong is in insisting that their preponderance in numbers also entitles them to the kind of predominance they enjoyed under the island's 1960 constitution. If the Turkish Cypriots would yield significantly on territory, they could more credibly insist on a constitution that provides for virtually autonomous states for the two communities, linking them only for a minimum of such "federal" functions as conducting foreign affairs and issuing currency.

Greek Cypriots denounce this idea as a mere division of the island. Even if this were true, there would be no alternative; nothing except good will can force the two communities to work together. Because ending Turkey's occupation remains an essential first step toward creating an atmosphere of trust, Congress should not yet relax the restrictions on arms sales. It should make clear to the Greek Cypriots, however, that the United States intends to help them reclaim their farms and villages but not to restore their domination of the Turkish population.

CALL OF THE HOUSE

Mr. SLACK. Mr. Speaker, I move a call of the House.

A call of the House was ordered.

The call was taken by electronic device, and the following Members failed to respond:

The SPEAKER pro tempore (Mr. SIMON). On this rollcall 252 Members have recorded their presence by electronic device, a quorum.

By unanimous consent, further proceedings under the call were dispensed with.

ANNOUNCEMENT BY THE SPEAKER PRO TEMPORE

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Pursuant to the provisions of clause 3(b) of rule XXVII, the Chair announces that he will postpone further proceedings today on each motion to suspend the rules on which a recorded vote or the yeas and nays are ordered, or on which the vote is objected to under clause 4 of rule XV.

After all motions to suspend the rules have been entertained and debated and after those motions to be determined by "nonrecord" votes have been disposed of, the Chair will then put the question on each motion on which the further proceedings were postponed.

NATIONAL LUPUS WEEK

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 682) to provide for the designation of a week as "National Lupus Week," as amended.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.J. RES. 682

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is hereby authorized and requested to issue a proclamation designating the week of September 17 through 23, 1978, as "National Lupus Week" and inviting the Governors of the several States, the chief officials of local governments, and the people of the United States to observe such week with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Iowa (Mr. LEACH) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN).

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 682 was introduced by the gentleman from California (Mr. ANDERSON) and provides for the observance of "National Lupus Week" during the week of September 17–23, 1978. Lupus erythematosus, a variety of lupus disease, is a chronic and occasionally fatal disease of the connective tissues between vital organs. Public attention should be called to this disease, which afflicts 500,000 Americans, so that medical research can be encouraged for proper diagnosis and treatment.

Mr. Speaker, this resolution has received 230 cosponsors.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this resolution, and I reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. LEACH. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, the minority is strongly in favor of this bill, and we urge its passage with as strong as possible support.

Mr. Speaker, I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 682) as amended.

The question was taken; and (two-thirds having voted in favor thereof) the rules were suspended and the joint resolution, as amended, was passed.

A motion to reconsider was laid on the table.

NATIONAL GUARD DAY

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I move to suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 946) to designate October 7, 1978, as National Guard Day.

The Clerk read as follows:

H.J. RES. 946

Whereas several units of the militia of the Massachusetts Bay Colony were organized on October 7, 1636, as the First Militia Regiment and became the forerunner of the National Guard of the United States;

Whereas the National Guard has served with distinction, during the three hundred and forty-two years since 1636, in every major military conflict involving the United States, from the Revolutionary War through the Vietnam conflict;

Whereas the National Guard currently consists of nearly four hundred and fifty thousand volunteer soldiers and airmen, organized into nearly four thousand military units located in the several states, the District of Columbia, the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico, and the Virgin Islands, and forms the Reserve Military Force that supports the Regular Army and Air Force; and

Whereas the people of the United States owe a debt of gratitude to those citizen soldiers and airmen who are members of the National Guard for their continuing contribution to the security of the United States: Now, therefore, be it

Resolved by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That the President is authorized and requested to issue a proclamation declaring October 7, 1978, as "National Guard Day", and calling upon the people of the United States and interested groups and organizations to observe such day with appropriate ceremonies and activities.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is a second demanded?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I demand a second.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Without objection, a second will be considered as ordered.

There was no objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN) will be recognized for 20 minutes, and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) will be recognized for 20 minutes.

The Chair recognizes the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN).

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, House Joint Resolution 946 was introduced by Congressman CLARENCE BROWN of Ohio and provides for the observance of "National Guard Day" on October 7, 1978 The National Guard has served in every major military conflict involving the United States during its 342 years. This resolution brings to the attention of the American people the contributions of the National Guard to the security of the United States.

This resolution has obtained 231 cosponsors.

Mr. Speaker, I urge adoption of this resolution and reserve the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, today Members of this body have the opportunity to recognize an organization for its consistently outstanding contributions to national defense and the welfare of the citizens of the Nation, past and present and for the future as well. The organization to which I refer is the National Guard.

Oldest by far of the components of the U.S. defense team, the National Guard, as we know it today, is an outgrowth of early America's reliance on its civilian-soldiers. This is a tradition that traces its way through American history in an unbroken thread.

The modern-day soldier or airman of the National Guard carries with him or her the heritage of those who triumphed over the wilderness, hostile Indians, and foreign armies. They are the true lineal descendants of the minuteman, joining as Adam Smith wrote in 1776, "the avocation of a soldier to whatever ordinary vocation or trade he happens to carry on."

No one has put this principle into better words than George Washington. The first President declared that, "Every citizen who enjoys the protection of a free government owes not only a portion of his property, but even of his personal services, to the defense of it."

The National Guard was not, by a stroke of the pen, legislated into existence. It came about as a result of the process of evolution. That evolutionary process had its origin with the first colonists of the North American continent. The National Guard originated on October 7, 1636, when the general court of the Massachusetts Bay Colony ordered the formation of the North Regiment and soon thereafter, the East Regiment of the Massachusetts Colonial Militia. The 1st Regiment of Middlesex is now the 1st Battalion, 182nd Infantry, and the Militia Regiment of Essex County is now the 101st Engineer Battalion, Massachusetts Army National Guard.

So important was this concept of citizen soldiers, that the Founding Fathers of this country made provisions for it in article I, section 8, clause 16 of the Constitution, commonly known as the militia clause. In doing so, it gave the Congress the power to provide for organizing, arming, and training the Militia according to the discipline prescribed by Congress.

The name National Guard came about as a result of a visit to the United States by the Marquis de Lafayette in 1824. The honor guard during his visit to New York was furnished by the 2d Battalion, 11th Regiment of New York Artillery. In tribute to Lafayette's command of the Garde Nationale of the Army of France, in Paris, during 1789, the New York battalion became the "Battalion of National Guards."

It was not long before other militia units adopted the name National Guard. By the turn of the century all but a handful of States had redesignated their militia as National Guard.

A distinguishing feature of the National Guard is its dual status as both a Federal and a State military force.

This dual Federal-State role enables a single body of men and women, with a single outlay of money for training, equipment, facilities and administration, to fulfill two vital tasks—one of national defense as part of the total force of the Nation and one of assistance during State emergencies.

The use of military forces of the United States for public protection is a requirement which stands apart from combat employment. Public protection is a peacetime military requirement which occurs with great frequency, usually without warning, throughout the United States.

The military public protection function is primarily performed by the National Guard, both Army and Air, of the several States. Only when this role requires actions and resources that exceed the capability of the State's National Guard does the Governor of a State call on the Active Forces and other Reserve component forces for assistance. If there were no Guard forces available to perform the function, Active forces would have to accept the mission.

Public protection roles are diverse. They include such things as civil disturbances which may require commitment of the entire National Guard of a State. They also include emergency medical evacuation which may require only one helicopter and its three-man crew. Mobilization figures do not always tell the full story of Guard involvement in protecting citizens. During extended operations, Guard personnel are often rotated, so that a 1,000-man callup can often affect two and three times that number of guardsmen, depending on personnel turnover.

In 1977 there were more Guard callups than ever before in history. In that year, guardsmen were mobilized by their States on 231 separate occasions. The biggest single mobilization was Wisconsin's call for 3,652 guardsmen to provide essential State services during a 19-day State employee strike in July 1977. Service during and after flood, tornado, and hurricane disasters is commonplace. In 1977, California alone called guardsmen for forest fire service eight times. In 1977 guardsmen responded to 27 separate snow and cold weather emergencies in 22 States. Twenty-seven mobilizations and flood emergencies were recorded in that same year, with the largest requiring use of 2,421 guardsmen over a 19-day period in Johnstown, Pa. Guardsmen were on duty during a power outage in New York City. They served during a chemical spill clean-up in Tennessee and during danger periods following train derailments in Nebraska and Louisiana. Most recently, in early July 1978, Tennessee National Guardsmen were mobilized during the Memphis firemen's strike.

During that operation 885 guardsmen were mobilized and deployed, while an additional 3,100 guardsmen were on standby alert in case of need.

The dispersal of Guard units in both urban and rural areas throughout each State contributes to the rapid reaction capability of the Guard in all types of State emergencies. The variety of units found in the organizational structure of each State makes it possible for Governors and State Guard commanders to selectively mobilize the units best fitted to the task requirement, that is, infantry units for civil disturbance operations, engineer units for tornado recovery and restoration work.

In its Federal role, the National Guard is the backbone of the total force. Fifty-four percent of Army total force deployable forces are provided by the Reserves with the Army National Guard providing the bulk of the combat forces.

Fifty-two percent of all the artillery of the Total Force Army units is furnished by the Guard. Let me cite another example of the heavy Guard combat role. The Guard has 51 armored cavalry squadrons and tank battalions, while the Active Army has 48. I think this indicates the reliance placed on the Guard in the total force.

The Air National Guard provides over 60 percent of the air defense interceptors of the Active Air Force and nearly 50 percent of the tactical airlift aircraft. These units are closely tied to the Active Air Force and are gone within a few hours of notification to deploy.

The same high standards of readiness required for our active forces are required of Guard units, with one big difference: Training time. Full-time forces train full time. The Guard attempts to produce a level of readiness that approaches or exceeds that of full-time forces, yet must do this in a scant 16 to 20 hours per month, plus 15 days of full-time field training each year.

Obviously, you cannot cram the same amount of training into 20 hours for part-time fighting men that full timers can produce in a full working month. The Guard commanders have a real problem—how much time and effort can they reasonably expect a part-time guardsman to exert when he or she, like any civilian, is attempting to make a living, carry on a normal life and pursue other civilian activities? Out of dedication to get the job done right, Guard leaders devote far more of their time to their unit than they are being paid for.

Since 1636, members of the Guard have maintained their military skills along with maintaining a home, family, and livelihood. This has not been without cost to the individual: Cost in terms of depriving the family of a husband and father for countless hours while he is training to protect the Nation. In many cases, military training has required more time than they can afford from their civilian job.

Therefore, when we think of honoring members of the National Guard by proclaiming October 7, 1978, as National Guard Day, we must not overlook the wives, husbands, family and employers who have supported those hours dedicated to national defense. They too, deserve to be included in the honor we seek to accord the National Guard, for without their sacrifices, understanding and encouragement, the National Guard we depend on today could not be possible.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Texas (Mr. PICKLE).

Mr. PICKLE. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of this resolution to recognize October 7 as "National Guard Day." I am particularly proud of the 20,000 members of the National Guard Association of Texas. They have always been ready to defend our country when called and have a distinguished record in war and in peace. These National Guard members who train regularly each week so that they will always be ready to serve deserve this recognition.

The State of Texas is particularly fortunate to have unusual leadership in Gen. Thomas Bishop and his staff. These officers, and men make a distinct contribution to our Nation's defense and welfare.

As we observe National Guard Day, I am glad to pay my special respect to our own Guardsmen in Texas.

Mr. Speaker, I yield to the gentleman from Mississippi (Mr. MONTGOMERY).

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Mr. Speaker, I sincerely appreciate the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN) and the Post Office and Civil Service Committee for the reporting out of House Joint Resolution 946 and giving Members an opportunity to express their gratitude to our citizen-soldiers by declaring October 7 as "National Guard Day." I would also like to commend the gentleman from Ohio (CLARENCE BROWN) for initiating this resolution. I was pleased to be able to join with him in securing the necessary number of cosponsors.

When we think about our Nation and its various institutions and organizations, we usually date everything from 1776 or later. However, there is one American institution which is older than the United States itself—the National Guard. The Guard has played an important role in our Nation's history and defense ever since the first corps of volunteer militiamen was formed in the Massachusetts Bay Colony in 1636.

This coming October 7 the National Guard will be 342 years old. Designating October 7 as "National Guard Day" would be a fitting way of bringing to the attention of the American people the many contributions of this fine organization.

Mr. Speaker, as everyone is aware, I have long been a strong supporter of the National Guard and have worked for actions aimed toward improving its readiness and its potential as a back-up force. Under the all volunteer concept, the National Guard must be prepared more than ever to meet our Nation's defense needs. However, the reverse seems to be true and positive reinforcement is needed to stimulate interest in the Guard and its activities. This resolution can provide that reinforcement and interest and would help to attract men and women into the National Guard.

It is only fitting that we should be recognizing the National Guard for its dual role as a vital component of our Armed Forces and its responsibilities on the State level during times of natural disasters and domestic strife.

Mr. Speaker, I have said it many times in the past, but it bears repeating—the National Guard is the best buy the American people receive for their defense dollar. I urge my colleagues to give their overwhelming support to this resolution declaring October 7 as National Guard Day.

I then add the further comments.

I would add only that one of the reasons such a resolution is needed is that the National Guard and Reserve are having problems in their strength levels in recruiting young men and women to come into the National Guard and Reserves. I would hope that this resolution would give us some opportunity to attract these young people to look at the Guard and Reserves.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. MONTGOMERY. I yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN).

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I want to say to the gentleman from Mississippi, I appreciate his support and his leadership on that side of the aisle in helping to obtain the cosponsors of this legislation. More than half the Members of the House are in support of this resolution.

It would be my hope that on October 7, when open houses are held in the various Guard units around the country, Members of Congress would have an opportunity to express in their own congressional districts, as they so clearly express in this resolution today, their support of the National Guard and their encouragement to others to support the Guard, as they have done here.

Mr. MONTGOMERY. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his remarks. I would also like to add that really, under the voluntary arrangement that we now have that we really do not have much choice and that these young people have got to come in and volunteer for either the regular armed services or the Reserves or the National Guard and if they do not do so, then there is no question but that we will have to go back to the Selective Service System or we will have no military forces whatsoever.

I might add further, Mr. Speaker, that I think the National Guard is certainly a good buy for the taxpayers of America in that to have one of these units in training the cost is half as much as that required to keep a regular unit trained for the same mission.

Further, Mr. Speaker, there is not a month or a week that passes but that somewhere in this country the National Guard is called out such as in the case of a natural disaster, or because of some problem that public officials are having in their communities.

So, Mr. Speaker, I believe the resolution before us is very timely. Again I commend the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. BROWN) and also the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service for giving us this opportunity to discuss this resolution before the House of Representatives.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from North Carolina (Mr. FOUNTAIN).

Mr. FOUNTAIN. Mr. Speaker, I rise in support of House Joint Resolution 946, a joint resolution authorizing and requesting the President to declare October 7, 1978, as "National Guard Day."

On June 16, 1978, I introduced House Joint Resolution 1004, an identical joint resolution.

Mr. Speaker, I want to associate myself with the remarks today of others who have spoken in favor of this legislation. Since 1636, the National Guard—the militia—has been an indispensable part of America's military capability. Today, units of the National Guard are regularly called upon to serve the citizens in each State during times of emergency. And they always respond to the challenge, probably in more ways, at more times, and more places than any similar institution we have.

I know of no other organization which has done so much, for so many people, with so little recognition. Anytime a crisis or a natural disaster threaten our security, our property, or our well-being, we can depend on the National Guard.

Hopefully, "National Guard Day" will bring to the attention of Americans everywhere the many past and present contributions of the Guard to our country, and its accessibility for the future. I wholeheartedly commend this joint resolution to the support of my colleagues.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as she may consume to the gentlewoman from Maryland (Mrs. HOLT).

Mrs. HOLT. Mr. Speaker, I would like to associate myself with the remarks given by those who have preceded me here on the floor today. I believe that this is a very, very important piece of legislation because it is time that we recognize that the Guard is one of the most cost effective and efficient parts of our armed services. We should emphasize the need for readiness and preparedness. The people who serve us so faithfully should have the materiels with which to train and serve.

As a member of the House Armed Services Committee, and especially of the Military Personnel Subcommittee, I have gained a firsthand knowledge of the vital role played by the National Guard in our national security.

I am happy to be associated with my colleagues in supporting House Joint Resolution 946 and urge others to support its passage.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield myself such time as I may consume.

Mr. Speaker, finally, let me say that this piece of legislation is dedicated in a personal sense by me to two young guardsmen who were killed in a fire when they were called out during a tornado in Xenia, Ohio, in April 1974, one of the communities in my district.

That tornado destroyed half the community and took 35 lives. They, no less than those who were killed by that tornado itself, were victims of that tornado. They had come there to provide protection for those who were homeless, to offer physical assistance to the community and to clean up and help toward reconstruction. Their sacrifice is only typical of the kind of dedication shown and work done by the National Guard.

Many of my friends, with whom I grew up in a small town and with whom I used to play basketball and participate in other activities in the National Guard's Armory and assembly hall, later joined the local Guard unit and were dedicated Guard members. They also were those who were among the first to report for active duty in both World War II and the Korean War, were ready to go and willing to go when their Nation needed them. Such people are part of what has made the National Guard what it is today and has been because they have the patriotic citizen-soldier spirit that has served so well in this country now and for over 300 years. We want it to continue and to continue receiving the honor it deserves.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. I am happy to yield to the gentleman from California.

Mr. DORNAN. Mr. Speaker, I would like to be associated with the remarks that have been so supportive of our National Guard here today.

Mr. Speaker I flew for years with the California Air National Guard and I must say that the standard of excellence of both the Army and Air Guard in California is absolutely phenomenal. Maintenance particularly was superior to everything that I observed during my 5 years of active duty in the Air Force service. In order to keep sophisticated fighter jet aircraft flying you need the best young men and women our Nation can produce as volunteers, the same with new Army equipment. To keep the morale of our Guard forces as high as possible should be a primary goal of our defense efforts in this Congress, and that is why I cosponsored and wholeheartedly support this resolution.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I yield 1 minute to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. SEIBERLING).

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the distinguished gentleman from Florida.

I would like to ask a question, if I may. Of course, all of these three bills would commemorate very worthwhile and important matters. I think especially National Family Week and National Guard Day are matters of concern to every person. National Lupus Week is concerned with those people who happen to be afflicted or who have relatives afflicted with the disease. Of course, there are many, many worthy causes in the world. There are many diseases which we would like to eradicate.

I would like to ask the gentleman from Florida if there is any restraining policy so that we do not spend a good part of our time, that could be devoted to matters of substance enacting legislation, on these things which are commemorative or for recognition but which do not actually produce any movement toward solving problems or legislatively support these causes. I would just like to ask the gentleman if he can tell me whether there is some sort of control over this.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, we do have rules in the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service that have been able to somewhat control the number of these resolutions that come to the floor. This year we have brought, I think, around 14 of these resolutions of all kinds to the floor. There have been almost 500 of these resolutions submitted to the committee. The prerequisite is to get 218 cosponsors. There is a committee policy that I would like to put in the RECORD at this time for the benefit of the the Members so that they can once again see the manner in which these various resolutions can be brought to the floor and in which areas, such as the commemoration of living persons, they cannot be brought to the floor under the policies of the Committee on Post Office and Civil Service.

Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to make this a part of the body of the RECORD.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

The statement of policy is as follows:

COMMITTEE POLICY FOR CONSIDERATION OF COMMEMORATIVE LEGISLATION

It shall be the policy of the Committee that legislation providing for designation of commemorative days or other periods shall be considered only three times each year during the months of February, June and October.

The following types of proposals shall not be reported:

(a) Any proposal concerning a commercial enterprise, specific product, or fraternal, political or sectarian organization;

(b) any proposal concerning a particular State or any political subdivision thereof, city, town, county, school, or institution of higher learning;

(c) any proposal concerning a living person; and

(d) any proposal providing for recurring annual commemorations.

All other proposals with national appeal and significance, which shall be demonstrated by co-sponsorship of the resolution or written endorsement, or a combination thereof, by a majority of the Members of the House, may be reported.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHMAN. I yield again to the gentleman from Ohio.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

Of course, any time 218 Members wanted to, they could sign a discharge petition and force an issue to the floor in any case, so I suppose that that is almost a necessary policy. But it does seem to me that this can get out of hand. It is awfully easy to sign a petition that does not hurt anybody, and it is awfully hard to say no if it is a worthwhile cause. But I would hope that if the thing starts to proliferate, the committee might come up with some suggestions so that we could prevent the use of the time of this House for matters which are not of legislative import.

Mr. ECKHARDT. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. LEHMAN. I yield to the gentleman from Texas.

Mr. ECKHARDT. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

I would like to compliment the gentleman from Ohio for bringing up this question. Of course, I intend to vote for this National Guard Day. It is a fine institution. I think the family is a fine institution. I think we have got a resolution on that sometime. But, really, if we are to depend on whether or not there is a majority of the House signing such resolutions, we have a very weak barrier to bringing these matters up constantly at great cost in time and in effort. If we really regard the National Guard, we do not have to set aside a day for it. We respect it for its own purposes.

I really do raise that question as a serious one that the House needs to concern itself with.

Mr. SEIBERLING. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield further?

Mr. LEHMAN. I yield to the gentleman.

Mr. SEIBERLING. I thank the gentleman for yielding.

The National Guard is something that is of concern to all of us because it is part of our system of national defense. I can see some sense in having National Guard Day the same as we have Armed Forces Day and Armistice Day, but what I am concerned about is that there are hundreds of organizations in this country dedicated to eradicating some disease. Some may affect hundreds of people; some may affect tens of thousands of people. But they are all worthy causes. I just feel that it is very hard to say no. Yet I understand that there is a backlog of some 120 bills that are matters of substance that are on the nonpriority list this year that are probably going to be sidetracked because we are running out of time.

So I suggest that we ought to have some control, so that we do not end up with hundreds of these things taking a great deal of our time from our other legislative duties. That is the only point I wanted to make.

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think that the points of the gentleman from Ohio and the gentleman from Texas are well taken. I have no quarrel with them. The facts of life are, though, that in this body there is a lot more pressure on this committee and this subcommittee to relax these rules and prerequisites for consideration. It is difficult even to hold the number down to what we have at the present time, which eliminates, as I said, living people, commercial enterprises, States and political subdivisions of any kind, and other matters.

I think it would be prudent at this time that this committee and this subcommittee in particular, perhaps, hold hearings in the next Congress in order to revise or maybe further limit the manner in which these particular items can be brought up for consideration by the full body.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time. I yield back the balance of my time.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I yield such time as he may consume to the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN).

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, apparently the gentleman from Texas and the gentleman from Ohio are not privy to the manner in which this House of Representatives conducts its business. They show an ignorance of the reason why these resolutions were brought up today on a Monday when we only have about 50 working days left in the entire session, when the leadership is jettisoning major pieces of the President's legislation, rather than let the ship go under, throwing off the deck chairs, so to speak.

I am not denigrating in any way these worthy resolutions. They shall have my support. They are good and worthy causes, but the only reason they are brought up today is because today is the day of the annual Congressional Golf Tournament and we bring up things of lesser importance, as far as missing votes, so that Members will not miss the big ones. That is why some of us are sitting here on this beautiful afternoon in Washington with a great many of our colleagues away engaged in other pursuits.

I do not think we should be too hard on this committee. They are doing their job. They acquit themselves admirably and we owe them a debt of gratitude for bringing these matters to our attention. The complaint should not be with the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN). Rather, the questions should be put to the leaders of the majority. I would be glad to cooperate with my colleagues in that regard.

I would make one other point, that these are far more meritorious bills than the majority of the bills this House passes on many occasions. I suspect the citizenry of the United States would rather have Congress do nothing than to do what the majority has been doing to America for the past 2 years.

Mr. BROWN of Ohio. Mr. Speaker, I think the committee has acquitted itself and discharged its responsibility for bringing these pieces of legislation to the floor.

Mr. Speaker, I have no further requests for time, and I yield back the balance of my time.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. The question is on the motion offered by the gentleman from Florida (Mr. LEHMAN) that the House suspend the rules and pass the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 946).

The question was taken.

Mr. HARKIN. Mr. Speaker, I object to the vote on the ground that a quorum is not present and make the point of order that a quorum is not present.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Evidently a quorum is not present.

The Sergeant at Arms will notify absent Members.

The vote was taken by electronic device, and there were—yeas 264, nays 10, not voting 158, as follows:

GENERAL LEAVE

Mr. LEHMAN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that all Members may have 5 legislative days within which to revise and extend their remarks and to include extraneous matter on the joint resolution (H.J. Res. 946) just passed.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Florida?

There was no objection.

REQUEST TO CONSIDER SENATE AMENDMENT TO H.R. 2777, NATIONAL CONSUMER COOPERATIVE BANK ACT

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's desk the bill (H.R. 2777) to provide for consumers a further means of minimizing the impact of inflation and economic depression by narrowing the price spread between costs to the producer and the consumer of needed goods, services, facilities, and commodities through the development and funding of specialized credit sources for, and technical assistance to, self-help, not-for-profit cooperatives, and for other purposes, with a Senate amendment hereto, and concur in the Senate amendment.

The Clerk read the title of the bill.

The Clerk read the Senate amendment, as follows:

Strike out all after the enacting clause and insert: That this Act may be cited as the "National Consumer Cooperative Bank Act".

STATEMENT OF FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 2. The economic and financial structure of this country in combination with the Nation's natural resources and the productivity of the American people has produced one of the highest average standards of living in the world. However, the Nation has been experiencing inflation and unemployment together with an increasing gap between producers' prices and consumers' purchasing power. This has resulted in a growing number of our citizens, especially the elderly, the poor, and the inner city resident, being unable to share in the fruits of our Nation's highly efficient economic system. The Congress finds that user-owned cooperatives are a proven method for broadening ownership and control of the economic organizations, increasingly the number of market participants, narrowing price spreads, raising the quality of goods and services available to their membership, and building bridges between producers and consumers, and their members and patrons. The Congress also finds that consumer and other types of self-help cooperatives have been hampered in their formation and growth by lack of access to adequate cooperative credit facilities and lack of technical assistance. Therefore, the Congress finds a need for the establishment of a National Consumer Cooperative Bank which will make available necessary financial and technical assistance to cooperative self-help endeavors as a means of strengthening the Nation's economy.

TITLE I—NATIONAL CONSUMER COOPERATIVE BANK

CREATION AND CHARTER OF BANK

SEC. 101. There is hereby created and chartered a body corporate, the National Consumer Cooperative Bank, hereinafter referred to as the "Bank", as an instrumentality of the United States, and until otherwise provided, shall be a mixed ownership Government corporation. The bank shall have perpetual existence unless and until its charter is revoked or modified by Act of Congress. The right to revise, amend, or modify the charter of the bank is specifically and exclusively reserved to the Congress. The principal office of the bank shall be in Washington, District of Columbia, and, for the purpose of venue, shall be considered a resident thereof. It shall make loans and offer its services throughout the United States, its territories and possessions, and in the Commonwealth of Puerto Rico. The Bank shall—

(1) encourage the development of new and existing cooperatives eligible for its assistance by providing specialized credit and technical assistance;

(2) maintain broad-based control of the Bank by its voting stockholders;

(3) encourage broad-based ownership, control, and active participation by members in eligible cooperatives;

(4) assist in improving the quality and availability of goods and services to consumers; and

(5) encourage ownership of its equity securities by cooperatives and others as provided in section 104, so that the date when all of the Bank's class A stock owned by the United States has been fully redeemed (the "Final Government Equity Redemption Date") occurs as early as practicable.

GENERAL CORPORATE POWERS

SEC. 102. The Bank shall have the power to make and service loans, commitments for credit, guarantees, furnish financially related services, technical assistance and the results of research, issue its obligations within the limitations imposed by section 107 in such amounts, at such times, and on such terms as the Bank may determine, and to exercise the other powers and duties prescribed in this Act, and shall have the power to—

(1) operate under the direction of its Board of Directors;

(2) adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal, which shall be judicially noted;

(3) elect by its Board of Directors a president, one or more vice presidents, a secretary, a treasurer, and provide for such other officers, employees, and agents as may be necessary, and define their duties in accordance with regulations and standards adopted by the Board, and require surety bonds or make other provisions against losses occasioned by acts of employees;

(4) prescribe by its Board of Directors its bylaws not inconsistent with law, which shall establish the terms of office and the procedure for election of elective members; provide in a manner not inconsistent with this Act for the classes of its stock and the manner in which its stock shall be issued, transferred, and retired; and prescribe the manner in which its officers, employees, and agents are elected or selected, its property acquired, held, and transferred, its loans, commitments, other financial assistance, guarantees, and appraisals may be made, its general business conducted, and the privilege granted it by law exercised and enjoyed;

(5) enter into contracts and make advance, progress, or other payments with respect to such contracts, without regard to the provisions of section 3648 of the Revised Statutes;

(6) sue and be sued in its corporate name and complain and defend, in any court of competent jurisdiction, State or Federal;

(7) acquire, hold, lease, mortgage, or dispose of, at public or private sale, real and personal property and sell or exchange any securities or obligations, and otherwise exercise all the usual incidents of ownership of property necessary or convenient to its business: Provided, That any such acquisition or ownership of real property shall not deprive a State or political subdivision thereof of its civil or criminal jurisdiction in and over such property or impair the civil rights of the inhabitants of such property under Federal, State, or local laws;

(8) obtain insurance against loss in connection with property and other assets;

(9) modify or consent to the modification

with respect to the rate of interest, time of payment of any installment of principal or interest, security, or any other term of any contract or agreement to which it is a party or has an interest pursuant to this Act;

(10) utilize and act through any Federal, State, or local public agency or instrumentality, or private agency or organization, with the consent of the agency or organization concerned, and contract with such agency, instrumentality, or organization for furnishing or receiving technical services and benefits of research, services, funds, or facilities; and make advance, progress, or other payments with respect to such contracts without regard to section 3648 of the Revised Statutes;

(11) within the limitations of section 107, borrow money and issue notes, bonds, and debentures or other obligations individually or in concert with other financial institutions, agencies, or instrumentalities, of such character and such terms and conditions and at rates of interest as may be determined;

(12) issue certificates of indebtedness to its stockholders or members and pay interest on funds left with the Bank, and accept grants or interest free temporary use of funds made available to it;

(13) participate with one or more other financial institutions, agencies, instrumentalities, or foundations in loans or guarantees under this Act on terms as may be agreed upon;

(14) accept guarantees from other agencies for which loans made by the Bank may be eligible;

(15) establish one or more branch offices and one or more advisory councils in connection with any such branch offices, as may from time to time be authorized by the Board of Directors;

(16) buy and sell obligations of, or insured by, the United States or any agency or instrumentalities thereof, or securities backed by the full faith and credit of any such agency or instrumentality and, after the final Government Equity Redemption Date, make such other investments as may be authorized by the Board of Directors;

(17) approve the salary scale of officers and employees of the Bank, in accordance with regulations and standards adopted by the Board of Directors, without regard to the provisions of chapter 51 and subchapter III of chapter 53 of such title relating to classification and General Schedule pay rates, but, except as otherwise provided in this Act, the General Schedule pay rates shall be applicable until all class A stock held by the Secretary of the Treasury has been retired; and

(18) have such other incidental powers as may be necessary or expedient to carry out its duties under this Act.

The stock or other securities or instruments issued by the Bank shall, to the same extent as securities which are the direct obligations of the United States, be "exempt securities" within the meaning of the laws administered by the Securities and Exchange Commission.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS

SEC. 103. (a) The Bank shall be governed by a Board of Directors (hereinafter referred to as the "Board") which shall consist of thirteen members. Subject to the provisions of subsection (b) of this section, all members of the Board shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, for terms of three years or until their successors have been appointed and qualified. The President shall appoint seven members of the Board from among the officers of the agencies and departments of the United States Government: Provided, That at any one time no more than one member shall be from any one agency or department. The remaining members shall be from the general public (and not from the officers or employees of the United States Government) but shall have extensive experience in the cooperative field representative of the following classes of cooperatives: (1) housing, (2) consumer goods, (3) low-income cooperatives, (4) consumer services, and (5) all other eligible cooperatives, and for these appointments the President shall consider nominees submitted by national associations of cooperatives. Any member appointed by the President may be removed at any time with or without cause by the President. If a vacancy occurs on the Board for any reason other than a resignation pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, a new member shall be appointed by the President to serve until the next annual meeting of the Bank, at which time the vacancy shall be filled for the remainder of the unexpired term by the President or the holders of class B and class C stock, as provided in this section 104.

(b) At the first annual meeting occurring after the time when the amount of paid-in capital of the Bank attributable to the shares of class B stock and class C stock equals or exceeds $3,000,000, three members of the Board appointed by the President from the general public shall resign. Similarly, when the amount of paid-in capital attributable to the shares of class B and class C stock equals or exceeds $10,000,000 the terms of the other three members appointed by the President from the general public shall terminate. An additional member of the Board designated by the President (who shall be a member who had been appointed by the President) shall resign at each of the annual meetings occurring after the time when the amount of paid-in capital attributable to the class B and class C stock equals or exceeds seven-thirteenths and eight-thirteenths of the total amount of paid-in capital of the Bank. As members of the Board resign in accordance with the foregoing provisions, the directorships vacated shall be deemed shareholder directorships and shall be filled by the holders of class B stock and class C stock in accordance with the provisions of subsection (c) of this section. Five remaining members of the Board appointed by the President shall resign on the Final Government Equity Redemption Date. Thereafter, one member of the Board shall continue to be appointed by the President from among proprietors of small business concerns, as defined under section 3 of the Small Business Act, which are manufacturers or retailers.

(c) At all elections of Directors by holders of class B stock and class C stock, nominations shall be made by the classes of eligible cooperatives specified in subsection (a). Vacant shareholder directorships shall be filled, whether by appointment or election, so that at any time when there are three or more shareholder directors on the board, there shall be at least one director representing each of the classes of housing cooperatives, low-income cooperatives, and consumer goods and services cooperatives. Each nominee for shareholder directorship of a particular class shall have at least three years experience as a director or senior officer in the class of cooperatives to be represented. No one class of cooperatives specified in subsection (a) shall be represented on the Board by more than three directors.

(d) When all five remaining members of the Board appointed by the President have resigned pursuant to subsection (b) of this section, their successors and the successors to shareholder directors shall thereafter be elected pursuant to such rules as the Board may from time to time prescribe in the bylaws of the Bank.

(e) No director shall be eligible to be elected for more than two consecutive full three-year terms. No officer of the Bank shall be eligible to serve simultaneously as a director on the Board of the Bank. The Bank shall give adequate advance notice to all voting stockholders of nominees and of the procedures for nominating other candidates. Each voting stockholder shall make the information required in this paragraph available to its members.

(f) The Board shall annually elect from among its members a chairman and vice chairman and select a secretary who need not be a member. The Board shall establish the policies of the Bank governing its funding, lending, and other financial and technical assistance, and shall direct the management of the Bank.

(g) The Board shall meet at least quarterly. Its meeting shall be open to members or representatives of all eligible cooperatives and other eligible organizations, as observers only, and to persons or representatives of groups who identify their interest in the Bank and who are invited to attend a meeting, subject to such rules as the Board may establish for the conduct of such meetings. Those rules shall include the manner of giving notice of meetings, the procedure for the conduct of meetings, the manner of submitting topics for the agenda, the allocation of time of presentations, and debate. The chairman, when sustained by the majority of the Board present, may adjourn the open meeting into an executive session on motion of the chairman, any Board member, or at the request of any applicant, borrower, officer, or employee when the matter under discussion involves an application, a loan, a personnel action, or other matter which might tend to impinge on the right of privacy of any person.

(h) Members of the Board appointed by the President from among the officers of agencies and departments of the United States Government shall not receive any additional compensation by virtue of their service on the Board. Until the Final Government Equity Redemption Date, members of the Board appointed by the President from among the general public or elected by the holders of the class B and class C stock shall (1) receive compensation at a rate equal to the daily equivalent of the rate prescribed for grade GS–18 under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code, for each day that they are engaged in the performance of their duties on the Board, and (2) be allowed travel expenses, including per diem in lieu of subsistence, in the same manner as persons employed intermittently in the Government service are allowed expenses under section 5703(b) of title 5, United States Code, for each day that they are away from their homes or regular places of business in the performance of their duties on the Board.

CAPITALIZATION

SEC. 104. (a) The capital of the Bank shall consist of capital subscribed by borrowers from the Bank, by cooperatives eligible to become borrowers, by organizations owned and controlled by such borrowers, by foundations, trust or charitable funds, by public bodies, and by the United States. Beginning with the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, the United States shall purchase class A stock and for that fiscal year there are authorized to be appropriated $100,000,000 for such purposes, and there are authorized to be appropriated for the next four succeeding fiscal years an amount not to exceed $200,000,000 in the aggregate. Any amounts so authorized but not appropriated or not utilized to purchase such stock of the Bank in any such fiscal year is authorized to be appropriated or reappropriated and so used in subsequent fiscal years.

(b) The capital stock of the Bank shall include class A, class B, and class C stock and such other classes with such rights, powers, privileges, and preferences of the separate classes as may be specified, not inconsistent with law, in the bylaws of the Bank. Class A preferred stock held by the United States shall be a preferred stock with first preference with respect to assets and dividends over all other classes of stock issued by the Bank. So long as any class A stock is outstanding, the Bank shall not pay any dividend on any other class of stock at a rate greater than the statutory dividend payable on the class A stock. Class B and class C stock shall be common stock with voting rights as provided for herein and shall be issued only to eligible borrowers and organizations controlled by such borrowers or organizations eligible to borrow, and shall be transferable only on the books of the Bank and then only to another eligible borrower. No holder of voting stock of the Bank shall be entitled to more than one vote regardless of the number of shares of stock of othe · classes held, except as provided in subsection (g) of this section

(c) Class A stock with a par value of $100 per share shall be issued by the Bank to the Secretary of the Treasury on behalf of the United States in exchange for capital furnished pursuant to subsection (a) of this section. The holder of class A stock shall be entitled to dividends at a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury taking into consideration the average market yield, during the month preceding the close of each fiscal year, on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturity: Provided, That until October 1, 1990, such dividends shall not exceed 25 per centum of gross revenues for the year less necessary operating expenses, including a reserve for possible losses. Such dividends shall be payable annually into miscellaneous receipts of the Treasury and shall be cumulative. Any such dividend payment may be deferred by the Board of Directors with the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, but any dividend payment so deferred shall bear interest at the same rate as the rate at which dividends accumulate on the class A stock. Without the approval of the Secretary of the Treasury, the Bank shall not pay any dividend or distribution on, or make any redemption or repurchase of, any other class of stock at any time when the cumulative dividends on the class A stock shall not have been paid in full (together with any unpaid interest thereon). Upon any liquidation or dissolution of the Bank, the holder of class A stock shall be entitled to receive out of the assets of the Bank available for distribution to its stockholders, prior to any payment to the holders of any other class of stock of the Bank, an amount not less than the aggregate par value of all class A stock outstanding, plus all accrued and unpaid dividends accrued thereon to and including the date of payment (together with all unpaid interest thereon). The class A stock shall be redeemed and retired as soon as practicable consistent with the purposes of this Act (such redemption to be at a price equal to the par value of the class A stock so redeemed plus cumulative dividends accrued thereon to the date of redemption): Provided, That beginning on October 1, 1990, there shall be redeemed as a minimum with respect to each fiscal year a number of shares of class A stock having an aggregate par value equal to the aggregate consideration received by the Bank for the issue of its class B and class C stock during that fiscal year. Each such redemption shall take place not later than ninety days after the close of each fiscal year.

(d) Class B stock shall be held only by recipients of loans under section 105 of this Act, and such borrowers shall be required to own class B stock in an amount not less than 1 per centum of the face amount of the loan at the time the loan is made. Such borrowers may be required by the Bank to own additional class B or class C stock at the time the loan is made, but not to exceed an amount equal to 10 per centum of the face amount of the loan, or from time to time, as the Bank may determine. Such additional stock ownership requirements may be on the basis of the face amount of the loan, the outstanding balances, or on a percentage of interest payable during any year or any quarter thereof, as the Bank may determine will provide adequate capital for the operation of the Bank and equitable ownership thereof among borrowers

(e) Class C stock shall be available for purchase and shall be held only by borrowers or by organizations eligible to borrow under section 105 of this Act or by organizations controlled by such borrowers, and shall be entitled to dividends in the manner specified in the bylaws of the Bank. Such dividends shall be payable only from income, and, until all class A stock has been retired, the rate of such dividends shall not exceed the rate of the statutory dividend on class A stock.

(f) Nonvoting stock of other classifications and other priorities may be issued at the discretion of the Board, to other investors, except that so long as any class A stock is outstanding, the Board shall not authorize or issue any class of stock, whether voting or nonvoting, that would rank prior or equal to the class A stock as to dividends or upon liquidation or dissolution.

(g)(1) The bylaws of the Bank may provide for more than one vote on the basis of—

(A) the amount of class B stock, class C stock, or both classes held, with such limitations as will encourage investments in class C stock;

(B) the amount of patronage of the Bank; and

(C) number of members in the cooperative.

(2) Such bylaws shall avoid—

(A) voting control of the Bank from becoming concentrated with the larger affluent or smaller less affluent organizations;

(B) a disproportionately larger vote in one or more of the groups of cooperatives referred to in section 103(s) of this Act; and

(C) the concentration of more than 5 per centum of the total voting control in any one class B or class C stockholder.

(h) The Bank may accept nonreturnable capital contributions on which no interest, dividend, or patronage refund shall be payable from associations, foundations, or funds or public bodies or agencies at the discretion of the Board. For the purpose of accepting such contributions, the Bank will be a governmental unit within the meaning of section 170(b)(1)(A)(v) of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(i) After payment of all operating expenses of the Bank, including interest on its obligations, and after setting aside appropriate funds for reserves for losses, for cumulative dividends on class A stock and dividends on class C stock and for any redemption of class A stock in accordance with subsection (c), the Bank shall annually set aside the remaining earnings of the Bank for patronage refunds in the form of class B or C stock or allocated surplus in accordance with the bylaws of the Bank. After ten years from the date of issue of any such stock, or at such earlier time as all the Government-held stock is retired, patronage refunds may be made in cash, or partly in stock and partly in cash.

ELIGIBILITY

SEC. 105. (a) For the purpose of all titles of this Act, subject to the limitations of subsection (d) of this section, an eligible cooperative as an organization chartered or operated on a cooperative, not-for-profit basis for producing or furnishing goods, services or facilities, primarily for the benefit of its members or voting stockholders who are ultimate consumers of such goods, services, or facilities, or a legally chartered entity entirely owned and controlled by any such organization or organizations, if it—

(1) makes such goods, services or facilities directly or indirectly available to its members or voting stockholders on a not-for-profit basis;

(2) does not pay dividends on voting stock or membership capital in excess of such percentage per annum as may be approved under the bylaws of the Bank;

(3) provides that its net savings shall be allocated or distributed to all members or patrons, in proportion to their patronage, or shall be retained for the actual or potential expansion of its services or the reduction of its charges to the patrons, or for such other purposes as may be authorized by its membership not inconsistent with its purposes;

(4) makes membership available on a voluntary basis, without any social, political, racial, or religious discrimination and without any discrimination on the basis of age, sex, or marital status, to all persons who can make use of its services and are willing to accept the responsibilities of membership, subject only to limitations under applicable Federal or State laws or regulations;

(5) in the case of primary cooperative organizations restricts its voting control to members or voting stockholders on a one vote per person basis and takes positive steps to insure economic democracy and maximum participation by members of the cooperative including the holding of annual meetings and, in the case or organizations owned by groups of cooperatives, provides positive protections to insure economic democracy; and

(6) is not a credit union, mutual savings bank, or mutual savings and loan association.

(b) No organization shall be ineligible because it produces, markets, or furnishes goods, services, or facilities on behalf of its members as primary producers, unless the dollar volume of loans made by the Bank to such organizations exceeds 10 per centum of the gross assets of the Bank.

(c) As used in this section, the term "net savings" means, for any period, the borrower's gross receipts, less the operating and other expenses deductible therefrom in accordance with generally accepted accounting principles, including, without limitation, contributions to allowable reserves, and after deducting the amounts of any dividends on its capital stock or other membership capital payable during, or within forty-five days after, the close of such period.

(d) An eligible cooperative which also has been determined to be eligible for credit assistance from the Rural Electrification Administration, the National Rural Utilities Cooperative Finance Corporation, the Rural Telephone Bank, the Banks for Cooperatives or other institutions of the Farm Credit System, or the Farmers Home Administration may receive the assistance authorized by this Act only (1) if the Bank determines that a request for assistance from any such source or sources has been rejected or denied solely because of the unavailability of funds from such source or sources, or (2) by agreement between the Bank and the agency or agencies involved.

(e) Notwithstanding any other provision of this section, a credit union serving predominantly low-income members (as defined by the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administration) may receive technical assistance under title II.

ANNUAL MEETING

SEC. 106. The Bank shall hold an annual meeting of its stockholders which shall be open to the public. At least 30 days' advance notice of the time and place of the annual meeting shall be given to all stockholders. Borrowers from the Bank shall also give notice of the meeting to their members, who shall be entitled to attend. At such meeting the Bank shall give a full report of its activities during the year and its financial conditions and may present proposals for future action and other matters of general concern to borrowers and organizations eligible to borrow from the Bank. Members and representatives of borrowers may present motions or resolutions relating to matters within the scope of this Act and may participate in the discussion thereof and other matters on the agenda.

BORROWING AUTHORITY

SEC. 107. (a) The Bank is authorized to obtain funds through the public or private sale of its bonds, debentures, notes, and other evidences of indebtedness. Such obligations shall be issued at such times, bear interest at such rates, and contain such terms and conditions as the Board shall determine after consultation with the Secretary of the Treasury: Provided, however, That the amount of such obligations which may be outstanding at any one time pursuant to this section shall not exceed five times the paid-in capital and surplus of the Bank.

(b) The Bank is also authorized, but not required, and only so long as any of its class A stock is held by the Secretary of the Treasury, to issue its obligations to the Secretary of the Treasury, in amounts not to exceed in the aggregate such amounts as are provided in appropriations Acts and the Secretary of the Treasury may in his discretion purchase any such obligations. Each purchase of obligations of the Bank under this subsection shall be upon such terms and conditions as to yield a rate of return not less than a rate determined by the Secretary of the Treasury, taking into consideration the current average yield on outstanding marketable obligations of the United States of comparable maturity. The Secretary of the Treasury may sell, upon such terms and conditions and at such price or prices as he shall determine any of the obligations of the Bank acquired by him under this subsection.

(c) The Bank may purchase its own obligations, and may provide for the sale of any such obligations through a fiscal agent or agents, by negotiation, offer, bid, syndicate sale, or otherwise, and may deliver such obligations by book entry, wire transfer, or such other means as may be appropriate.

(d) Obligations issued under this section shall not be guaranteed by the United States and shall not constitute a debt or obligation of the United States or any agency or instrumentality thereof other than the Bank.

LENDING POWERS

SEC. 108. (a) The Bank may make loans and commitments for loans under this subsection to any organization determined by the Bank to be eligible under the provisions of section 105 of this Act, and may purchase or discount obligations of members of such organizations if the Bank, to the exclusion of all other persons, entities, agencies, or jurisdictions, also determines that the applicant has or will have a sound organizational and financial structure, income in excess of its operating costs and assets in excess of its obligations, and a reasonable expectation of a continuing demand for its production, goods, commodities, or services, or the use of its facilities, so that the loan will be fully repayable in accordance with its terms and conditions. Commencing on October 1, 1983, the Bank shall not make any loan to a cooperative for the purpose of financing the construction, ownership, acquisition, or improvement of any structure used primarily for residential purposes if, after giving effect to such loan, the aggregate amount of all loans outstanding for such purpose would exceed 30 per centum of the gross assets of the Bank. The Board of Directors shall use its best efforts to insure that at the end of each fiscal year of the Bank at least 35 per centum of its outstanding loans are to—

(1) cooperatives at least a majority of the members of which are low-income persons, and

(2) other cooperatives, if the proceeds of such loans are directly applied to finance a facility, activity, or service that the Board finds will be used predominantly by low-income persons.

The Board shall adopt and publish in the Federal Register rules defining the term "low-income persons" for purposes of this subsection. The criteria to be applied and the factors to be considered by the Bank in making loans, loan commitments, purchases, discounts, and guarantees shall include an assessment of the impact of the loan on existing small businesses in the eligible organizations' business territory. The criteria and factors shall be stated in rules of the Bank which shall be published and made available to applicants and, upon request, to any other person or organization.

(b) Loans under this section shall be repayable in not more than forty years and, except for loans with final due date not longer than five years from the date of the loan, shall be amortized as to principal and interest. In setting the terms, rates, and charges, it shall be the objective of the Bank to provide the type of credit needed by eligible borrowers, at the lowest reasonable cost on a sound business basis, taking into account the cost of money to the Bank, necessary reserve and expenses of the Bank, and the technical and other assistance attributable to loans under this section made available by the Bank, but so long as the Bank makes loans from the proceeds of the sale of class A stock, the interest rate shall not be less than the rates generally prevailing in the area from other sources for loans for similar purposes and maturities, taking into consideration the cost to the borrower of required purchase of class B stock in the Bank. The loan terms may provide for interest rates to vary from time to time during the repayment period of the loan in accordance with the rates being charged by the Bank for new loans at such times. The proceeds of a loan under this subsection may be advanced by the borrower to its members or stockholders under circumstances described in the bylaws or rules of the Bank.

(c) Subject to section 102(13), the Bank may guarantee all or any part of the principal and interest of any loan made by any State or federally chartered lending institution to any borrower if such loan is to an organization that would be an eligible borrower from the Bank for a direct loan and is on terms and conditions (including the rate of interest) which would be permissible terms and conditions for such a direct loan. The Bank may impose a charge for any such guarantee. No loan may be guaranteed by the Bank if the income therefrom to the lender is excluded from such lender's gross income for purposes of chapter 1 of the Internal Revenue Code of 1954.

(d) Any loan guaranteed under subsection (c) shall be assignable to the extent provided in the contract of guarantee as may be determined by the Bank. The guarantee shall be uncontestable, except for fraud or misrepresentation of which the holder had actual knowledge at the time he acquired the loan. The Bank in lieu of requiring such lender to service such guaranteed loan until final maturity or liquidation, may purchase the loan for the balance of the principal and accrued interest thereon without penalty, if it determines that (1) liquidation of the loan would result in the insolvency of the borrower or deprive the borrower of assets essential to its continued operation, and (2) the loan will be repayable with revision of the loan rates, terms, or payment periods or other conditions not inconsistent with loans made by the Bank under subsection (a) of this section, which revisions the lender or other holder of such guaranteed loan is unwilling to make.

(e) As long as any of the class A stock of the Bank is held by the Secretary of the Treasury, the aggregate amount of commitments by the Bank to make or guarantee loans shall not exceed such amounts as may be specified in annual appropriation Acts.

TAXATION

SEC. 109. Until the Final Government Equity Redemption Date, but not thereafter, the Bank, including its franchise, capital, reserves, surplus, mortgages, or other security holdings and income shall be exempt from taxation now or hereafter imposed by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority, but any real property held by the Bank shall be subject to any State, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

QUARTERS AND SPACE

SEC. 110 Until the Final Government Equity Redemption Date, space for the principal office and any branch offices of the Bank shall be provided by the General Services Administration. Thereafter, the Bank may lease, construct, or own quarters and provide for the space requirements of its principal and other offices.

REPORTS TO CONGRESS

SEC. 111. The Board of the Bank shall report annually to the appropriate committees of the Congress on the Bank's capital, operations, and financial condition and make recommendations for legislation needed to improve its services.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 112. In addition to appropriations specifically authorized in the Act, there are authorized to be appropriated $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for each of the two succeeding fiscal years, ending September 30, 1980, and September 30, 1981, such sums as may be necessary: Provided, That none of these appropriated sums shall be used to retire any indebtedness of the Bank incurred pursuant to section 107 of this Act. Any sums so appropriated shall remain available until expended.

APPEALS

SEC. 113. (a) If an application for assistance under this Act is denied in whole or in part, the applicant shall be informed within thirty days in writing of the reasons for the denial or restriction.

(b) Any applicant for assistance under this Act receiving notice of denial or restriction of the application may, within thirty days of receipt of such notice, request the Board of Directors to review the application and notice of denial or restriction for a determination of whether the action of the Bank was correctly within the terms of the Act, the regulations, and the policy of the Board. The Board shall consider the request for review at its meeting and promptly inform the applicant of its determination and the reasons therefor.

CONFLICT OF INTEREST

SEC. 114. The Board of Directors shall adopt and publish its own conflict of interest rules which shall be no less stringent in effect than the Federal Executive conflict of interest rules contained in Executive Order Numbered 11222 in prohibiting participation or action or the use of inside information for personal advantage on any matter involving a corporation, trust, partnership, or cooperative organization in which a board member, officer, or employee holds a substantial financial interest or holds a position as board member or senior officer, the activities of which organization might be relevant to, be competitive with, or be inconsistent with the objectives of any bank created under this Act. These rules shall require—

(1) each nominee for elected membership on the Board established under this Act to make public and file with the election official before the date of election a statement of his financial interest and position, if any, in such organizations; and

(2) each senior executive officer and appointed member of the Board to file with the appointing officer, before entering that office a statement of his financial interest and position, if any, in such organizations, which shall be available for inspection upon request.

The provisions of this section shall remain in effect until the Final Government Equity Redemption Date.

EXAMINATION AND AUDIT

SEC. 115. Until the stock of the Bank held by the United States has been fully retired, the operations of the Bank shall be examined annually under the direction of an agency or instrumentality of the Federal Government designated by the President, including the General Accounting Office and reports of such examination shall be forwarded to the Congress. The President shall, no later than the date than 66⅔ per centum of the class A stock is held by others than the Secretary of the Treasury, establish an Office of Supervision and Audit which shall be responsible for audits and examinations of the Bank, shall assure that the objectives of this title are carried out, and shall review and comment on the by-laws of the Bank and the general policies of the Bank and shall make an annual report to the Congress.

TITLE II—OFFICE OF SELF-HELP DEVELOPMENT AND TECHNICAL ASSISTANCE

ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 201. (a) There is hereby established within the Bank an Office of Self-Help Development and Technical Assistance (hereinafter the "Office").

(b) The Office shall have a Director who shall be appointed by the President, with the advice and consent of the Senate, and who shall not be a member of the Board. Subject to review by the Board, the Director shall promulgate and publish in the Federal Register policies and procedures governing the operation of the Office.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 202. There are hereby authorized to be appropriated to the Office $10,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for the next two succeeding fiscal years an aggregate amount not to exceed $65,000,000, for the purpose of making advances under section 203 of this Act. Any amounts appropriated to the Office shall be deposited by the Office in a separate account in the Bank (hereinafter the "Account"), and shall remain available until expended. Repayments of capital investment advances made pursuant to section 203(a) pursuant to section 203(b) and payments of interest thereon pursuant to section 203 (c) shall also be deposited in the Account. No other funds of the Bank shall be transferred into the Account. The Account shall be used by the Office only as authorized in section 203.

CAPITAL INVESTMENTS AND INTEREST SUPPLEMENTS

SEC. 203. (a) The Office may make a capital investment advance out of the Account to any eligible cooperative, either in conjunction with or without a loan if the Office determines that—

(1)(A) the applicant's initial or supplemental capital requirements exceeds its ability to obtain such capital through a loan under section 108 or from other sources; or

(B) the membership of the applicant is, or will consist, substantially of low-income persons, as defined by the Board of Directors, or the applicant proposes to undertake to provide specialized goods, services, or facilities to serve their needs; and

(2) the applicant cannot obtain sufficient funds through a loan under section 108 or otherwise, and the applicant presents a plan which the Office determines will permit the replacement of a capital investment advance out of member equities within a period not to exceed thirty years.

(b) The Office may make advances out of the Account to pay all or part of the interest payable to the Bank or any other lender by an eligible cooperative applicant which the Office determines cannot pay a market rate of interest because it sells goods or services to, or provides facilities for the use of, persons of low income: Provided, That such advances will not exceed an amount equal to 4 per centum of the principal amount of the indebtedness of such applicant to the Bank or such other lender for any year in which the net income of the cooperative is insufficient to meet scheduled interest payments.

(c) Capital investment advances made by the Office pursuant to subsection (a) and interest supplement advances made by the Office pursuant to subsection (b) shall bear interest at a rate determined by the Board of Directors of the Bank, and the Board of Directors may authorize an interest rate applicable to such advances lower than the rate applicable to loans by the Bank pursuant to section 108.

ORGANIZATIONAL ASSISTANCE

SEC. 204. The Office shall make available information and services concerning the organization, financing, and management of cooperatives to best achieve the objectives of this Act and to best provide the means through which various types of goods, services, and facilities can be made available to members and patrons. The Office may enter into agreement with other agencies of Federal, State, and local governments, colleges and universities, foundations, or other organizations for the development and dissemination of such information, and services described in this title. The Office may make or accept grants or transfer of funds for such purposes.

INVESTIGATION AND REVENUES

SEC. 205. The Office may undertake investigations of new types of services which can more effectively be provided through cooperative not-for-profit organizations and make surveys of areas where the increased use of such organizations will contribute to the economic well-being of the community.

FINANCIAL ANALYSIS AND MARKET SURVEYS

SEC. 206. The Office may, at the request of any eligible cooperative, provide a financial analysis of the applicant's capital structure and needs and its cost of operations, survey the market for the goods or services the cooperative makes or desires to make available to its members or patrons or the users of its facilities.

DIRECTOR AND MANAGEMENT TRAINING AND ASSISTANCE

SEC. 207. The Office shall develop and make available, alone or in concert with other organizations, a program for training directors and staff of eligible cooperatives to improve their understanding of their responsibilities; the problems of and solutions for effective and efficient operation of their organizations or of cooperatives in general; and may by any means it deems appropriate, conduct membership studies, provide membership education programs, and programs for informing consumers and the general public of the advantages of cooperative action. Management supervision, review, and consultations shall be available from the Office to any eligible cooperative.

GOVERNMENT ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

SEC. 208. The Office shall work closely with all United States Government agencies offering programs for which consumer cooperatives may be eligible to assure that information concerning all such programs is made available to eligible cooperatives.

AUTHORIZATION

SEC. 209. There are authorized to be appropriated to the Office $2,000,000 for the fiscal year ending September 30, 1979, and for each of the two succeeding fiscal years, such sums as may be necessary for the administration of this title. Any sums so appropriated shall remain available until expended.

FEES FOR SERVICES

SEC. 210. The Office may make the technical assistance services under this title available for such fees as it may establish, except that such services as the Office may determine may be made available without charge to eligible cooperatives depending on the nature of the services or on ability to pay. Any fees collected shall be accounted for separately and be available for expenses of the Office.

TITLE III—GENERAL PROVISIONS

AMENDMENTS TO EXISTING LAW

SEC. 301. (a) Section 201 of the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U.S.C. 856) is amended by redsignating paragraph (6) the second time it appears therein as paragraph (7), by striking out "and" immediately before "(9)" and by inserting ", and (10) the National Consumer Cooperative Bank" immediately before the period at the end thereof.

(b) Section 302 of the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U.S.C. 867) is amended by striking out "or" before "the Federal Land Banks" and inserting immediately after "the Federal Land Banks," the following: "or the National Consumer Cooperative Bank,".

(c) The second sentence of subsection (d) of section 303 of the Government Corporation Control Act (31 U.S.C. 868(d)) is amended by inserting "National Consumer Cooperative Bank," immediately before "Rural Telephone Bank".

SEC. 302. Section 5315 of title 5, United States Code, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(122) President, National Consumer Cooperative Bank.

"(123) Director, Office of Self-Help Development and Technical Assistance, National Consumer Cooperative Bank.".

Mr. ST GERMAIN (during the reading). Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent that further reading of the Senate amendment be dispensed with and that it be printed in the RECORD. I shall explain the major differences.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Rhode Island?

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, I do so to engage the gentleman from Rhode Island in a colloquy about this bill and the procedure which we are following here in the absence of the ranking Republican on the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions (Mr. ROUSSELOT).

I had a discussion with Mr. ROUSSELOT this morning, as did the distinguished chairman of the Subcommittee on Financial Institutions. I think it is fair to say that if the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) had his druthers, he would rather have no bill; that has been his position from the beginning.

But, in view of the situation that we now have, he prefers the Senate bill to the bill which passed the House, and he prefers this procedure to the procedure of going to conference.

Is that the gentleman's understanding?

Mr. ST GERMAN. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. WYLIE. I will be glad to yield.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Mr. Speaker, I might state that indeed we have had lengthy discussions on this, Mr. ROUSSELOT and I. We were actually hoping to dispose of this last Thursday, but because of a trip he had to make we held it off until today.

However, he does wish this. He would prefer the Senate bill, and he does not want to go to conference because if we do go to conference our hope would be to expand the Senate bill. I think the gentleman has a few amendments he wants to discuss.

Mr. WYLIE. Further reserving the right to object, the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) did present to us this morning two amendments which he would like adopted under the unanimous-consent procedure, which I am not certain need to be adopted to satisfy his purpose.

The first one would have to do with the provisions of the House bill with reference to the Sunshine Act, and it would provide all meetings of the boards of directors of the banks, as long as class A stock or Federal guarantees remain outstanding, would be open to the public, as would meetings involving considerations of public concern. As I understand it from a discussion with the gentleman, this subject was taken care of in the Senate bill.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. Both the Senate and the House bills clearly call for open operation, full audits, and surveillance.

Clearly, both have the same thrust for open meetings.

The legislative history is clear. I can assure the gentleman that he is well aware that the subcommittee will continue its oversight of this, and if there is any problem as far as sunshine is concerned there will be quick and deliberate action.

However, I do not hesitate to say that because the legislative history is very clear, the meetings should be conducted in the open.

Mr. WYLIE. I thank the gentleman for that assurance. I wish to assure the Members of the House I do associate myself with the gentleman's assurances in that respect.

The other amendment which concerned the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) had to do with regulatory surveillance over the National Consumer Cooperative Bank activities and referred to examinations and examination reports. In the House bill we provide that the President could establish a procedure for audits and examinations through outside firms, through the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, the Comptroller of the Currency or the Federal Reserve Board. As I understand it, there was a modification in this regard in the Senate bill, that the Senate bill expanded beyond that which we provided in this House. Would the gentleman explain to the House in that respect?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. In essence both the House and the Senate bills do call for an audit. As to the Government agency which would perform the audit or the private agency which would perform the audit, that would be chosen by the President. The only difference is that the Senate bill expands the possibility of audit agencies to include the General Accounting Office, so if indeed we went to conference we would be in a position of accepting the General Accounting Office or not, but we could not substitute the Government Corporation Control Act provision. But, the provisions for full audits and oversight are clear and provide all the necessary controls and protections.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman for his explanation.

With that explanation, I withdraw my reservation of objection.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, is this the so-called Nader bank bill that passed this House on a rollcall by one vote?

Mr. ST GERMAIN. This is the consumer bank bill. Originally sponsored by myself, Mr. WYLIE, Mr. REUSS, and more than 100 Members of the House.

Mr. BAUMAN. I did not mean to disparage the gentleman's authorship in this matter, but I believe the bill passed this body by only one vote.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. It passed the Senate by a vote of 60 to 33. It passed in the House without administration support. Once the bill reached the Senate, we received the administration support.

Mr. BAUMAN. That is more a commentary on the judgment of the other body than anything else.

I think in a controversial matter of this type, creating a whole new Federal agency and hundreds of millions of dollars in spending, it ought to be dealt with in the regular order. I think the gentleman from California ought to be here, and we should all have time to study the matter. I object.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. If the gentleman will withhold his objection to give me an opportunity to explain, I would appreciate it.

Mr. BAUMAN. I will withhold the objection.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. If the gentleman would.

Very sincerely, I have worked with the gentleman from California on a daily basis for many years. He had to be some place else this afternoon, just as he had to be some place else last Thursday and Friday. We have been over this thoroughly with him and the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. STANTON), the ranking minority member. We have polled the Republicans on the committee. There are no objections to proceeding in this manner.

The reason is that frankly the only one who stands to gain by going to conference would be the proponents because we would like to liberalize the bill and increase the amounts. The amounts have been cut back, I would say to the gentleman, from $500 million to $300 million on the authorization for the bank capital and from $250 million to $75 million on the self-help fund.

The borrowings in the private marketplace have been reduced from 10-to-1 to 5-to-1 of capital. The proponents would stand to gain from a conference, but the reason we are following this procedure is to expedite this matter in order not to have to go to conference because of the many conferences and other legislation we are facing.

We have received complete agreement from the gentleman from California, Mr. ROUSSELOT, and the ranking minority member, the gentleman from Ohio, Mr. STANTON.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I am sorry that the gentleman feels that there is some necessity to rush on this matter but all Members should be allowed time to inform themselves on this issue.

Mr. ST GERMAIN. It is not a question of rushing. It passed the Senate 10 days ago. We discussed this last Monday and the gentleman from California, Mr. ROUSSELOT, said let us wait until Thursday morning. He forgot that on Wednesday night he had to leave and could not be here.

I spoke with the gentleman today and he said yes, there is no problem.

Mr. WYLIE. Mr. Speaker, will the gentleman yield?

Mr. BAUMAN. I will yield to the gentleman from Ohio (Mr. WYLIE).

Mr. WYLIE. Of course, if it is a fait accompli, then there is probably no use in proceeding further, but I would say, in all fairness, we did discuss this with the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT). He said that he would prefer accepting the Senate bill to going to conference. He thinks the Senate bill is much better than the House bill, and that if he could get assurances on these two amendments that we have discussed heretofore, that he would have no objection if he were on the House floor. He has taken the leadership, I would say, in the fight against this bill. I honestly feel that we have come up with a procedure which comes closer to what the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) would prefer short of actually defeating the bill.

Mr. BAUMAN. Mr. Speaker, I think that another 24 hours will not hurt anything and we will have the gentleman from California (Mr. ROUSSELOT) here; therefore I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

The Chair would ask for clarification that the objection of the gentleman from Maryland (Mr. BAUMAN) goes to the original unanimous-consent request and not to dispensing with the reading; is that correct?

Mr. BAUMAN. That is correct, and I object.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Objection is heard.

HOUSING AND COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT AMENDMENTS OF 1978

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, I ask unanimous consent to take from the Speaker's table the Senate bill (S. 3084) to amend and extend certain Federal laws relating to housing, community, and neighborhood development and preservation, and related programs, and for other purposes, for the purpose of striking all after the enacting clause of the bill and inserting in lieu thereof the provisions of H.R. 12433, as passed by the House on July 21, 1978, and ask for its immediate consideration.

The Clerk read the title of the Senate bill.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS)?

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, reserving the right to object, and I do not intend to object, it is my understanding that the gentleman from Wisconsin (Mr. REUSS) is asking for consideration of this legislation merely for the purpose of inserting the House language in the Senate bill in anticipation of a conference being requested with the Senate? And if I am correct in that, then I have no objection.

Mr. REUSS. Mr. Speaker, if the gentleman will yield, I will tell the gentleman from Michigan (Mr. BROWN) that that is precisely right and that I have an additional unanimous-consent request which would appoint conferees so that we may go to conference and do our best to uphold the position of the House.

Mr. BROWN of Michigan. Mr. Speaker, I thank the gentleman, and I withdraw my reservation of objection.

The SPEAKER pro tempore. Is there objection to the request of the gentleman from Wisconsin?

There was no objection.

The Clerk read the Senate bill as follows:

S. 3084

Be it enacted by the Senate and House of Representatives of the United States of America in Congress assembled, That this Act may be cited as the "Housing and Community Development Amendments of 1978".

TITLE I—COMMUNITY AND NEIGHBORHOOD DEVELOPMENT AND CONSERVATION

REHABILITATION LOANS

SEC. 101. (a) Section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964 is amended—

(1) by striking out all that follows "projects" in subsection (a) and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "assisted under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937.";

(2) by striking out subsection (c)(3) and inserting in lieu thereof the following:

"(3) The loan shall bear interest at such rate as the Secretary determines to be appropriate, but not to exceed 3 per centum per annum, for loans to families with adjusted incomes of not more than 80 per centum of the median income for the area, or for loans for multifamily properties. For loans to families with adjusted incomes above 80 per centum of the median income for the area, as determined by the Secretary, the Secretary may establish interest rates based on adjusted family income, ranging from above 3 per centum to a rate determined by the Secretary, but in no case may any such rate exceed the current average market yield on outstanding marketable securities of the United States with remaining periods to maturity comparable to the terms of loans made pursuant to this section, adjusted to the nearest one-eighth of 1 per centum. The Secretary may prescribe such other charges adequate in the judgment of the Secretary to cover administrative costs and possible losses under the program.";

(3) by inserting before the semicolon at the end of subsection (c)(4)(A) a comma and "or if such refinancing is deemed necessary by the Secretary to minimize displacement of existing tenants of a multifamily property"; and

(4) by striking out "$50,000" in subsection (c)(4)(B) and inserting in lieu thereof "$100,000".

(b) Section 312(d) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and not to exceed $60,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1977" in the first sentence thereof and inserting in lieu thereof the following: "not to exceed $60,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1977, not to exceed $370,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1978, and not to exceed $370,000,000 for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1979"; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following: "Of the amounts appropriated under this section for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1978, $175,000,000 shall be available only for rehabilitation loans for multifamily properties, and $70,000,000 shall be available only for rehabilitation loans in connection with urban homesteading programs. Of the amounts appropriated under this section for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1979, $175,000,000 shall be available only for rehabilitation loans for multifamily properties, and $70,000,000 shall be available only for rehabilitation loans in connection with urban homesteading programs. The Secretary may administratively increase or reduce the amounts set aside under the preceding sentences for rehabilitation loans for multifamily properties or for urban homesteading, if such increase or reduction is necessary, giving due consideration both to the relative demand and need for different types of rehabilitation loan programs, and to the rate at which the Secretary and State and local governments and agencies can expand, and still effectively administer, the rehabilitation loan programs for multifamily properties and urban homesteading.".

(c) Section 312 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(1) Rehabilitation loans under this section for multifamily properties shall be subject to the following additional limitations and conditions:

"(1) The property must—

"(A) be located in a low- or moderate-income neighborhood designated by the unit of local government for concentrated community development activities; or

"(B) have a majority of tenants of low and moderate income, and be located in a neighborhood characterized by substantial private investment and rising property values resulting in the displacement of low- or moderate-income persons, and the loan must be for the purpose of minimizing such displacement.

All such loans must be consistent with an overall community development strategy that principally benefits low- and moderate-income persons.

"(2) The property must have fewer than one hundred units except where the Secretary determines that a loan under this section is essential to meet the community development needs of a neighborhood, and alternative sources of financing are not available.

"(3) The Secretary shall insure that the preponderance of multifamily property loans under this section are made with respect to properties of thirty or fewer units, but the Secretary shall provide localities the maximum flexibility in meeting housing needs identified in their housing assistance plans.

"(4) When assistance payments under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 are necessary to minimize displacement of existing tenants of the property, the Secretary shall insure that an application for such assistance payments is made in conjunction with the application for a rehabilitation loan and shall make available, to the maximum extent possible and for as long a time as is feasible, such assistance payments for such tenants. The Secretary may enter into agreements with investor-owners receiving such loans, and receiving assistance under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 in connection with such a loan, as provided for in the previous sentence, to ensure that units for which such assistance payments under section 8 are initially received continue to be available for low and moderate income housing for as long a time period as is feasible.

"(5) The Secretary shall enter into an agreement with the investor-owner of a multifamily property which is to be rehabilitated with a loan under this section to limit, for a period of at least five years, the increased rent caused by the rehabilitation.

"(6) Prior to the approval of an application for such a loan, the Secretary shall consider, from evidence of the prior management history of the investor-owner, whether the investor-owner is likely to provide continuing sound management and maintenance of the project, and the Secretary shall require an adequate plan for the future management of the project for which such a loan is made.

"(7) Prior to the approval of an application for such a loan, the Secretary shall insure that there is a program for informing the tenants of the terms of the loan, the possible effects of the loan on rents, and the possible sources of rental assistance for eligible tenants.

"(8) The Secretary shall give maximum possible assistance to investor-owners, particularly smaller investor-owners, of multifamily projects in meeting the application and other requirements of this section.

"(9) The Secretary shall adopt administrative measures to limit the use of a rehabilitation loan for a multifamily property in conjunction with tax syndication financing under the Internal Revenue Code of 1954 except where the Secretary determines the combination is needed to assure the feasibility of the project.

"(10) The Secretary shall make a maximum possible effort to minimize displacement and hardships due to temporary displacement which are caused by rehabilitation loans with respect to multifamily properties.

"(11) The Secretary shall encourage the use of private funds in conjunction with such loans when such private involvement is feasible and does not increase displacement.

"(12) The Secretary may impose additional limitations and conditions on the use and availability of rehabilitation loans for multifamily properties.

"(j) In carrying out the provisions of this section in connection with an urban homesteading program approved under section 810 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, the Secretary shall—

"(1) be authorized to use, and shall use, a portion of the funds set aside under subsection (d) for urban homesteading programs for a demonstration program to explore the feasibility of carrying out, on a national basis, an urban homesteading program involving multifamily properties; and

"(2) provide rehabilitation loan funds for use in a locally developed homesteading program only if that program meets the requirements of section 810(b) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

"(k) In conjunction with the annual report required under section 113(a) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974, the Secretary shall submit to the Congress a report on the rehabilitation loan program. Such report shall include a summary of the use of funds under this section, particularly with regard to the types of neighborhoods and persons aided under this section, and an evaluation of progress made toward community development goals under this section. As soon as feasible, but not later than December 1, 1979, the Secretary shall submit to Congress an interim report evaluating the use of funds under this section for multifamily properties, with legislative recommendations for improving the overall effectiveness of Federal assistance for the rehabilitation of multifamily properties.".

(d) Section 312(h) of such Act is amended by striking out "1979" each place it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "1980".

URBAN HOMESTEADING

SEC. 102. (a) Section 810(b) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended by inserting before the last sentence thereof the following: "The Secretary may provide for the homesteading of properties in areas other than those where community services and facilities are being upgraded in any case where the Secretary determines such action to be appropriate and such action was requested by the unit of local government, State, or agency involved.".

(b) Subsection (f) of such section is amended—

(1) by inserting "and the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs" after "Secretary" the first place it appears; and

(2) by inserting "or the Administrator" after "Secretary" the second place it appears.

(c) The first sentence of subsection (g) of such section is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" after "fiscal year 1977,"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and not to exceed $26,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979".

(d) Section 810 of such Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating subsection (g) as subsection (j); and

(2) by inserting after subsection (f) the following:

"(g) The Secretary is authorized to make a grant to reimburse any unit of general local government, State, or designated agency participating in the urban homesteading program under this section for administrative costs incurred by that unit of general local government, State, or designated agency in carrying out its urban homesteading program. The amount of any such grant may not exceed $60,000.

"(h) The Secretary is authorized to make grants to units of general local government, States, and designated agencies to facilitate the homesteading of properties acquired as result of abandonment, tax foreclosure, or otherwise by paying any mechanic's liens or tax liens against such properties. The amount of any grant under this subsection to any unit of general local government, State, or designated agency for any fiscal year shall not exceed for each property made available to the urban homesteading program during that year the lesser of $5,000 or the amount of any lien against the property. The aggregate amount of grants under this subsection shall not exceed $36,000,000.

"(i) The Secretary is authorized to acquire from the Administrator of Veterans' Affairs any property held by the Administrator which is suitable for inclusion in an urban homesteading program, and to reimburse the Administrator in an amount to be agreed upon by the Administrator and the Secretary for each such property.".

(e) Subsection (j) of such section, as redesignated, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "In addition, to carry out subsections (g) and (h), there are authorized to be appropriated not to exceed $45,000,000 for fiscal year 1979.".

(f) Section 312(d) of the Housing Act of 1964, as amended by section 101 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Of the amount available for urban homesteading programs, the Secretary shall make available $8,000 for each property conveyed in connection with an urban homesteading program under section 810 of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974. Any amount available to a unit of general local government, State, or designated agency under the preceding sentence but not used for such purpose shall remain available to that unit, State, or agency for not to exceed one year for the rehabilitation of other properties in accordance with this section.".

COMMUNITY DEVELOPMENT BLOCK GRANT PROGRAM AMENDMENTS

SEC. 103. (a) Section 104(a)(4) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) by inserting "owners of homes requiring rehabilitation assistance," after "large families," in clause (A); and

(2) by inserting "including existing rental and owner occupied dwelling units to be upgraded and thereby preserved," after "existing dwelling units," in clause (B)(i).

(b) Section 105(a)(11) of such Act is amended to read as follows:

"(11) relocation payments and assistance for displaced individuals, families, businesses, organizations, and farm operations, when determined by the grantee to be appropriate to the community development program;".

URBAN DEVELOPMENT ACTION GRANTS

SEC. 104. (a) Section 119(c) of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" at the end of clause (4);

(2) by striking out the period at the end of clause (5) and inserting in lieu thereof "; and"; and

(3) by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(6) include a statement analyzing the impact of the proposed urban development action program on the residents, particularly those of low and moderate income, of the residential neighborhood, and on the neighborhood, in which the program is to be located.".

(b) Section 119(e) of such Act is amended by inserting before "and feasibility" the following: "impact of the proposed urban development action program on the residents, particularly those of low and moderate income, of the residential neighborhood, and on the neighborhood, in which the program is to be located;".

(c) Title I of such act is amended by adding the following new section at the end thereof:

"FAIR PARTICIPATION FOR SMALL COMMUNITIES

"SEC. 120. No community shall be barred from participating in any program authorized under this title solely on the basis of population, except as expressly authorized by statute.".

(c) Section 119(b) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "For the purpose of the preceding sentence, a city or urban county is severely distressed and eligible for assistance under this section if it contains one or more areas which have the levels of physical and economic distress set forth in the minimum standards referred to in the preceding sentence. As used in the preceding sentence, the term 'areas' means one or more contiguous census tracts having a population of at least ten thousand persons.".

TITLE II—HOUSING ASSISTANCE PROGRAMS

LOW-INCOME HOUSING

SEC. 201. (a) The first sentence of section 5(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" immediately following "October 1, 1976,"; and

(2) by inserting immediately after "on October 1, 1977," the following: "and by $1,195,043,000 on October 1, 1978".

(b) Section 5(c) of such Act is amended by inserting after the fourth sentence the following: "Of the additional authority to enter into contracts for annual contributions provided on October 1, 1978, and approved in appropriation Acts, the Secretary shall make available not less than $50,000,000 for modernization of low-income housing projects.".

(c) Effective on October 1, 1978, section 5(c) of such Act is amended by striking out the second and fourth sentences thereof.

(d) Section 8(e) of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(5) For the purpose of upgrading and thereby preserving the Nation's housing stock, the Secretary is authorized, notwithstanding any other provision of this section, to make assistance payments under this section directly or through public housing agencies pursuant to contracts with owners or prospective owners who agree to upgrade housing so as to make and keep such housing decent, safe, and sanitary through upgrading which involves less than substantial rehabilitation, as such upgrading and rehabilitation are defined by the Secretary. The Secretary is authorized to prescribe such terms and conditions for contracts entered into under this section pursuant to this paragraph as the Secretary determines to be necessary and appropriate, except that such terms and conditions, to the maximum extent feasible, shall be consistent with terms and conditions otherwise applicable with respect to other dwelling units assisted under this section. The Secretary is also authorized to make assistance available under this section pursuant to this paragraph to any unit in a housing project which, on an overall basis, reflects the need for such upgrading.".

(e) Section 9(c) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "and" immediately following "on or after October 1, 1976,"; and

(2) by inserting immediately before the period at the end thereof a comma and the following: "and not to exceed $729,000,000 on or after October 1, 1978".

(f) Section 3(2)(D) of such Act is amended by striking out "10" where it appears and inserting in lieu thereof "20".

HOUSING FOR THE HANDICAPPED

SEC. 202. (a) Section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(h) Of the amounts made available in appropriation Acts for loans pursuant to subsection (a)(4)(C) for the fiscal year commencing on October 1, 1978, not less than $50,000,000 shall be available for loans for the development of rental housing and related facilities specifically designed to meet the needs of the handicapped (primarily nonelderly) persons. The Secretary shall take such steps as may be necessary to assure that—

"(1) funds made available pursuant to this subsection will be used to support innovative methods of meeting the needs of handicapped persons by providing a variety of housing options, ranging from small group homes to independent living complexities; and

"(2) housing and related facilities assisted under this subsection will provide handicapped persons occupying units within such housing with an assured range of services specified under subsection (f) and the opportunity for optimal independent living and participation in normal daily activities, and will facilitate access by such persons to the community at large and to suitable employment opportunities within such community.".

(b) The second sentence of section 202(a)(4)(C) of such Act is amended—

(1) by striking out "in any fiscal year" immediately after "under this section"; and

(2) by striking out "for such year" immediately after "authority established".

(c) Section 202(d)(3) of such Act is amended by inserting "the cost of moveables necessary to the basic operation of the project as determined by the Secretary," immediately after "related facilities,".

PUBLIC HOUSING SECURITY DEMONSTRATION

SEC. 203. (a) This section may be cited as the "Public Housing Security Demonstration Act of 1978".

(b)(1) The Congress finds that—

(A) low-income and elderly public housing residents of the Nation, who are already subject to difficult living conditions and have suffered substantially from rising crime and violence, are being threatened as a result of inadequate security arrangements for the prevention of physical violence, theft, burglary, and other crimes;

(B) such residents, living in an insecure housing environment, have restricted their lives and use of the environment because of their concern about crime, and are abandoning public housing projects at a time when there is an increasing demand for public housing units;

(C) higher vacancy rates and heavy financial losses of management in some cases have led to complete abandonment of public housing projects;

(D) an integral part of successfully providing decent, safe, and sanitary dwellings for low-income persons is to insure that the housing is secure;

(E) local public housing authorities have inadequate security arrangements for the prevention of crime and vandalism, and lack specific operating funds to provide security measures; and

(F) action is needed to provide for the security of public housing residents and to preserve the Nation's investment in its public housing stock.

(2) It is therefore declared to be the policy of the United States to provide for the demonstration and evaluation of more effective means of mitigating crime and vandalism in public housing projects and for the development of a comprehensive program for reducing crime and vandalism in all the Nation's public housing projects.

(c)(1) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development shall promptly initiate and carry out a program for the development, demonstration, and evaluation of improved, innovative community anticrime and security methods, concepts, and techniques which will mitigate the level of crime in public housing projects and their surrounding neighborhoods.

(2) In selecting public housing projects to receive assistance under this section, the Secretary shall consider the extent of crime and vandalism currently existing, the nature and quality of community anticrime efforts in the projects and surrounding areas, the nature and quality of police and other protective services to the projects and their tenants, the vacancy rate and demand for public housing in the locality, and the extent of abandonment of public housing units. Priority shall be given to comprehensive community anticrime and security plans submitted by public housing authorities which provide for the restoration of abandoned dwelling units, coordination between public housing management and local government in providing increased security and social services to the projects and tenants, and maximum opportunity for tenant involvement and employment in the community anticrime and security programs.

(3) In carrying out the provisions of this section, the Secretary shall coordinate and jointly target resources with other agencies, particularly the Law Enforcement Assistance Administration, the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, the Department of Labor, the Community Services Administration, and ACTION.

(d) The community anticrime and security methods, concepts, and techniques utilized in this demonstration and evaluation may include improved physical security equipment for dwelling units in these projects, new concepts for social and environmental design, tenant awareness and volunteer programs, tenant participation and employment in providing security services, and such other measures as deemed necessary or appropriate by the Secretary.

(e) The Secretary shall initiate and carry out a survey of crime currently existing in the Nation's public housing projects, and transmit a report on such survey to the Congress not later than eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act. This report shall include the level of crime and the extent of vandalism existing in public housing projects, findings from the demonstration and evaluation of various methods of reducing the level of crime, and recommendations, if appropriate, for a comprehensive public housing program to provide increased community anticrime and security concepts and techniques to all public housing projects, and the estimated costs of such program.

(f) Section 9(c) of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "Of the additional authority to make annual contributions under this section provided for the fiscal year beginning on October 1, 1978, not to exceed $10,000,000 shall be available to carry out the Public Housing Security Demonstration Act of 1978.".

HOMEOWNERS REHABILITATION ASSISTANCE

SEC. 204. (a) Section 5(e) of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended by section 201 of this Act, is amended by adding after the fifth sentence the following: "Of the additional authority to enter into contracts for annual contributions provided on October 1, 1978, and approved in appropriation Acts, the Secretary shall make available not less than $30,000,000 for contracts for annual contributions for assistance payments under section 8(i).".

(b) Section 8(d)(2) of such Act is amended by inserting after "under this section" the following: ", including under subsection (i),".

(c) Section 8 of such Act is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(i)(1) The Secretary is authorized to enter into contracts under this section with public housing agencies pursuant to which such agencies may make assistance payments with respect to loans made to finance the rehabilitation of one- to four-family dwelling units owned and occupied by lower income families where the rehabilitation is carried out in accordance with a locally developed plan for rehabilitation in designated neighborhoods which meets the requirements of or is contained in an applicable housing assistance plan. In extending such assistance, the public housing agency, or an agency of local government or other nonprofit entity participating in neighborhood rehabilitation and designated by the local government or the Secretary shall provide homeowner counseling and monitoring concerning the extent of repair, renovation, or rehabilitation activities and the eligibility of contractors to conduct such activities.

"(2) The amount of assistance payments under such contracts shall be—

"(A) the lesser of (i) the monthly costs of principal, interest, and other amounts for repayment of the loan made in accordance with paragraph (3) of this subsection, or (ii) an amount determined under subsection (c)(3), except that the term 'maximum monthly rent' as used in such subsection shall be deemed to mean the total monthly housing cost of the owner; and

"(B) shall be periodically paid to the lender, in accordance with such regulations as the Secretary may prescribe.

"(3) Contracts under this subsection may be entered into only with respect to loans—

"(A) made by federally chartered or federally insured financial institutions or by other entities approved by the Secretary or by the unit of local government in accord with regulations of the Secretary;

"(B) which finance activities which have been approved by the applicable unit of local government, directly or through the entity designated under paragraph (1), or which could be financed with home improvement loans under title I of the National Housing Act;

"(C) which finance the performance of home improvement and rehabilitation activities by the owner of the unit involved, or by contractors approved by the applicable unit of local government, directly or through the entity designated under paragraph (1); and

"(D) which have maturities, maximum amounts, and interest rates not in excess of those applicable to loans under title I of the National Housing Act.

"(4) The Secretary is authorized to prescribe such regulations as may be necessary to assure that the costs of eligible repair, renovation, or rehabilitation activities assisted under this section do not exceed the costs necessary to bring the housing unit into conformity with local housing codes or other appropriate standards.".

ASSISTANCE FOR MOBILE HOME OWNERS

SEC. 205. Section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, as amended by section 204 of this Act, is amended by adding at the end thereof the following new subsection:

"(j)(1) The Secretary may enter into annual contributions contracts under this subsection for the purpose of assisting lower income families by making rental assistance payments with respect to real property on which is located a mobile home which is owned by any such family and utilized by such family as its principal residence. In carrying out this subsection, the Secretary (A) may enter into annual contributions contracts with public housing agencies pursuant to which such agencies may enter into contracts to make such assistance payments to the owners of such real property, or (B) enter into such contracts directly with the owners of such real property.

"(2) Contracts entered into pursuant to this subsection shall establish the maximum monthly rent (including maintenance and management charges) which the owner is entitled to receive for each space on which a mobile home is located and with respect to which assistance payments are to be made. The maximum monthly rent shall not exceed by more than 10 per centum the fair market rental established by the Secretary periodically (but not less than annually) with respect to the market area for the rental of real property suitable for occupancy by families assisted under this subsection. The provisions of subsection (c)(2) of this section shall apply to the adjustments of maximum monthly rents under this subsection.

"(3) The amount of any monthly assistance payment with respect to any family assisted under this subsection shall be the difference between 25 per centum of one-twelfth of the annual income of such family and the sum of—

"(A) the monthly payment made by such family to amortize the cost of purchasing the mobile home;

"(B) monthly utility payments made by such family, subject to reasonable limitations prescribed by the Secretary; and

"(C) the maximum monthly rent permitted with respect to the real property which is rented by such family for the purpose of locating its mobile home; except that in no case may such assistance exceed the total amount of such maximum monthly rent.

"(4) Each contract entered into under this subsection shall be for a term of not less than one month and not more than one hundred and eighty months.

"(5) The Secretary may prescribe other terms and conditions which are necessary for the purpose of carrying out the provisions of this subsection and which are consistent with the purposes of this subsection.".

OPERATING ASSISTANCE FOR TROUBLED MULTIFAMILY HOUSING PROJECTS

SEC. 206. (a) The purpose of this section is to provide assistance to restore or maintain the financial soundness, and to maintain the low- to moderate-income character, of certain projects assisted or approved for assistance under the National Housing Act or under the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965.

(b) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (hereafter in this title referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to make and to contract to make, in accordance with the provisions of this section, assistance payments to owners of rental or cooperative housing projects meeting the requirements of this section.

(c) A rental or cooperative housing project shall be initially eligible for assistance under this section only if such project—

(1)(A) is assisted or approved for assistance under section 236 of the National Housing Act or is covered by a mortgage (including a mortgage assigned to the Secretary) insured under such Act and assisted or approved for assistance under the proviso of section 221(d)(5) of such Act or under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, except that, in the case of any such project which is not insured under the National Housing Act, such assistance may not be provided before October 1, 1979, or (B)" ; and meet the criteria specified in clause (A) of this sentence and has been acquired and sold by the Secretary, subject to a mortgage insured or held by the Secretary, to a purchaser with whom, at the time of sale, there is an agreement to maintain the low- to moderate-income character of the project, and

(2) meets such other requirements as the Secretary, in the Secretary's discretion, may prescribe.

Assistance payments may be made available under this section with respect to projects meeting the criteria specified in clause (1)(B) of the first sentence of this subsection, which are sold on or after the effective date of this section, only if the Secretary provides at the time of sale that such assistance payments will or may be made available for the project.

(d) No assistance payments shall be made under this section unless the Secretary has determined that (1) such payments are necessary to restore or maintain the economic soundness of the project and to maintain its low- to moderate-income character, (2) the project is being operated and managed in accordance with a management improvement and operating plan approved by the Secretary, and (3) the owner of the project, together with the mortgagee in the case of a project not insured under the National Housing Act, has provided or has agreed to provide assistance to the project in such manner as the Secretary may determine.

(e) Any assistance payments made pursuant to this section with respect to any project shall be made on an annual basis, payable at such intervals as the Secretary may determine, and may be in any amount which the Secretary, in the Secretary's discretion, determines to be consistent with the purpose of this section, but shall not exceed the differential, as determined by the Secretary, between the projected income to be received for the project, and the estimated expense and costs of operating the project, during the period for which such payments are made. For purposes of this section, such projected income shall include all anticipated rental and other income, and all housing subsidies, as defined by the Secretary, to or on behalf of the project or residents thereof, taking into account the income level of such residents, and shall include interest differentials or any other payments to a mortgagee. Such estimated expense shall reflect such necessary operating costs as, but not limited to, taxes, utilities, maintenance, management, insurance, debt service and repairs, and such other allowances related to the costs of operating the project as the Secretary may approve, and shall be based on an annual operating budget for the project submitted by the owner and approved by the Secretary, taking into account such standards for operating costs in the area as may be determined by the Secretary.

(f) In order to carry out the purposes of this section, the Secretary is authorized, notwithstanding the provisions of section 236(f)(1) of the National Housing Act, to provide, in the Secretary's discretion, that, for purposes of establishing a rental charge under section 236(f)(1) of such Act, there may be excluded from the computation of the cost of operating a project an amount equivalent to the amount of assistance payments available for the project pursuant to this section.

(g) The Secretary may, at any time, approve adjustments in such annual operating budget and in the amount of such assistance payments to the extent that the Secretary determines that such adjustments are necessary and appropriate to reflect increases or decreases in the amount of income to the project or in the actual and necessary expenses of operating the project. Any continuation of such payments beyond the first annual period for which the payments are made shall be in the Secretary's discretion, and shall be subject to the provisions of the second sentence of subsection (c) and such other criteria as the Secretary may prescribe.

(h) The Secretary is authorized to issue such rules and regulations as may be necessary to carry out the provisions and purposes of this section, including regulations requiring the establishment of a project reserve or such other safeguards as the Secretary determines to be necessary for the financial soundness of any project for which assistance payments are provided.

(i) There are authorized to be appropriated for the purpose of making payments under this section not to exceed $74,000,000 for the fiscal year 1979, and not to exceed $96,000,000 for the fiscal year 1980. Any amounts appropriated under this section shall remain available until expended. Notwithstanding any provision of section 236(g) of the National Housing Act, all rental charges in excess of the basic rental charges which are credited to the reserve fund established pursuant to section 236(g) of such Act after September 30, 1977, shall be merged with and be in addition to any appropriation under this subsection, and all such excess rental charges collected and paid to the Secretary after September 30, 1978, shall be credited to and be in addition to any appropriation under this subsection.

TENANT PARTICIPATION IN MULTIFAMILY HOUSING PROJECTS

SEC. 207. (a) The purpose of this section is to recognize the importance and benefits of cooperation and participation of tenants in creating a suitable living environment in multifamily housing projects and in contributing to the successful operation of such projects, including their good physical condition, proper maintenance, security, energy efficiency, and control of operating costs. For the purpose of this section, the term "multifamily housing project" means a project which (1) is covered by a mortgage (including a mortgage assigned to the Secretary) insured under the National Housing Act and assisted or approved for assistance under section 236 or the provisions of section 221(d)(5) of such Act or under section 101 of the Housing and Urban Development Act of 1965, or (2) meet the criteria specified in clause (1) of this sentence and has been acquired and sold by the Secretary, subject to a mortgage insured or held by the Secretary, to a purchaser with whom, at the time of sale, there is an agreement to maintain the low- to moderate-income character of the project, or (3) is owned by the Secretary or covered by a mortgage insured under the National Housing Act or held by the Secretary and is determined by the Secretary to be serving predominantly low- and moderate-income tenants.

(b) To achieve the purpose of this section, the Secretary shall adopt such measures as the Secretary deems appropriate to assure that—

(1) tenants have adequate notice of, reasonable access to relevant information about, and an opportunity to comment on, major actions determined by the Secretary to affect rents, physical condition, or management of multifamily housing projects, and, in the case of a project owned by the Secretary, proposed disposition of the project;

(2) project owners cooperate in reasonable efforts to assist tenants in obtaining rent subsidies or other public assistance;

(3) tenants are not evicted without good cause or without adequate notice of proposed eviction and the reasons therefor: and

(4) project owners cooperate with resident tenant organizations, and do not interfere with the right of tenants to organize such organizations.

In carrying out the provisions of this section the Secretary is authorized to take such actions, and to prescribe such standards for compliance, as the Secretary deems appropriate to achieve the purposes thereof, including approval of reasonable expenditures from project income to support activities of resident tenants' organizations.

MANAGEMENT AND PRESERVATION OF HUD-OWNED MULTIFAMILY HOUSING PROJECTS

SEC. 208. (a) It is the policy of the United States that the Secretary shall manage and dispose of multifamily housing projects which are owned by the Secretary in a manner consistent with the purposes of the National Housing Act. Toward that end, the goals of the property management and disposition program of the Department of Housing and Urban Development shall be—

(1) to dispose of projects in a manner which will be less costly to the Federal Government than other reasonable alternatives by which the Secretary could further the goals set forth in clauses (2) through (6), protect the financial interests of the Government, and produce a satisfactory return to the mortgage insurance funds;

(2) to preserve housing units which are available to and affordable by low- and moderate-income families;

(3) to preserve and revitalize residential neighborhoods;

(4) to maintain existing housing stock in a decent, safe and sanitary condition;

(5) to minimize the displacement of tenants; and

(6) to demolish projects only as a last resort.

In pursuit of those goals, the Secretary is authorized to balance competing considerations relating to individual projects in a manner which the Secretary deems will further the achievement of the overall purpose of this section.

(b)(1) Notwithstanding the provisions of the Federal Property and Administrative Services Act of 1949 or any other provision of law, the Secretary is authorized, in carrying out the goals set forth in subsection (a) of this section and in addition to any other power or authority vested in the Secretary—

(A) to dispose of a multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary on a negotiated, competitive bid, or other basis, to a purchaser determined by the Secretary to be qualified to satisfy conditions of the disposition, and on such terms as the Secretary deems appropriate considering the low- and moderate-income character of the project and the goals set forth in subsection (a); and

(B) to contract for management services for a multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary on a negotiated, competitive bid, or other basis at a price determined by the Secretary to be reasonable.

(2) In evaluating the qualifications of potential managers for, and purchasers of, multifamily housing projects which are owned by the Secretary, the Secretary shall consider, but not be limited to considering, the following factors:

(A) ability to implement sound financial management;

(B) ability to provide sound physical management;

(C) ability to respond to the economic and social needs of lower income tenants and to work cooperatively with resident organizations;

(D) responsiveness of the proposed management plan to the needs of the property and residents thereof;

(E) adequacy of organizational, staff, and financial resources to implement the proposed management program; and

(F) the cost of services.

(c) The Secretary shall maintain all occupied multifamily housing projects owned by the Secretary in a decent, safe, and sanitary condition.

(d) The Secretary shall, to the greatest extent possible, maintain full occupancy in all multifamily housing projects which are owned by the Secretary.

(e) The Secretary shall make reasonable efforts to encourage the employment and training of tenants of multifamily housing projects owned by the Secretary and lower income residents of the neighborhoods in which such projects are located in the repair and maintenance of such projects.

(f) The Secretary is authorized to consult with, and to furnish technical assistance to, tenants and organizations for the purpose of developing, where appropriate, nonprofit cooperatives which will purchase multifamily housing projects owned by the Secretary, and to develop tenant management capabilities prior to any such sale.

(g)(1) Whenever tenants will be displaced as a result of the disposition of, or repairs to, a multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary, the Secretary shall identify tenants who will be displaced, shall notify all such tenants of their pending displacement and relocation assistance to be provided.

(2) The Secretary shall seek to assure maximum opportunity for any such tenant (A) to return, whenever possible, to a repaired unit, (B) to occupy a unit in another multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary, (C) to obtain housing assistance under the United States Housing Act of 1937, or (D) to receive such other relocation assistance as the Secretary determines to be appropriate.

(h) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, whenever the Secretary is requested to accept assignment of a mortgage insured by the Secretary which covers a multifamily housing project, and the Secretary determines that partial payment would be less costly to the Federal Government than other reasonable alternatives for maintaining the low- and moderate-income character of the project, the Secretary may request the mortgagee in lieu of assignment, to accept partial payment of the claim under the mortgage insurance contract and to recast the mortgage, under such terms and conditions as the Secretary may determine. As a condition to a partial claim payment under this section, the mortgagor shall agree to repay to the Secretary the amount of such payment and such obligation shall be secured by a second mortgage on the property on such terms and conditions as the Secretary may determine.

(i) For purposes of this section, the term "multifamily housing project" means a multifamily project which is determined by the Secretary to be serving predominantly low- and moderate-income tenants.

SALES TO COOPERATIVES

SEC. 209. Section 246 of the National Housing Act is amended to read as follows:

"SALES TO COOPERATIVES

"SEC. 246. In any case in which the Secretary sells a multifamily housing project acquired as the result of a default on a mortgage which was insured under this Act to a cooperative which will operate it on a nonprofit basis and restrict permanent occupancy of its dwellings to members, or to a nonprofit corporation which operates as a consumer cooperative as defined by the Secretary, the Secretary may accept a purchase money mortgage, or upon application of the mortgagee, insure a mortgage under this section upon such terms and conditions as the Secretary determines are reasonable and appropriate, in a principal amount equal to the value of the property at the time of purchase, which value shall be based upon a mortgage amount on which the debt service can be met from the income of the property when operated on a nonprofit basis after payment of all operating expenses, taxes and required reserves, except that the Secretary may, at the Secretary's discretion, add to the mortgage amount an amount not greater than the amount of prepaid expenses and costs involved in achieving cooperative ownership, or make such other provision for payment of such expenses and costs as the Secretary deems reasonable and appropriate. Prior to such disposition of a project, funds may be expended by the Secretary for necessary repairs and improvements.".

HOUSING ACCESS

SEC. 210. The Secretary shall require any purchaser of a multifamily housing project owned by the Secretary to agree not to refuse unreasonably to lease a vacant dwelling unit in the project which rents for an amount not greater than the fair market rent for a comparable unit in the area as determined by the Secretary under section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 to a holder of a certificate of eligibility under that section solely because of such prospective tenant's status as a certificate holder.

SOLAR UNITS

SEC. 211. (a) It is the purpose of this section to promote and extend the application of viable solar energy installations as the most dependable, pollution-free and desirable source of energy for residential single-family and multifamily housing units.

(b)(1) The Secretary, in carrying out programs and activities under section 312 of the Housing Act of 1964, section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959, and section 8 of the United States Housing Act of 1937, shall permit the installation of solar units which are economically feasible.

(2) For the purposes of this section, the term "solar units" means—

(A) solar thermal energy equipment which is either of the active type based upon mechanically forced energy transfer or of the passive type based on convective, conducive, or radiant energy transfer or some combination of these types,

(B) photovoltaic cells and related equipment,

(C) a product or purpose the primary purpose of which is conservation of energy through devices or techniques which increase the energy efficiency of existing equipment, methods of operation, or systems which use fossil fuels, and which is on the Energy Conservation Measures List of the Secretary of Energy or which the Secretary determines to be consistent with the intent of this subsection,

(D) equipment the primary purpose of which is production of energy from wood, biological waste, grain, or other biomass source of energy,

(E) equipment the primary purpose of which is district heating,

(F) hydroelectric power equipment,

(G) wind energy conversion equipment, or

(H) engineering, architectural, consulting, or other professional services which are necessary or appropriate to aid citizens in using any of the measures described in subparagraphs (A) through (G).

(c) The Secretary shall develop, within twelve months after the date of enactment of this section, guidelines to determine the long-term economic feasibility of solar units, as compared to convention energy sources. These guidelines shall take into account factors which shall include but are not limited to the following—

(1) capital requirements, interest charges, projected operating and maintenance costs for solar units, and

(2) projected increases in the cost of other energy source in the city, town, or region for comparable housing which generally meets applicable model building codes, insulation and other standards recommended by the American Society of Heating, Refrigerating and Air Conditioning Engineers, the National Electric Manufacturers Association, or other standards or codes acceptable to the Secretary.

(d) The Secretary shall take such steps as may be necessary to promote the installation of economically feasible solar units in residential single-family and multifamily housing, taking into account the interests of low-income homeowners and renters. These actions shall include the implementation of a plan of action to publicize the availability and feasibility of solar units to current or potential recipients of assistance under the programs and projects of the Department of Housing and Urban Development.

(e) The Secretary shall, in conjunction with the Secretary of Energy, transmit to the Congress, within eighteen months after the date of enactment of this Act, a report setting forth—

(1) the number of solar units which were contracted for or installed or which are on order under the provisions of subsection (b)(1) of this section during the first twelve full calendar months after the date of enactment of this Act;

(2) the number of solar units within each region of the Department of Housing and Urban Development which are projected to be contracted for, installed, or under order by the end of calendar year 1985, under all programs and projects within the Department of Housing and Urban Development;

(3) recommendations to increase the number of units referred to in clause (2) of this section to the maximum feasible number of solar units which could be contracted for, installed or placed under order by the end of calendar year 1985 given a reasonable range of economic assumptions and specifying alternative Federal incentives which might be used and the costs of each;

(4) recommendations as to the most effective Federal incentives and actions to increase the affordability of solar units in single-family or multi-family housing units during the first five years after the installation of the applicable solar units; and

(5) an analysis of the feasibility of using community-scale solar energy and other alternative energy approaches and their applicability to activities carried out under title I of the Housing and Community Development Act of 1974.

TITLE IV—CONGREGATE SERVICES

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 401. This title may be cited as the "Congregate Housing Services Act of 1978".

DECLARATION OF FINDINGS

SEC. 402. The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) in keeping with the traditional American principle of individual dignity and independence, innovative and comprehensive means are required to permit frail and handicapped elderly individuals the full and free enjoyment of their lives within their own households;

(2) congregate housing, supplemented by supportive services, offers a proven and cost-effective means of enabling such individuals to maintain their dignity and independence through the avoidance of costly and unnecessary institutionalization;

(3) such supportive services can also provide significant assistance to nonelderly handicapped individuals in their efforts to live independently within their own households;

(4) although existing law requires the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development to encourage public housing agencies to provide congregate housing which meets the special needs of elderly and handicapped individuals, a large and growing number of such residents of public housing face premature and unnecessary institutionalization because of a gap in the spectrum of housing choices due to critical deficiencies in the availability, adequacy, coordination, or delivery of the supportive services required for the successful development of adequate numbers of congregate public housing units; and

(5)(A) within the context of public housing management, there exists an inseparable bond between congregate housing and supplementary supportive services, and

(B) security and continuity of funding for a coordinated service package addressing the full range of the needs of frail and handicapped elderly individuals are required to respond successfully to the requirements of this expanding segment of the Nation's population.

AUTHORIZATION OF CONTRACT AUTHORITY

SEC. 403. (a) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development (hereinafter referred to as the "Secretary") is authorized to enter into contracts with local public housing agencies (hereinafter referred to as "public housing agencies") under the United States Housing Act of 1937 and nonprofit corporations, utilizing sums appropriated under this title, to provide congregate services programs for handicapped elderly households, nonelderly handicapped households, or temporarily disabled households, who are residents of congregate housing projects of those agencies or nonprofit corporations (hereinafter referred to as "eligible project residents") in order to promote and encourage maximum independence within a home environment for such households capable of self-care with appropriate supportive services. Each contract between the Secretary and a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall be for a term of not less than three years nor more than five years and shall be renewable at the expiration of such term. Each public housing agency or nonprofit corporation entering into such a contract shall be reserved a sum equal to its total approved contract authority from the moneys authorized and appropriated for the fiscal year in which the notification date of funding approved falls.

(b) Public housing agencies and nonprofit corporations receiving assistance for congregate services programs under this title shall be required to maintain the same dollar amount of annual contribution which they were making, if any, in support of the provision of services eligible for assistance under this title prior to their initial notification date of funding approval, unless the Secretary determines that the waiver of this requirement is necessary for the maintenance of adequate levels of services to eligible project residents. If any contract or lease entered into by a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation pursuant to section 405(a)(1) provides for adjustments in payments for services to reflect changes in the cost of living, then the amount of annual contribution required to be maintained by such public housing agency or nonprofit corporation under the preceding sentence shall be readjusted in the same manner.

(c) The second sentence of section 7 of the United States Housing Act of 1937 is amended to read as follows: "As used in this section, the term 'congregate housing' means (A) low-rent housing which, as of January 1, 1979, was built or under construction, with which there is connected a central dining facility where wholesome and economical meals can be served to such occupants; or (B) low-rent housing constructed after, but not under construction prior to, January 1, 1979, connected with which there is a central dining facility to provide wholesome and economical meals for such occupants. Such occupants of congregate housing may also be provided with other supportive services appropriate to their needs under the Congregate Housing Services Act of 1978.".

DEFINITIONS

SEC. 404. For the purpose of this title—

(1) the term "elderly" means sixty-two years of age or over;

(2) the term "handicapped" means an impairment which (A) is expected to be of long-continued and indefinite duration, (B) substantially impedes an individual's ability to live independently, and (C) is of such a nature that such ability could be improved by more suitable housing conditions. Such impairment may include a functional disability or frailty which is a normal consequence of the human aging process, and may also include a developmental disability, as defined in section 102(7) of the Mental Retardation Facilities and Community Mental Health Centers Construction Act of 1963;

(3) the term "household" means one or more persons residing in a public housing project or project assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959;

(4) the term "temporarily disabled" means an impairment which (A) is expected to be of no more than six months' duration, (B) substantially impedes an individual's ability to live independently, (C) may result in displacement from a congregate housing project, and (D) is of such a nature that such ability could be improved by more suitable housing conditions;

(5) the term "congregate services programs" means programs to be undertaken by a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation to provide assistance to handicapped elderly households or nonelderly handicapped households or temporarily disabled households who, with such assistance, can remain independent and avoid unnecessary institutionalization;

(6) the term "personal assistance" means service provided under this title which may include, but is not limited to, aid given to eligible project residents in grooming, dressing, and other activities which maintain personal appearance and hygiene;

(7) the term "professional assessment committee" means a group of at least three persons and shall include qualified medical professionals and other persons professionally competent to appraise the functional abilities of elderly or permanently disabled adult persons in relation to the performance of the normal tasks of daily living. Such appraisal should determine whether project residents require assistance in one or more of at least the following activities of daily living; (i) eating, (ii) bathing, (iii) grooming, (iv) dressing, (v) toileting, and (vi) ambulation; and

(8) the term "nonprofit corporation" means any corporation responsible for a housing project assisted under section 202 of the Housing Act of 1959.

SERVICES

SEC. 405. (a)(1) Any public housing agency or nonprofit corporation receiving assistance under this title may provide congregate services directly to eligible project residents or may, by contract or lease, provide such services through other appropriate agencies or providers.

(2) In any case, any such public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall consult with the Area Agency on Aging (or, where no Area Agency on Aging exists, with the appropriate State agency under the Older Americans Act of 1965) in determining the means of providing services under the preceding sentence, and in identifying available sources of funding for such services other than assistance under this title.

(3) Prior to the submission of an application for either new or renewed funding under this title a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall present a draft application to the Area Agency on Aging (or, where no Area Agency on Aging exists, to the appropriate State agency under the Older Americans Act of 1965) for review and comment. A public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall consider such review and comment in the development of its final application for either new or renewed funding under this title.

(4)(A) In any case where a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation determines that nonelderly handicapped individuals are included among the eligible project residents to be served by the congregate services program, the public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall consult with the appropriate local agency, if any, as designated by applicable State law with having responsibility for the development, provision, or identification of social services to permanently disabled adult individuals. Such consultation shall be for the purpose of determining the means of providing services under paragraph (1).

(B) Such public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall also, prior to the submission of an application for either new or renewed funding under this title, present a draft application to such appropriate local agency for review and comment. The public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall consider such review and comment in the development of its final application for either new or renewed funding under this title.

(5) No services funded under this title may duplicate services which are already affordable, accessible, and sufficiently available on a long-term basis to eligible project residents under programs administered by or receiving appropriations through any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Government of the United States, or any other public or private department, agency, or organization.

(b) Congregate services programs assisted under this title must include full meal service adequate to meet nutritional needs, and may also include housekeeping aid, personal assistance, and other services essential for maintaining independent living.

APPLICATION PROCEDURES

SEC. 406. (a) Whenever a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation applies for assistance under this title, the agency shall include a plan specifying the types and priorities of the basic services it proposes to provide during the term of contract authority. Such plan, including fee schedules established pursuant to section 410 of this title, shall be related to the needs and characteristics of the eligible residents of the projects where the services are to be provided; shall, to the maximum extent practicable, make provision for the changing needs and characteristics of project residents during the term of contract authority; and shall be determined after consultation with eligible project residents and with the professional assessment committee. If a project where such services are to be provided is a new, unoccupied project, then such consultation shall be carried out as a part of the occupancy interview process.

(b) Each application submitted by a public housing agency or nonprofit corporation for assistance under this title shall contain a statement affirming that—

(1) the services provided will not duplicate any services which are already affordable, accessible, and sufficiently available on a long-term basis to eligible project residents under programs administered by or receiving appropriations through any department, agency, or instrumentality of the Government of the United States, or any other public or private department, agency, or organization;

(2) the Area Agency on Aging (or, where no Area Agency on Aging exists, the appropriate State agency under the Older Americans Act of 1965) has been presented with a draft application, has been given a reasonable amount of time for the review of and comment upon such draft application, and that such review and comment has been considered in the development of the submitted application for assistance.

(3) if nonelderly handicapped individuals are included among the eligible project residents, the appropriate local agency, if any, as designated by applicable State law with having responsibility for the development, provision, or identification of social services to permanently disabled adult individuals, has been presented with a draft application, has been given a reasonable time for the review of and comment upon such draft application, and that such review and comment has been considered in the development of the submitted application assistance; and

(4) fees established for services provided under this title are reasonable and have been set in accord with the requirements of subsection (a) and section 407 with respect to consultation with eligible project residents, and with the requirements of section 410 of this title.

(c) Each application for assistance under this title shall have attached to it any comments received upon draft applications pursuant to sections 405(a)(3) and 405(a)(4)(B).

(d) Each application agency for assistance under this title shall list the names and professional qualifications of the members of the professional assessment committee.

PROGRAM REVIEW

SEC. 407. Each public housing agency and nonprofit corporation receiving assistance for congregate services programs under this title shall review the performance, appropriateness, and fee schedules of such services with eligible project residents, and with the professional assessment committee, within twelve months prior to the submission of an application for renewed funding under this title. The results of such review shall be included in such application, and shall be considered in the development of the application by the public housing agency or nonprofit corporation, and in its evaluation by the Secretary.

EVALUATION BY THE SECRETARY

SEC. 408. In evaluating applications for assistance under this title, the Secretary shall consider at least the following:

(1) the types and priorities of the basic services proposed to be provided, and the relationship of such proposal to the needs and characteristics of the eligible residents of the projects where the services are to be provided;

(2) how quickly services will be established following approval of the application;

(3) the degree to which local social services are adequate for the purpose of assisting eligible project residents to maintain independent living and avoid unnecessary institutionalization;

(4) the professional qualifications of the members of the professional assessment committee established pursuant to section 410(a)(1) of this title; and

(5) the reasonableness of fee schedules established for each congregate service pursuant to section 410 of this title.

REGULATIONS

SEC. 409. (a) The Secretary is authorized to promulgate regulations to carry out the provisions of this title. Such regulations shall provide for at least the following:

(1) Standards shall be established for the provision of services under this title. The Secretary shall consult with the Secretary for the Department of Health, Education, and Welfare, and with appropriate organizations representing the elderly and the disabled, in the development of such service standards.

(2)(A) Procedures for the review and evaluation of the performance of grantees under this title shall be established.

(B) Each public housing agency and nonprofit corporation assisted under this title shall submit to the Secretary an annual evaluation of the impact and effectiveness of its congregate services programs.

(C) The Secretary shall annually publish, and make available to Congress and the public, a report on and evaluation of the impact and effectiveness of congregate services programs assisted under this title. Such report and evaluation shall be based, in part, on the annual evaluations required to be submitted pursuant to subparagraph (B).

(3) Sound principles of accounting and other standards shall be prescribed in order to prevent any fraudulent or inappropriate use of funds under this title.

(4)(A) Appropriate deadlines for each fiscal year shall be established for the submission of applications for funding under this title. The Secretary shall notify any applicant for assistance under this title of acceptance or rejection of its application within ninety days of such submission deadline.

(B) Where such funding has been approved for the establishment of congregate services in existing housing projects, the Secretary may reallocate these funds if the services are not established within six months of the notification date of funding approval.

(C) Where such funding has been approved for the establishment of congregate services for housing projects under construction or approved for construction, the Secretary shall establish rules to assure that these services shall be in place at the start of the project's occupancy by tenants requiring such services for maintaining independent living.

(5) Procedures to assure timely payments to public housing agencies and nonprofit corporations for assisted congregate services programs shall be established, with provision made for advance funding sufficient to meet necessary start-up costs.

(6) Procedures shall be established for the recapture of unused contract authority, the utilization of unused reserve fund moneys from the prior fiscal year, and the reallocation of such unexpended funds to other feasible and effective applications for assistance under this title.

(7) A reserve fund, not to exceed 10 percentum of the funds appropriated in each fiscal year for the provision of services under this title, shall be established by the Secretary; and expenditures from such fund shall be made for the purpose of supplementing grants awarded to public housing agencies and nonprofit corporations under this title when, in the determination of the Secretary, such supplemental adjustments are required to maintain adequate levels of services of eligible project residents.

(8) Procedures shall be established to insure that the process of determining eligibility of individuals for services under this title shall accord such individuals fair treatment and due process and a right of appeal of such determination of eligibility, and shall also assure the confidentiality of personal and medical records.

(9) Procedures shall be established to insure that changes in the membership of the professional assessment committee are consistent with the requirements of section 404(7) of this title.

(b) No more than 1 per centum of the funds appropriated under this Act for any fiscal year may be used by public housing agencies and nonprofit corporations for evaluative purposes as required by this title.

ELIGIBILITY FOR SERVICES; FEE SCHEDULES

SEC. 410. (a)(1)(A) The identification of project residents eligible to participate in a congregate services program assisted under this title, and the designation of the services appropriate to their individual functional abilities and needs, shall be made by a professional assessment committee whose members shall be selected by the local public housing agency or nonprofit corporation.

(B) Any public housing agency or nonprofit corporation receiving assistance under this title shall notify the Secretary of any change in the membership of the professional assessment committee within thirty days of such change. Such notification shall list the names and professional qualifications of new members of the committee.

(2) Each public housing agency and nonprofit corporation shall establish fees for meal service and other appropriate services provided to eligible project residents. These fees shall be reasonable, may not exceed the cost of providing the service, and shall be calculated on a sliding scale related to income which permits the provision of services to such residents who cannot afford meal and service fees.

(b)(1) Other resident elderly and permanently disabled adult households may participate in a congregate meal service program assisted under this title if the local public housing agency or nonprofit corporation determines that the participation of these individuals will not adversely affect the cost-effectiveness or operation of the program.

(2) Where such service is provided, the local public housing agency or nonprofit corporation shall establish fees which are reasonable and which do not exceed the cost of providing the meal service.

EMPLOYMENT OPPORTUNITIES FOR RESIDENTS

SEC. 411. Each public housing agency and nonprofit corporation shall, to the maximum extent practicable, utilize elderly and permanently disabled adult persons who are residents of local housing projects, but who are not eligible project residents, to participate in providing the services assisted hereunder. Such persons shall be paid wages which shall not be lower than whichever is the highest of—

(1) the minimum wage wihch would be applicable to the employee under the Fair Labor Standards Act of 1938, if section 6(a)(1) of such Act applied to the resident and if he were not exempt under section 13 thereof;

(2) the State or local minimum wage for the most nearly comparable covered employment; or

(3) the prevailing rates of pay for persons employed in similar public occupations by the same employer.

Employment provided under this section shall be limited to a maximum of five hours per day and twenty hours per week for each participating resident.

RELATIONSHIP TO OTHER LAWS

SEC. 412. (a) No service provided to a resident of a project assisted under this title, except for wages paid under section 411, may be treated as income for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law.

(b) individuals receiving services assisted under this title shall be deemed to be residents of their own households, and not to be residents of a public institution, for the purpose of any other program or provision of State or Federal law.

AUTHORIZATION OF APPROPRIATIONS

SEC. 413. To carry out the provisions of this title there are authorized to be appropriated—

(1) for fiscal year 1979, not to exceed $20,000,000;

(2) for fiscal year 1980, not to exceed $25,000,000;

(3) for fiscal year 1981, not to exceed $35,000,000;

(4) for fiscal year 1982, not to exceed $40,000,000; and

(5) for fiscal year 1983, not to exceed $45,000,000.

"(f) The Secretary shall conduct a study of the location, numbers, quality, condition, and cost to occupants, of migrant farm labor housing units, and report the results of such study to the Congress within one year after the date of enactment of this subsection, together with recommendations for correcting any deficiencies discovered in location, numbers, or condition of the housing available for migrant farm laborers, and the extent to which existing authority has been utilized and the need for any new authority.".

FORECLOSURE

SEC. 503. Section 510(d) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by inserting before the semicolon at the end thereof a period and the following: "In no event may foreclosure or transfer action be initiated against any borrower unless such borrower has been given prior notice and consideration of the provisions of section 505 on the availability of the moratorium on payments under such section".

APPEALS PROCEDURES

SEC. 504. Section 510 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by redesignating paragraphs (g), (h), and (i) as paragraphs (h), (i), and (j), respectively, and by inserting after paragraph (f) a new paragraph (g) as follows:

"(g) issue rules and regulations protecting the rights of all persons and organizations applying for or receiving assistance under any of the sections of this title over which the Secretary has authority. Such rules and regulations shall provide that, whenever any person or organization has applied for assistance under this title and such assistance is denied for reasons other than the availability of funds, or whenever a decision has been made to terminate or reduce assistance under this title to any person or organization which is already receiving such assistance, such person or organization will be given—

"(1) adequate written notice of the reasons why assistance was denied, reduced, or terminated,

"(2) adequate written notice that such person or organization has a right to appeal the decision to a higher authority,

"(3) an opportunity to appeal any decision denying, reducing, or terminating such assistance to an impartial official who has the authority to reverse such a decision.

"(4) an opportunity to inspect records and data in the possession of the Secretary which pertain to the appeal, and to have the appeals official make his decision in writing, stating the reasons for the decision, and

"(5) an opportunity to have the decision of the appeals officer reviewed by the Secretary.

Such rules and regulations shall also provide that, whenever any person or organization has had assistance reduced or terminated and, as a result of an appeal or otherwise, it is subsequently determined that such assistance was erroneously or improperly withheld, such person or organization shall be entitled to receive all benefits and assistance that have been withheld as a result of the original decision to reduce or terminate such assistance;".

DOMESTIC FARM LABOR HOUSING

SEC. 505. Section 514 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following:

"(g) The Secretary may waive the interest rate limitation contained in subsection (a)(2) and the requirement of section 501(c)(3) in any case in which the Secretary determines such action is necessary or appropriate to carry out the purpose of this section, except that in no case may the interest rate on a loan insured under this section exceed the average interest rate on notes or other obligations issued under section 511 and having maturities comparable to such a loan.".

SPONSORS PRIORITY

SEC. 506. Section 516(e) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by adding at the end thereof the following: "The Secretary shall not give priority for funding under this section to any one of the groups listed in subsection (a) over any of the others so listed.".

HOMEOWNERSHIP ASSISTANCE

SEC. 507. (a) Section 517(j)(4) of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking out "(2)" following "section 521(a)".

(b) Section 521(a) of such Act is amended—

(1) by redesignating paragraph "(1)" as paragraph "(1)(A)" and by striking out all that follows "one-eighth of 1 per centum" and inserting in lieu thereof a period; and

(2) by adding at the end thereof the following new subparagraphs:

"(B) From the interest rate so determined the Secretary may provide the borrower with assistance in the form of credits so as to reduce the effective interest rate charged the borrower to a rate not less than 1 per centum per annum for such periods of time as the Secretary may determine for applicants described in subparagraph (A) if without such assistance such applicants could not afford the dwelling or make payments on the indebtedness of the rental or cooperative housing.

"(C) For persons of low income under section 502 or 517(a) who the Secretary determines are unable to afford a dwelling under subparagraph (B), the Secretary may provide additional assistance, for such periods of time as the Secretary may determine, which may be in an amount not to exceed the difference between the amount determined by the Secretary to be necessary to pay the principal indebtedness, interest, taxes, insurance, utilities, and maintenance, and 25 per centum of the income of such applicant, pursuant to amounts set forth in appropriation Acts.

"(D) For borrowers under section 502 or 517(a) who have received assistance under subparagraph (B) or (C) the Secretary may provide for the recapture of all or a portion of the assistance rendered upon the disposition or nonoccupancy of the property by the borrower. In providing for such recapture, the Secretary may make provisions to provide incentives for the borrower to maintain the property in a marketable condition, and the Secretary in appropriate cases may make provision for the borrower to receive from the sales proceeds a relocation allowance. Notwithstanding any provision of law to the contrary, any assistance whenever rendered shall constitute a debt secured by the security instruments given by the borrower to the Secretary to the extent that the Secretary may provide for recapture of such assistance.

"(E) Except for Federal or State laws relating to taxation, the assistance rendered to any borrower under subparagraphs (B) and (C) shall not be considered to be income or resources for any purpose under any Federal or State laws including, but not limited to, laws relating to welfare and public-assistance programs.

"(F) A loan subject to the interest rates and assistance provided under this paragraph (1) may be made only when the Secretary determines the needs of the applicant for necessary housing cannot be met with financial assistance from other sources, including assistance under sections 235 and 236 of the National Housing Act.

"(G) The interest rate on any loan under section 502 or 517(a) to a victim of a natural disaster shall not exceed the rate which would be applicable to such loans under section 502 without regard to this section.".

RURAL AREA

SEC. 508. (a) Section 520 of the Housing Act of 1949 is amended by striking out all that follows "in excess of 20,000" through "area, and (B)" and by inserting in lieu thereof "and".

(b) The amendment made by subsection (a) of this section shall apply to any application filed with the Secretary of Agriculture on or after January 1, 1978, for any assistance under title V of the Housing Act of 1949 or for technical services under such title.

REMOTE TITLE CLAIMS

SEC. 509. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture (hereinafter referred to in this section as "Secretary") shall make a detailed study of the problems associated with obtaining title insurance by persons in rural areas with respect to real property encumbered by remote claims or other remote encumbrances which prevent such persons from receiving the full benefit of the use of such property, including the benefit of assistance provided under this title. The Secretary shall, in making such study, consider and develop findings and conclusions with respect to—

(1) the extent of such problems as they pertain to the lawful rights of such persons;

(2) the location and amount of land affected by such problems;

(3) the nature, extent, and effectiveness of remedies to such problems presently available, or proposed, under State law;

(4) the potential impact (with respect to existing Federal, State, and local laws) of such remote claims and encumbrances and of any reasonable remedies determined necessary for resolving the problems created for persons by such remote claims or encumbrances;

(5) the liability and losses which might accrue to the Federal Government as a result of each of the remedies considered in the study conducted under this section; and

(6) other issues which the Secretary determines shall be considered, after consulting with the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development.

(b) The Secretary shall, not later than March 1, 1979, transmit to the Congress a report containing the findings and conclusions of the Secretary with respect to the study made under this section. Such report shall include—

(1) recommendations for Federal legislative actions necessary to implement reasonable remedies to the problems studied under this section; and

(2) recommendations for legislative actions which may be undertaken by State and local governments for the purposes of providing such remedies.

STUDY OF EMERGENCY POTABLE WATER AND SEWAGE PROGRAM

SEC. 510. (a) The Secretary of Agriculture shall—

(1) carry out a study to determine the approximate number of rural housing units without access to sanitary toilet facilities, potable water, or access to both sanitary toilet facilities and potable water, as defined under regulations established by the Secretary; and

(2) prepare a projection of the cost of implementing an emergency program to provide sanitary toilet facilities and potable water supplies for all such housing units over a two-year period.

(b) Not later than six months after the date of enactment of this Act, the Secretary of Agriculture shall report to the Congress the results of the study and projection under subsection (a).

TITLE VI—NEIGHBORHOOD REINVESTMENT CORPORATION

SHORT TITLE

SEC. 601. This title may be cited as the "Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation Act".

FINDINGS AND PURPOSE

SEC. 602. (a) The Congress finds and declares that—

(1) the neighborhood housing services demonstration of the urban reinvestment task force has proven its worth as a successful program to revitalize older urban neighorhoods by mobilizing public, private, and community resources at the neighborhood level; and

(2) the demand for neighborhood housing services programs in cities throughout the United States warrants the creation of a public corporation to institutionalize and expand the neighborhood housing services program and other programs of the present urban reinvestment task force.

(b) The purpose of this title is to establish a public corporation on which will continue the joint efforts of the Federal financial supervisory agencies and the Department of Housing and Urban Development to promote reinvestment in older neighborhoods by local financial institutions working cooperatively with community people and local government, and which will continue the nonbureaucratic approach of the Urban Reinvestment Task Force, relying largely on local initiative for the specific design of local programs.

ESTABLISHMENT OF CORPORATION

SEC. 603. (a) There is established a National Neighborhood Reinvestment Corporation (hereinafter referred to as the "corporation") which shall be a body corporate and shall possess the powers, and shall be subject to the direction and limitations specified herein.

(b) The corporation shall implement and expand the demonstration activities carried out by the urban reinvestment task force.

(c) The corporation shall maintain its principal office in the District of Columbia or at such other place the corporation may from time to time prescribe.

(d) The corporation, including its franchise, activities, assets, and income, shall be exempt from all taxation now or hereafter imposed by the United States by any territory, dependency, or possession thereof, or by any State, county, municipality, or local taxing authority; except that any real property of the corporation shall be subject to State territorial, county, municipal, or local taxation to the same extent according to its value as other real property is taxed.

BOARD OF DIRECTORS; ESTABLISHMENT

SEC. 604. (a) The corporation shall be under the direction of a board of directors made up of the following members:

(1) the Chairman of the Federal Home Loan Bank Board who shall be the chairman of the board of directors;

(2) the Secretary of Housing and Urban Development;

(3) a member of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System, to be designated by the Chairman of the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System;

(4) the Chairman of the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation;

(5) the Comptroller of the Currency; and

(6) the Administrator of the National Credit Union Administration.

(b) Each director of the corporation shall serve ex officio during the period he holds the office to which he is appointed by the President.

(c) The directors of the corporation, as full-time officers of the United States, shall serve without additional compensation but shall be reimbursed for travel, subsistence, and other necessary expenses incurred in the performance of their duties as directors of the corporation.

(d) The directors of the corporation shall adopt such bylaws, policies, and administrative provisions as are necessary to the functioning of the corporation.

(e) The presence of a majority of the board members shall constitute a quorum.

(f) The corporation shall be subject to the provisions of section 552 of title 5, United States Code.

(g) All meetings of the board of directors will be open to public observation unless a majority of the board of directors votes to close a specific meeting.

OFFICERS AND EMPLOYEES

SEC. 605. (a) The board shall have power to select, employ, and fix the compensation and benefits of such officers, employees, attorneys, and agents as shall be necessary for the performance of its duties under this title, without regard to the provisions of title 5, United States Code, governing appointments in the competitive service, classification, and General Schedule pay rates, except that no officer, employee, attorney, or agent of the corporation may be paid compensation at a rate in excess of the nighest rate provided for GS–18 of the General Schedule under section 5332 of title 5, United States Code.

(b) The directors of the corporation shall appoint an executive director, who shall serve as chief executive officer of the corporation.

(c) The executive director of the corporation, subject to general policies established by the board, may appoint and remove such employees of the corporation as he determines necessary to carry out the purposes of the corporation.

(d) No political test or political qualification shall be used in selecting, appointing, promoting, or taking any other personnel action with respect to any officer, agent, or employee of the corporation or of any recipient, or in selecting or monitoring any grantee, contractor, or person or entity receiving financial assistance under this title.

(e) Officers and employees of the corporation shall not be considered officers or employees of the United States, and the corporation shall not be considered a department, agency, or instrumentality of the Federal Government.

POWERS AND DUTIES

SEC. 606. (a) (1) The corporation shall continue the work of the urban reinvestment task force in establishing neighborhood housing services programs in neighborhoods throughout the United States, supervising their progress, and providing them with grants and technical assistance. For the purpose of this paragraph, a neighborhood housing services program may involve a partnership of neighborhood residents and representatives of local governmental and financial institutions, organized as a State-chartered non-profit corporation, working to bring about reinvestment in one or more neighborhoods through a program of systematic housing inspections, increased public investment, increased private lending, increased resident investment, and a revolving loan fund to make loans available at flexible rates and terms to homeowners not meeting private lending criteria.

(2) The corporation shall continue the work of the urban reinvestment task force in identifying, monitoring, evaluating, and providing grants and technical assistance to selected neighborhood preservation projects which show promise as mechanisms for reversing neighborhood decline and improving the quality of neighborhood life.

(3) The corporation shall experimentally replicate neighborhood preservation projects which have demonstrated success, and after creating reliable developmental processes, bring the new programs to neighborhoods throughout the United States which in the judgment of the corporation can benefit therefrom, by providing assistance in organizing programs, providing grants in partial support of program costs, and providing technical assistance to ongoing programs.

(4) The corporation shall continue the work of the urban reinvestment task force in supporting Neighborhood Housing Services of America, a nonprofit corporation established to provide services to local neighborhood housing services programs, with grants to expand its national loan purchase pool and may contract with it for services which it can perform more efficiently or effectively than the corporation.

(5) Notwithstanding any other provision of law, the corporation shall, in making and providing the foregoing grants and technical and other assistance, determine the reporting and management restrictions or requirements with which the recipients of such grants or other assistance must comply. In making such determinations, the corporation shall assure that recipients of grants and other assistance make available to the corporation such information as may be necessary to determine compliance with applicable Federal laws. Nothing in this subsection exempts the corporation from compliance with applicable Federal laws.

(b) To carry out the foregoing purposes and engage in the foregoing activities, the corporation is authorized—

(1) to adopt, alter, and use a corporate seal;

(2) to have succession until dissolved by Act of Congress;

(3) to make and perform contracts, agreements, and commitments;

(4) to sue and be sued, complain and defend, in any State, Federal, or other court;

(5) to determine its necessary expenditures and the manner in which the same shall be incurred, allowed, and paid, and appoint, employ, and fix and provide for the compensation of consultants, without regard to any other law, except as provided in section 608(d);

(6) to settle, adjust, and compromise, and with or without compensation or benefit to the corporation to release or waive in whole or in part, in advance or otherwise, any claim, demand, or right of, by, or against the corporation;

(7) to invest such funds of the corporation in such investments as the board of directors may prescribe;

(8) to acquire, take, hold, and own, and to deal with and dispose of any property; and

(9) to exercise all other powers that are necessary and proper to carry out the purposes of this title.

(c) (1) The corporation may contract with the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment of the Federal home loan banks for all staff, services, facilities, and equipment now or in the future furnished by the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment to the urban reinvestment task force, including receiving the services of the Director of the Office of Neighborhood Reinvestment as the corporation's executive director.

(2) The corporation shall have the power to award contracts and grants to—

(A) neighborhood housing services corporations and other nonprofit corporations engaged in neighborhood preservation activities; and

(B) local governmental bodies.

(3) The Secretary of Housing and Urban Development, the Federal Home Loan Bank Board and the Federal home loan banks, the Board of Governors of the Federal Reserve System and the Federal Reserve banks, the Federal Deposit Insurance Corporation, and the Comptroller of the Currency, the National Credit Union Administration or any other department, agency, or other instrumentality of the Federal Government are authorized to provide services and facilities, with or without reimbursement, necessary to achieve the objectives and to carry out the purposes of this title.

(d) (1) The corporation shall have no power to issue any shares of stocks, or to declare or pay any dividends.

(2) No part of the income or assets of the corporation shall inure to the benefit of any director, officer, or employee, except as reasonable compensation for services or reimbursement for expenses.

(3) The corporation may not contribute to or otherwise support any political party or candidate for elective public office.

REPORTS AND AUDITS

SEC. 607. (a) The corporation shall publish an annual report which shall be transmitted by the corporation to the President and the Congress.

(b) The accounts of the corporation shall be audited annually. Such audits shall be conducted in accordance with generally accepted auditing standards by independent certified public accountants who are certified by a regulatory authority of the jurisdiction in which the audit is undertaken.

(c) In addition to the annual audit, the financial transactions of the corporation for any fiscal year during which Federal funds are available to finance any portion of its operations may be audited by the General Accounting Office in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States.

(d) For any fiscal year during which Federal funds are available to finance any portion of the corporation's grants or contracts, the General Accounting Office, in accordance with such rules and regulations as may be prescribed by the Comptroller General of the United States, may audit the grantees or contractors of the corporation.
